Worst U.S. oil spill continues to spread along Alaskan coast

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — The worst oil spill in U.S. history has spread beyond 500 square miles in one of the nation's most productive fishing regions, officials said Wednesday, as crews all but abandoned hope of containment.

A former oil industry official charged that cutbacks had left operators of the Port of Valdez with ill-maintained booms, no barge to take on oil and virtually no properly trained people to respond to the disaster.

Three top administration officials met with representatives of the oil industry, state and federal agencies to assess the cleanup of 10.1 million gallons of crude oil spilled from the 987-foot tanker Exxon Valdez.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Bill Reilly, Coast Guard Commandant Paul Yost and Gov. Steve Cowper flew by helicopter over oil-stained beaches late Tuesday, but the federal officials declined to comment.

President Bush said the federal government may take over the cleanup if it is determined Exxon Company, USA is not doing enough.

In Washington, however, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater cited "good cooperation" in the effort to stop the oil slick, and suggested a federal takeover of the cleanup may not be necessary.

"It was a brief conversation, but Secretary Skinner reported good cooperation between the various authorities involved," Fitzwater said.

Frustrated fishermen mobilized their fleet to defend sensitive fisheries habitat as yet untouched by the growing oil slick.

The area affected by the spill exceeds 500 square miles in the once-pristine waters of Prince William Sound, according to an Alaska representative of the National Wildlife Federation.

Using absorbent oil booms provided by the state Department of Environmental Conservation, dozens of fishermen wearing black armbands tried to block the advance of oil into Main Bay, Eshamy Bay and Port San Juan.

"Frankly, we are past attempting to recover much oil," said the conservation department's Larry Dietrick. "Our primary efforts are now in the defense of very sensitive areas."

Exxon said Tuesday it would turn loose an army of workers to clean up rugged, remote beaches. Dietrick, however, said there was no sign of that happening, and the fishermen felt they couldn't wait any longer.

"Just about all we can do is to act in specific areas," Cowper said Wednesday on ABC's "Good Morning America." "For instance we're trying to save the hatchery areas."

Valdez Mayor John Devens appeared with Cowper and said he believes hatcheries are saveable.

"The thing that we're concerned about right now is whether or not the fish stocks are going to be affected," he said. "We think we've probably

Bill deals with community college financing

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — No one has resurrected the idea of including Washburn University in the state college system, but the issue of state financing for the school remains alive.

A House Appropriations subcommittee heard testimony Wednesday on the Washburn issue as part of its continued investigation into a bill that now primarily deals with community college financing.

The five-member subcommittee, headed by Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, is considering limiting community college operating budgets because the state would pay for a larger share of their budgets under the bill.

Under a five-year plan outlined in the bill, the state would replace out-district tuition for community colleges with state money. At the end of five years, the state would be responsible for 40 percent of the community colleges' operating budgets.

Out-district tuition is money paid by counties that send students to community colleges in other counties.

The subcommittee took no action. It is scheduled to report back to the full committee this week.

The bill previously included a provision that would have brought Washburn into the State Board of Regents' system on July 1. The Senate deleted that provision last week. The Topeka university is the last municipal university in the nation.

Washburn President Robert Burns asked the subcommittee to amend the bill to allow a provision for state financing for his school. Currently, the bill lacks any reference to Washburn, he said.

"If we are not to be a regents institution, we must examine the ways in which the state relates to other sorts of institutions of higher education," he said.

Burns said his plan could be implemented without exceeding Gov. Mike Hayden's recommendation for spending about $2.5 million in general state funds for the school. Hayden made the recommendation as part of his proposal that Washburn become part of the regents' system. A proposal which failed to gain approval last week.

Burns said his proposal also would not take Washburn out from under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Education.

He asked that Washburn's budget increases be linked to those of the community colleges. He proposed that the state either finance a portion of the school's budget through grants or tie Washburn and the community colleges together.

The plan would end reliance on credit hours as the sole determination for state financing, Burns said.

The Washburn president also asked that the school's full-time students be allowed to participate in the state's scholarship program.

He also asked for an increase in the property tax levy Topeka residents pay to the school, from 2.25 mills to 3.5 mills. The school would use the additional money for construction and maintenance for the district. A mill equals $1 in taxation to be paid for every $1,000 of assessed property valuation.

Senate passes bill for stiffer penalties

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Wednesday passed, 40-0, a bill that would allow judges to hand down stiffer sentences to people who are convicted of accidentally killing someone while driving drunk.

The measure was approved despite concerns among some senators that the bill could worsen the state's prison overcrowding problem.

"This issue, and the message it sends to the public about drunk driving, was important, and prison overcrowding should be relegated," said Sen. Jerry Moran, R-Hays, who carried the bill which went to Gov. Mike Hayden for his signature.

Presently, aggravated motor vehicle homicide is a Class E felony, and a judge can place a person convicted of it on probation or sentence them to up to 5 years in prison. The bill would make it a Class D felony, which carries a maximum sentence of 10 years.

The enhanced sentence pertains only to those convicted of killing another person while driving while under the influence of alcohol or drugs. Aggravated motor vehicle homicide while driving recklesssly or fleeing or eluding a police officer would remain a Class E felony.

Moran said he did not know how much the bill would cost or how many people would be sentenced under the measure.

The bill was one of 20 the Senate passed Wednesday.

The Johnson County delegation was divided over a bill the Senate passed, 33-5, to allow

Miller: Ticket prices to increase

By Kendra Gensemer
Government Editor

K-Staters will not have to pay an athletic fee next year, but football and basketball ticket prices will increase and may possibly be combined.

Athletic Director Steve Miller announced Wednesday that President Jon Wefald and Vice President for Institutional Advancement Robert S. Krause support Miller in his decision to abide by the results of the student referendum and Student Senate vote, and not take the issue to the Board of Regents.

"There definitely will be a ticket price increase of some kind, and there is the possibility that we will couple basketball and football season tickets," Miller said.

The proposed athletic fee failed Tuesday to reach the two-thirds majority approval for passage by both the student body and Student Senate.

The fee would have generated about $460,000 for the KSU Athletic Department through a $15 per semester full-time fee and $7.50 per semester part-time fee.

The issue will not be presented to the Kansas Board of Regents for approval, Miller said, although according to Ray Hauke, regents director of planning and budget, the board could bring the issue up on its own.

"Ususally the board, in instances of special student fees, responds to what is recommended by the administration," Hauke said.

As far as he is aware, the regents have no intention of bringing the issue up, Hauke said.

Although Krause told Student Senate Tuesday night that it needed to "keep the issue alive," he said it became clear in the Wednesday morning meeting with Miller that that would be "counterproductive."

"We need to move ahead with recapturing the (lost fee) revenue and get on with our plan," he said.

The proposed fee was part of a five-year plan to increase revenue for the athletic department. The plan also included increased ticket sale revenues, increased state funding, increased alumni contributions and increased guarantees from the Big Eight Conference.

Regent Charles Hostetler, a K-State alumnus, said he would not speak as a regent, but as an alumnus he believes "the KSU Athletic Department needs financial help if we're going to compete in the Big Eight."

Hostetler said he is disappointed that the student body and Student Senate did not vote to institute the fee.

"I think the two-thirds (majority requirement) of the student body is unfair because it counts a negative ballot more than a positive ballot," Hostetler said.

Krause also questioned the reality of the two-thirds majority requirement because it has historically not been reached.

Fee referendum's results summarized by colleges

By Kendra Gensemer
Government Editor

The official results of the Student Governing Association athletic fee referendum, enrollment figures from the Office of the Registrar, and Student Senate roll-call vote records were used to tabulate the following summary of results broken down by college.

Because less than one-third of the student body voted, the proposed athletic fee did not obtain the needed two-thirds majority vote required to pass.

Of 4,527 students voting, the total vote was 55 percent in favor and 45 percent opposed.

The percentage of students voting in each college, the percent of yes and no votes and the Senate votes of each student senator are given.

Japanese pilot kills himself

TOKYO — A pilot for a Japanese airline committed suicide Wednesday, four days after he was involved in a minor landing accident with his plane, police said.

Itsuji Shimohira of Japan Air System, a domestic airline, hanged himself as a way of taking responsibility for the accident, said a police official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shimohira's Japanese-made YS-11 plane scraped its tail on the runway while landing at Osaka Airport on Saturday, the official said. None of the 53 passengers and four crew members was injured.

Fergie prefers old names

WARRINGTON, England — The Duchess of York said Wednesday she named her baby daughter Beatrice because she likes old-fashioned names — but she doesn't mind her own, untraditional nickname.

"It is nice to be old-fashioned and keep to the old ways," she said to elderly hospital patients in Warrington, northwest England.

The duchess, the former Sarah Ferguson, also told the patients: "You can call me Fergie." Her husband, Prince Andrew, is said to dislike the nickname.

Princess Beatrice, born Aug. 8, is Sarah's first child and Queen Elizabeth II's fifth grandchild.

Prisoners attempt escape

SANTA CATARINA PINULA, Guatemala — About 100 non-rebelling inmates tried to bolt from a besieged prison farm on Wednesday, and one said the sufferings they were enduring inside forced their desperation escape attempt.

Authorities early Wednesday cut off water and power to rebel inmates holed up with hundreds of friends and relatives in a bid to end the 4-day-old mutiny.

The escaping inmates crawled and ran toward the front part of the prison and were shot at by guards before being taken into custody. No one was injured.

Thirty-two were put on a bus to be taken to another prison, and 70 more were waiting at the prison's front gates to be transferred to other sites.

The first thing that would-be escapee Victor Hugo Trujillo asked for was water.

Speaking from the window of a bus that was to take him to another prison, Trujillo told The Associated Press he had not eaten for three days and had not had water since Tuesday afternoon.

"We suffered so much," Trujillo said. "We had no other choice but try to escape."

Watergate in Nixon library

YORBA LINDA, Calif. — Watergate won't be erased from the archives of the Richard M. Nixon Library, the library's executive director promises.

"It won't be a museum on Watergate, but we're not going to shy away from it, either. It's part of what interests people about Nixon," Hugh Hewitt said Tuesday.

Hewitt, a former Nixon assistant and official in the Reagan administration, is trying to raise $25 million for the presidential library, the first built entirely with private donations.

It is expected to open in the spring or summer of 1990 in this community 30 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

"My most difficult role will be persuading those who don't want to understand the Nixon legacy," he said. "He started the Environmental Protection Agency, he launched the war on cancer, concluded the Vietnam War, opened China and strengthened NATO. He was the central historical figure of the post-World War II era."

Schools called 'war zones'

DETROIT — Poor inner-city schools are "war zones" in which little works but police action, says Joe Clark, who brandished a baseball bat to keep students in line at his Eastside High School in New Jersey.

Clark, principal at the school in Paterson, was carrying the trademark bat when he appeared Tuesday for a speech at Wayne State University.

"A person would have to be crazy" to become Detroit's next public school superintendent, Clark said. Superintendent Arthur Jefferson has announced his retirement in June from the nation's sixth-largest public school system.

Clark, portrayed in the hit feature film "Lean On Me," is on sabbatical while officials investigate an incident last month, in which male strippers performed for a student assembly.

Clark said he thrives on controversy.

"I'm just like a tea bag," he said. "You can tell how strong a person is when you put him in hot water."

Woman killed in explosion

TOPEKA — An early-morning explosion Wednesday at a home where utility crews had checked for natural gas leaks twice on Tuesday killed one person and left another critically injured.

The victim was identified as Serella Ellis, 75.

Her son, Hayward Ellis, 55, was taken to the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan. Officials there said he was in critical condition with third-degree burns over 55 percent of his body.

His wife, Janet, was released from a Topeka hospital after treatment.

Investigators for the Topeka Fire Department said the explosion was triggered by a gas leak. A KPL Gas Service spokesman said crews had been called to the area in southeast Topeka twice on Tuesday after a neighbor smelled natural gas.

Authorities said the explosion took place about 4 a.m.

Gary Wallace of KPL Gas Service said someone from the house next to the one that exploded had reported smelling natural gas Tuesday afternoon, and crews were sent to the scene about 5:30 p.m.

Wallace said they found a leak in the meter on the house that exploded, and a thread leak on the pipe connected to the meter. They repaired both leaks and also ran tests on the piping inside the house, finding no further leaks, Wallace said.

Wallace said that utility crews were called back at 8:15 p.m., again by the neighbor who still reported smelling gas. He said the crews ran more tests at both houses and found nothing out of the ordinary.

Woman found nude, stabbed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A young woman whose nude body was found in her home Tuesday was stabbed two dozen times and her throat was slashed, authorities said.

Investigators said Kelli Loran, 21, may have been stabbed while she was tied to a table in her living room. Her 2-year-old child was in the house but was not harmed.

"It was a gruesome and brutal killing," Clay County Prosecutor Michael Reardon said Wednesday. "She put up a terrific struggle."

Reardon said the apparent murder weapon, a knife with a 4-inch blade, was embedded in her chest so far that little of the handle was visible. He said a foot print on the body near the knife handle "suggested the knife had been forced into her body." Reardon said authorities also found blood on the front door of the house.

An autopsy showed Loran was stabbed in the chest, back and side and died from a combination of the wounds. Her body was found between a coffee table and couch, and authorities said ropes holding her on the table apparently had been cut away.

Her body was found when her husband, Robert Loran, returned home from his all-night job at a supermarket, authorities said.

Student loan defaults continue to increase; Congress seeks plan

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

Student loan default rates are increasing at K-State and across the nation, and the U.S. Department of Education is looking for a plan of action to prevent it.

Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance, said there are several reasons for the increases.

"There are more loans out there all the time. The increase is in the percent of dollars in default and not the percent of individuals in default," he said. "As the loan volume increases, the loan default rate tends to increase also because we are talking about more money when someone does default."

Viterna said the percentages of the loan default rates at K-State were 14.4 percent fall 1988. That number has increased several percentage points in the last year and a half.

"For a four-year public institution, that is fairly good," Viterna said.

He said the separate default rate for veterinary medicine students is 4.1 percent.

Government regulations require that if a school reaches a 20 percent default rate, the financial aid office must be reviewed, Viterna said.

Congress has already proposed a plan to reduce the number of defaults, he said.

"(The plan) gave the people who wanted to respond a chance to give their input," Viterna said. "It was a chance for all of the members of the financial community to give a response."

The financial community included financial offices, lenders, secondary markets, billing agencies and guaranteed agencies, which guarantee the lender that the borrower will be fined if loan is not repaid, he said.

Viterna made several recommendations in a letter he wrote to the Department of Education in November. One recommendation is for better communication between the financial aid office and the borrower.

"The student would be informed of who holds the loan, the current outstanding balance, minimum monthly repayments at current indebtedness and where payments will be made," he said.

Viterna also recommended another category be added for students in default but who are currently repaying their loans.

"This would help because defaulted loan dollars that were eventually collected would no longer be part of the default rate," Viterna said. "The higher default rates are in the prepatory, shorter term schools (vocational technical and cosmetology schools), but in many cases they are enrolling the higher risk students."

Don Siemsen, assistant director of Manhattan Area Vocational Technical School, said changes are needed.

"At our school starting this year, those people applying for next year must come in (to the financial aid office) this semester," he said. "I talk to them for an hour or more and really put the monkey on their back. I try to stress that they have had their chance and not to ruin it for someone else."

The current default rate at the Manhattan Vo-Tech is 28 percent.

Siemsen said the school is considered a higher risk institution for loans because the students attending are in the lower income and grade range.

"I think that better communication with the students will help this situation," Siemsen said.

Board selects publications' editors

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

The Board of Student Publication has named the 1989 summer Collegian editor and advertising manager, and the 1990 Royal Purple editor.

Catherine Doud, junior in journalism and mass communication, will be summer Collegian editor and Denise Lambert, senior in journalism and mass communication, will be the summer advertising manager.

Susan Hilt, sophomore in journalism and mass communication, has been named Royal Purple editor for next year.

Dave Adams, director of Student Publication, said the competition for the Royal Purple editor was particularly good.

"We had two people who were editors of excellent high school yearbooks," he said. "They both were vey good people and it was a difficult choice."

Adams said the people chosen for summer Collegian editor and advertising manager are also "excellent people who will do a very good job."

"I expect a smooth semester," Doud said. "Denise and I have worked together before when I was Collegian ad manager last semester. We know what to expect from each other and will help each other out because of this previous experience."

Doud said she sees her experience as Collegian ad manager as an advantage in being able to work with one of the biggest problems between the two departments — communication.

"I know working on both sides of the Collegian will help Cathy with the overall operations," said Lambert. "The experience will help avoid clashes between the departments."

Doud, the editorial editor for the Collegian, said, "Most people would see my advertising background as a disadvantage for the position of editor, but I do not. I've gotten all my experience on the job, either here at K-State or at home (Minneapolis, Kan.) with my local paper.

Doud said her goal for the summer is to increase the campus coverage.

"By having only two issues a week, we will have more time to work with researching big stories and do more in-depth news," she said.

Lambert said her aim for the advertising staff this summer is professionalism.

"The Collegian is not taken as seriously by Manhattan and the campus community because people don't see us as professionals," she said. "(The Collegian) is not doing a bad job in presenting itself, but the goal is to improve our image and increase our sales locally."

Hilt said she is excited about the opportunity of being Royal Purple Editor.

"Working as editor is one thing you keep in the back of your mind as a freshman working on the staff," she said. "It is a big responsibility."

Pravda: Results hurt Gorbachev's reforms

MOSCOW — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Wednesday that Soviet voters struck a blow for reform in legislative elections, which many official candidates lost, and three dates were announced for runoff contests.

The newspaper said Sunday's election, the first in 70 years to give voters a choice, was a vote for the new policies of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The official news agency Tass said candidates in 275 districts failed to win the majority needed for a seat in the new 2,250-member Congress of People's Deputies.

Myths surround reality of battered women

Commentary

Barbara Baker

Collegian Columnist

Last week, in honor of Women's History Month, I acknowledged several great women as well as women in general. But as March comes to a close and Women's History Month ends, it is also important to bring awareness to one of the greatest social ills that women face.

That social ill is violence. Nothing affects a woman or her well-being more than being psychologically and physically abused by someone she loves and trusts.

With the assistance of a book titled, "The Battered Woman," by psychologist Lenore E. Walker, I would like to call attention to and refute the myths associated with the battered woman.

■ Myth: The battered woman is only a small percentage of the population.

Battering against women is a seriously under-reported crime. Usually battering occurs at night, in a home, without witnesses. The battering incidents are also buried in police reports of domestic disturbance calls, hospital emergency room records, social service reports, and private counselors' and psychologists' records.

■ Myth: Battered women are masochistic. Women deserve to be beaten and like to be beaten. The pleasure is close to being erotic.

But how could it be erotic to be thrown across a table or against a wall, or to have a fist slammed into your eye?

This myth also promotes the notion that the woman is to blame for the abuse, while the man's violent behavior is condoned and perpetuated.

■ Myth: Battered women are crazy.

Once again, as with the masochistic myth, battered women are blamed for the abuse. But wouldn't anyone be depressed and paranoid if he or she lived in constant fear of being beaten and attacked?

■ Myth: Middle- and upper-class women do not get battered as violently or as frequently as lower-class women.

Middle- and upper-class women are less likely to make their abuse public because of social embarrassment and harm to their husbands' careers. They are also less likely to be believed because of their husbands' social status.

■ Myth: Minority women are battered more than white women.

All women, regardless of race, can be and are battered equally. Abuse is a commonality that all groups of women share.

■ Myth: Battered women are uneducated and have limited employment skills.

Battered women can be professors, physicians, lawyers and nurses. Many give up their careers in the hope of changing their husbands' abusive behaviors. Most likely, their self-esteem also rests on being good wives and homemakers rather than successful career professionals.

■ Myth: The batterer is violent in every aspect of the relationship.

There have been times when the batterer was not abusive. This is what keeps the victim with him in many cases. She remembers the good times, the loving times, and hopes they will go back to those times.

■ Myth: Drinking causes battering behavior.

Alcohol is usually blamed for abusive behavior. But in Walker's research of battering relationships, she found that the batterer will abuse with or without alcohol. Alcohol may be a component, but is not always a precipitating factor.

■ Myth: The battering will stop "after we get married."

With marriage, the batterer is inclined to become more jealous and possessive, causing the abuse to increase.

■ Myth: Battered women are free to leave an abusive relationship.

We've all heard the questions. Why does she stay with him? How could she have married a man who abused her while they were dating?

Our society indoctrinates women with the belief that they are the sustainers of relationships, and that love and marriage should be their only true fulfillment.

A woman is inclined to believe that if she acts or behaves in a certain way, she can change him, and sustain a loving relationship again. Maybe that's why she marries him despite the premarital abuse.

It is also important to remember that women make less money than men in the career world. With a divorce, women usually get the children, and there is no sure guarantee of child support. Maybe that's why they stay with the men, despite the beatings.

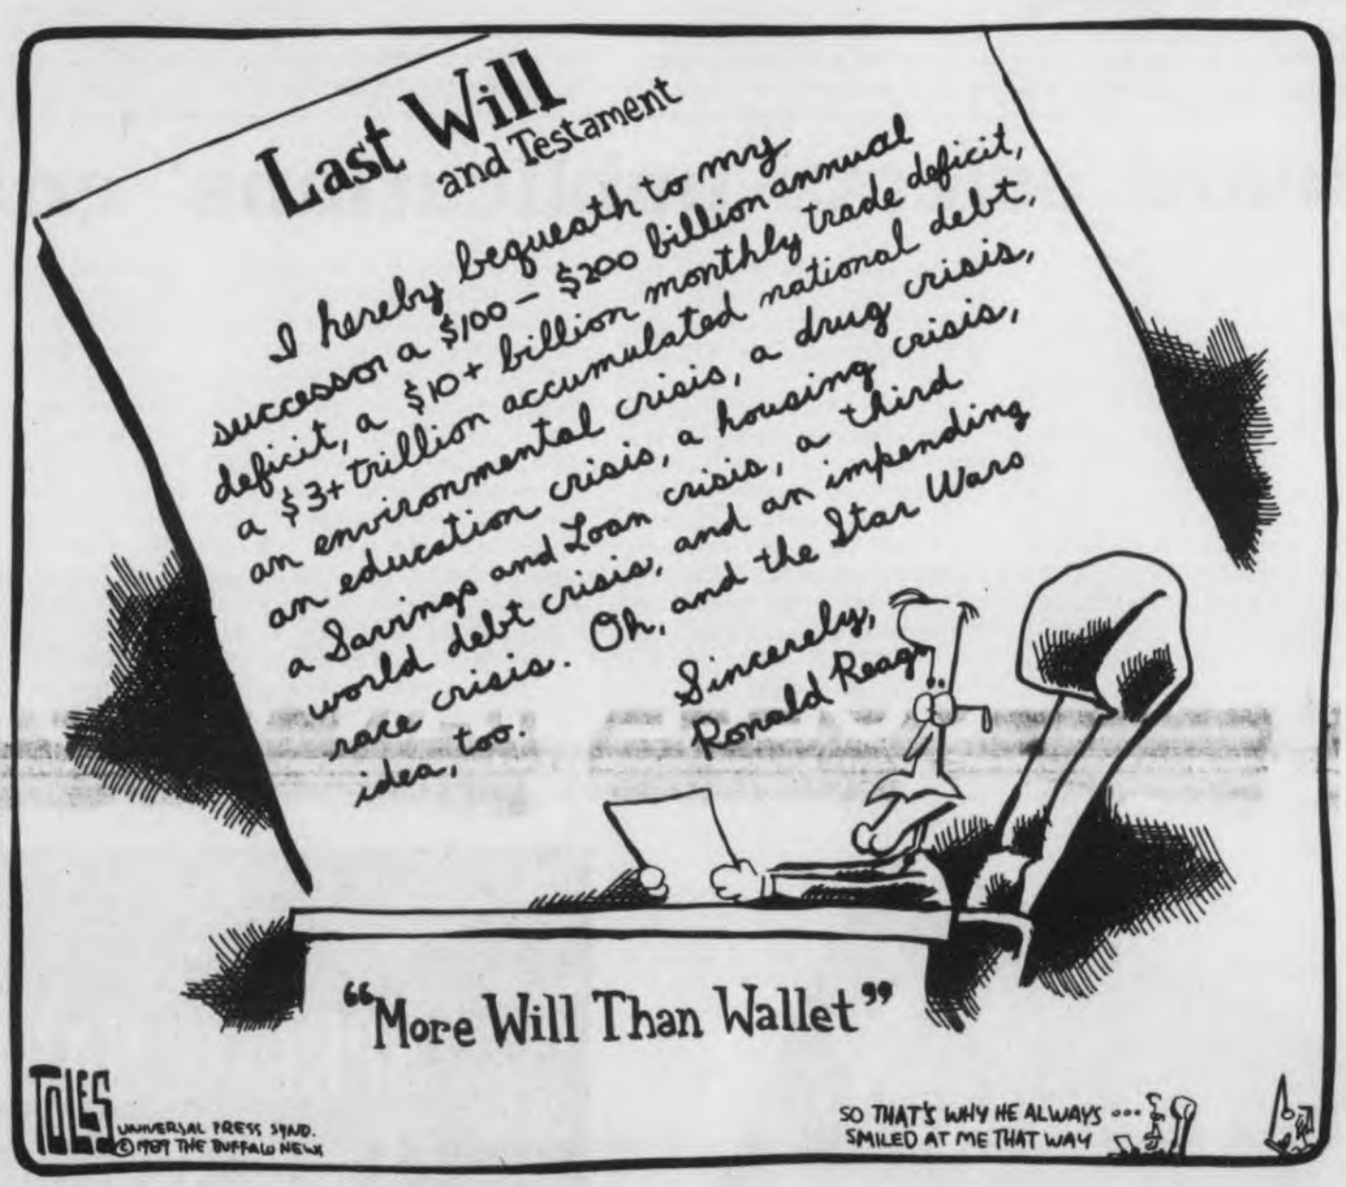
However, there is hope for the battered woman and the male abuser. With the right intervention and counseling, a woman can become free of abusive victimization.

And the male batterer, with intervention and counseling, can learn to be assertive rather than aggressive, to negotiate rather than use force, and realize that sensitivity is much more attractive in a man than society's prescribed male definition of dominating, macho behavior.

Farrell gets bypassed in setting of priorites

Farrell Library is underfunded, it lacks computing services and furniture, and no immediate solution is looming on the horizon. Take a look at the libraries at any other Big Eight or peer intitution, and as in everything else, you'll see K-State ranking at the bottom.

Before Student Senate's first meeting this semester, it listed various issues as being of utmost priority. These included the condition of Lafene Student Health Center, a possible student athletic fee, allocations of student monies, divestment of student monies being invested in South Africa, and lastly, the funding of Farrell.



A health fee to support Lafene was passed in Senate, students failed to muster enough support for an athletic fee, allocations have already begun and a bill recommending University divestment from South Africa has had its first reading. What about Farrell?

Students Helping Enhance Library Funds was formed, with Senate's support, to lobby the Kansas Legislature on behalf of the library. However, students have yet to hear of any progress made by SHELF.

Spurs sophomore honorary is also becoming involved, by sponsoring a fundraiser asking for $5 contributions and offering free tuition next semester for the winner of a drawing to be conducted Saturday.

But SHELF and Spurs cannot solve the underfunding problem of the library by themselves, nor should they have to. Only active student input and participation can help get Farrell back on its feet. Students need to ask themselves how important a quality library is to this campus, and furthermore, how great a role students are willing to play in its renovation and upkeep.

It's time for students to set priorities for themselves and the University and then act accordingly.

Other Perspectives

A proposal to change the California civil code would allow legal marriages between homosexuals. The current code defines marriage as a "personal relation arising out of a civil contract between a man and a woman." The proposed change would read "between two people," which is similar to the code California employed before 1977.

The change primarily would be a legal benefit for homosexual couples. They would be eligible for tax exemptions and health plans. And although homosexuals now can adopt children, the new proposal would allow them to do so as a couple. It would also give them rights often reserved only for family members, such as visitation in hospital intensive-care units.

In these days of AIDS, when monogamy and safe sex are rightly encouraged among both homosexuals and heterosexuals, it is hypocritical to tell a homosexual couple wishing to commit to each other that they cannot do so legally.

Letters

Attack emotional

Editor,

This letter is in response to Brendom Rehm's letter attacking Barbara Baker's column on selective admissions.

I want to suggest that Rehm is using the same unsubstantiated emotional tactics that he accused Baker of using.

First, he says Baker never adequately discusses whether there are minimum standards of education necessary for university studies. Then he assures Baker that K-State's reputation suffers from a poor academic reputation rather than from charges of elitism.

Rehm's opinions are based on emotional values that may or may not be sustained. If Rehm is interpreting Baker's discussion as inadequate, and assuring Baker of his opinion, then that's emotional and very personal on Rehm's part.

He then goes on to say that Baker argues that service as a residence hall adviser or student senator is a better priority than hard studying. Was that Baker's quoted meaning or is that his interpreted meaning of her words?

In addition, he says because there are limited numbers of student senator and residence hall adviser positions, it is elitism. There may be a limited number of positions, but any student is free to apply or run for these positions. That is not elitism.

Despite what he feels, greek houses, sports and Aggieville are a part of K-State's culture. Rehm asked the question himself. Is the K-State student engulfed by the college culture? According to Rehm's definition of culture, the answer is yes.

By personally attacking her journalism style, Rehm was definitely relying on emotional tactics. Give the reader concrete proof. Talk about selective admissions or how K-State does not properly train its journalists. That would be better than to resort to cheap personal attacks.

Finally, Rehm ends by claiming that the Collegian hires its editorial positions according to fashionability. Where did this claim come from? His whole letter focuses on attacking Baker's personal stand on selective admission, then suddenly, without due support, he makes a claim against the Collegian.

That brings me to another point. Rehm said nothing about selective admissions or what his point was about it. Instead, it focused on attacking Baker. Could it be that he was retaliating against her for a past column?

I think it is also important to ask Rehm a question. If you think you are such a brilliant graduate student, then why are you here at K-State? You did say it has a very poor academic reputation. Find a college with a selective admissions policy.

News questionable

Editor,

I applaud Richard Broadfoot's recent honor, and Rich, I have a "Salad" on my office door, so I guess you are legitimate. But I do question the legitimacy of the feature concerning Broadfoot that appeared with a big photo on the cover of the March 23 Collegian. I believe that the feature was not of front cover status and demonstrates a questionable ethical choice by the Collegian.

I have noticed other awards articles appear in the Collegian on any page but the cover. At worst, the Broadfoot feature's cover status smacks of journalistic self-congratulation over a colleague's success. This is a congratulation that non-journalism awards seldom receive in the form of a cover feature.

At best, it reflects questionable news sense to place such a story on the cover, when, for example, the Senate rejection of the Washburn University proposal ran on page 3.

This is not about a cover article, but more about a question of journalistic ethics that go into the everyday choice of cover articles.

All decisions made by a newspaper have to be made with potentially conflicting loyalties in mind. And in this case, even though the situation hardly demands it, it would seem that the cover article responded to loyalty of the newspaper staff, as opposed to a loyalty to the reader to provide the news appropriate for the front page.

The Collegian is a learning tool. Please learn from this. And until he wins the Pulitzer, I hope to read many more stories about the awards of Broadfoot, I just hope I don't see them on the front page.

Apathy abounds

Editor,

All of my life I have loved K-State, and I was damn proud of it. Today I am ashamed to be associated with 72 percent of the University.

I had thought that an issue as debated and as important as the athletic fee would bring out at least 33 percent of the student body.

I voted for the athletic fee, and naturally wish it would have passed, but I respect the people who voted "no" more than those who didn't vote. Lots of people are going to complain now: "We need more money for athletics," or "I wish we could recruit a 7-foot-tall center," etc., and most of these complaints will come from people who didn't have time to vote.

At this university and in this country, we have been given the right to vote, but few here seem to care. We close our eyes and blindly accept what happens as fate. A fate many people abhor.

I don't care if you voted yes or no on the athletic fee, or if you are a Republican, Democrat or Communist, just please vote. Show people that we still give a damn about what happens in our lives here at K-State.

Candidate for dean interviewed

Professor emphasizes quality not quantity

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

The fundamental purpose of architecture and design education must be the preparation of graduates for active professional practice, said Virgil Carter, head of the School of Architecture at Oklahoma State University.

Carter was the sixth and final candidate being condsidered for the position of dean of the College of Architecture and Design. Carter met with about 30 faculty and students from the college in the Union Wednesday.

"I've begun to see a strong and sound program with some very impressive enrichment components with diverse and experienced faculty," Carter said.

He said with growing support from the University administration, the future of the college in terms of strength and opportunity are impressive.

"I'm interested only in quality and not in quantity, my goal is to be a part of the best design educational program ... not the biggest," Carter said. "I try to seek excellence in what I do and those with whom I associate."

He said design education is and should remain diverse and responsive to its region, but it should also be focused by identifying priority areas for national purposes in a realistisic time frame.

"I view architecture and design as necessarily interconnected ... with not only the design of a building in its spaces but also the relationship of one building to another, and the interaction between the built environment and the social environment," Carter said.

One of the most powerful teaching tools in a university setting is the studio tradition, which Carter said should be an important part of the architecture and design education process.

"Design education and practice have valuable and essential contributions to the university and the society," Carter said.

Preparation to enter a specific field of professionial practice is a central mission of design education, but it is not a mission that can be adequately fulfilled without the critical attention to the important connections with other disciplines and fields, Carter said.

"Our future success as educators and practitioners may be related to several not sufficiently recognized issues dealing with interdisciplinary connections," Carter said.

Carter earned a bachelor of architecture degree from Oklahoma State University and a master's degree from the University of Illinois.

Bill Miller, professor of architecture and a member of the dean search committee, said Carter "has been very active in the American Institute of Architects."

Miller said Carter has experience in administration in the academic setting and in the professional setting.

Committee endorses prison plans

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A legislative committee endorsed a plan Wednesday to build a $47.9 million prison, shortly before officials from a small north-central Kansas community unveiled their plans to build a privately run institution.

The Joint Committee on State Building Construction recommended that the state build a 512-bed prison, leaving open the option of expanding it by another 256 beds later. The committee also proposed hiring a consultant to study the needs of mentally ill inmates and ways to improve Department of Corrections services for them.

The committee has mulled over various proposals for prison expansion projects for the past week. Gov. Mike Hayden proposed building a $58.7 million, 768-bed prison and $14.5 million, 256-bed expansion of housing for mentally ill inmates at Larned State Hospital.

"It's time we made a decision to get the process started," said Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina.

Officials from the city and county of Washington announced that they have plans to build a 750-bed prison so they can lease space to the Department of Corrections, as well as to other states and counties. They estimate it would cost about $45 million.

The county and the city, which has about 1,500 residents and is located about 125 miles northwest of Topeka, has hired a Topeka company, The Westridge Group, to implement its plan. The firm's president is former Corrections Secretary Dick Mills. Another former corrections secretary, Michael Barbara, provides consulting services for the company.

The company also is working on plans for a 350-bed "treatment center" for mentally ill inmates, or inmates in need of counseling.

"We do want to make it clear this is not a competition with the Department of Corrections for inmates," said Richard Mills, the son of the former corrections secretary and Westridge's vice president.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers ordered the state on Feb. 15 to eliminate all prison overcrowding by July 1, 1991, and to improve conditions at several prisons. He also ordered the Department of Corrections to give him a plan by Friday to improve services for mentally ill inmates.

Corrections Secretary Roger Endell has insisted that Hayden's plan is a necessary part of any plan to reduce overcrowding. He expressed frustration Wednesday with questions about department projections and figures.

"I think the bottom line is that they don't want to spend a dime more than they have to on prison business," Endell said. "I don't like it when people turn political posturing into attacks on a very professional department. For someone to doubt the credibility of that work is a low blow."

He clearly was not pleased with the committee's decision. He called it "really not very helpful."

"It's becoming very frustrating," he said. "We submitted a solid plan."

Rep. David Heinemann, R-Garden City, proposed the scaled-back version of Hayden's plan. He said it was was designed in part to raise the debate above questions about the department's credibility.

Student arrested; search yields tools, stereo equipment

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

A K-State student was arrested Tuesday night for possession of stolen car stereo equipment and tools used for auto burglary and charged with four counts of felony.

Derrick E. Tiers, freshman in business administration, was arrested by a Riley County Police officer after the stolen items were found in his car during a police search. The Riley County Police Department issued a search warrant for the vehicle after investigations led police to believe Tiers was involved in recent auto thefts on campus and in the surrounding vicinity, said Lt. Rodney Jager.

Jager said "numerous pieces of stereo equipment" and hand-held tools, gloves and other items used in auto burglaries were in the car. A tool commonly known as a "slim jim," which is used to unlock car doors, was also found.

According to police reports, Tiers was arrested at 7:26 p.m. and released on $4,000 bond shortly after 10 p.m.

The department is still processing the stolen equipment, and the amount of equipment is unknown, Jager said. Police are investigating other leads and suspects believed to be involved in related auto burglaries.

"We feel there is a possibility this is related to similar instances in the area," Jager said. "This case is still active.

"We're looking into other possible charges against (Tiers) and other individuals."

Lt. James Tubach, K-State investigator, said the stolen items were registered into the National Crime Information Center computer, which lists stolen items by serial numbers. One of the stereos recovered from Tier's vehicle was stolen on campus, according to the NCIC.

Tubach said the computer showed the stereo was reported stolen late January or early February of this year.

Campus police records show more than 20 auto burglaries haves occurred on campus this semester, many in the residence hall parking lots B-2 and B-3. More than $3,200 worth of stereo equipment and related items such as radar detectors have been stolen, and approximately $1,650 in damages has resulted from the burglaries.

In a February interview, K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said most of the burglaries involved locked cars, and entry was gained through windows or "punching the lock," a technique that destroys the locking mechanism.

Beckom said the campus auto burglaries are not as great of a problem "considering the amount of cars on campus."

"The ratio of thefts on campus is comparable to other areas such as large parking lots where lots of cars are parked," he said. "It's not that we don't see this as a problem, but it is no greater than in the past. Where a lot of cars are parked in a relatively small vicinity, there are going to be burglaries."

Money performs

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

Eddie Money showed to a fair-sized audience Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum that with loud music and fake smoke, he can at least try to make a decent show.

Coming on stage amidst the fading chords of AC/DC's "Highway to Hell," Money launched into "Two Tickets to Paradise," for the cheering crowd. For about the next hour, he performed a collection of his popular songs, throwing in only a few tunes that haven't been released.

Those who came not realizing how many hits Money has had recently were certainly shown that he is a sizeable force in pop music. He very ably worked the audience into a delighted mass with song after song from his last two albums.

One shocking aspect of the concert was how old Money and his band looked. The wrinkles that darkened his brow showed how long Money has been in the music business, and his band didn't look much younger.

The songs that received the best crowd response were "The Love in Your Eyes," "I Think I'm In Love," "Walk on Water" and "Shakin'," an old Money song that was played in the early days of MTV. He also introduced a new single from his current album, "Let Me In," which will probably hit the airwaves soon.

Review

The crowd was as well-behaved as a rock concert crowd could possibly have been. Not until the very end of the show did anyone even venture to the front of the stage — not that anyone could have got out of line.

Ample numbers of security personnel dominated the show to the extent that one could not even put his feet on the seats. Even smoking, a common sight at concerts, was hastily stopped by these sharp guardians.

The most daring venture by the crowd the entire show was the appearance of a liquor bottle given to Money from the crowd, which he drank from before returning it.

The attendance of the show could definitely have been better. With about 4,500 seats allocated for the crowd, only about half were actually used. For a coliseum that needs shows to establish itself, Money's act didn't appear to help the possibility of future acts coming to Manhattan.

Opening for Money was Lita Ford ... oops ... I mean Private Life, a heavy metal band with a female lead singer that sounded like Ford, only not as good. They played for about 30 minutes before bidding Manhattan farewell.

Despite the attempts by Money to pass himself off as a vibrant rock 'n' roll singer, he didn't get past the fact that he is edging over the hill.

Oscars offer surprises

'Rain Man' wins best picture

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — "Rain Man," the box-office smash about a conniving car salesman who learns to love his autistic brother, won the Oscar as best picture Wednesday night and brought top honors for actor Dustin Hoffman and director Barry Levinson. Jodie Foster, the victim of a gang rape in "The Accused," was named best actress.

"Rain Man" also brought an award to Ronald Bass and Barry Morrow for their original screenplay. Christopher Hampton's adaptation of his play "Dangerous Liaisons" won for best adaptation.

Geena Davis, the free-spirited dog trainer in "The Accidental Tourist" and Kevin Kline, the wild-eyed, oversexed safecracker in "A Fish Called Wanda," were surprise winners in supporting roles at the 61st Academy Awards.

"Cruelty might be human and it might be cultural, but it's not acceptable, and that's what this movie is about," said Miss Foster, a former child star who won her first Oscar.

"I'm supposed to be jaded by this time, but I'm not," said Hoffman, who also won the award for "Kramer vs. Kramer" in 1979. He embraced loser Gene Hackman while on his way to the stage, where he basked in a standing ovation.

No single picture dominated the first half of the show, with "Rain Man," the odds-on favorite for best picture, coming up short in four categories. It lost the Oscar for film editing to "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," while "The Milagro Beanfield War" won for best score, "Dangerous Liaisons" won for art direction and "Mississippi Burning" for cinematography.

"First of all, I want to thank Anne Tyler for writing such a wonderful book," Davis said in accepting the first prize of the night at the 61st Academy Awards. She has said she read Tyler's novel when it was first published and coveted the role of Muriel.

The award to Davis drew yelps of approval from the audience of 6,500 in the Shrine Auditorium, possibly because the favorites appeared to have been Frances McDormand for "Mississippi Burning" and Sigourney Weaver for "Working Girl."

"This is astonishing," said Kline, who also had not been considered a front-runner.

"Liaisons," an ornate drama of drawing room seductions in pre-Revolutionary France, also won for its opulent costumes.

"Bird" won the Oscar for best sound, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" for sound effects editing and "Beetlejuice" for makeup.

Named best song of the year was Carly Simon's "Let the River Run" from "Working Girl." The academy could find only three songs to nominate this year, instead of the usual five, and didn't see fit to have them performed during the show.

The year's best foreign language film was Denmark's "Pelle the Conqueror" about an exploited farmworker and his son.

Countries exchange ideas in cancer-related research

By Lisa Pfannenstiel
Features Editor

Although the United States and East Berlin are not allies in the political realm, as the occurrence of cancer increases worldwide, the countries' scientists exchange cancer-related research that may be the link to a cure.

Richard Grosse, professor of cellular biochemistry at the Academy of Science in East Berlin, presented a guest lecture on the effects of mammary derived growth inhibitors which may be applied to the understanding of breast cancer Tuesday afternoon in Ackert Hall.

Grosse's interest is to understand which signals are involved in the development of mammary glands and the process of growth.

"Just as researchers are interested in growth accelerators, I am interested in growth inhibitors," he said. "It is just like a car, you need both the accelerator and the brakes to function."

Grosse began his project eight years ago when a friend interested him by chance.

"Researchers know signals are necessary to bring cells into a growth cycle or arrest growth, so now it is a matter of finding the techniques to isolate and identify the signals," he said. "Then they can study what the signals are doing and relate them to the development of the disease."

Signals are necessary for these processes such as deoxyribonucleic acid synthesis, which requires the cell to recognize and transmit the factors to the nuclei of the cell, Grosse said.

Signal may be ions, sugars or many other components.

"For a very long time, people thought the growth of the mammary epithelial cells was not regulated by local factors, which means the cell produces the factors needed for growth," he said.

For the mammary glands, growth was to be stimulated solely by the endocrine system, which produces hormones such as estrogen, and were transported to the corresponding cells that influenced growth.

"But now, since the epidermal growth factor was detected and analyzed, and people have found many other peptides affecting growth which are not released by the endocrine system but the cells themselves, reseachers understand that not all the signals are produced exterior of the gland cells," Grosse said.

The cell not only produces polypeptides, but the cell recognizes and responds to these signals by producing DNA, he said.

"So there is a local system for the liver, the kidney and the brain which produce factors they need for growth, and that is a new thinking ... having both an endrocrine and an autocrine system," Grosse said.

In normal conditions, the synthesis of factors is controlled, the hormones are under control and the receptor part is under control, he said.

In the gland, there is a "burst of proliferation" of mammary epithelial cells, but starting with the delivery, the proliferation stops abruptly and the cells begin to differentiate, Grosse said.

The cease of proliferation upon lactation of mammals is partly due to a polypeptide that blocks continued cell growth, he said.

"It could be in cancer cells that synthesis of that protein is not working, and the cells don't know when to stop growing," he said.

"I am trying to understand which signals are responsible for the differentiation in the normal case," Grosse said. "If I know which signals are necessary for the proliferation and the genes and gene products, then I can look and see if the same genes and gene products are turned off in the tumor cells, which are not differentiated."

The inhibitor Grosse has researched in his experiments is MDGI, which he and his 20 associates are attempting to clone, and it could provide the needed link in understanding the growth of cancer.

Grosse said he has always been interested in physical chemistry and has studied the effects of ions, which lead him into biochemistry.

"What is most exciting is to know biochemistry, molecular genetics, cell biology and biology, and know you cannot understand growth of cells unless you understand this interdisciplinary approach," he said.

"You have a living model and now you have to find out how it works. It has taken millions of years to develop these situations, and we try to understand it in five years and get frustrated when we can't answer a question.

"The problem is not that we don't understand. The problem is that we have to ask the right questions at the right time ... not asking questions that are hypothesis, but asking questions with the known information."

Czechoslovak teens attempt hijack

By The Associated Press

FRANKFURT, West Germany — Two Czechoslovak teen-agers shot their way onto a jetliner Wednesday in Prague and ordered it to the United States, but the crew convinced them it couldn't fly that far and they gave up in Frankfurt.

They surrendered when American military would not let them enter the U.S. Air Force base adjacent to Frankfurt's commercial airport.

Police said no one was hurt and the incident ended peacefully less than three hours after its violent start in the Czechoslovak capital, where nearly all passengers were freed.

Witnesses at Ruzyne Airport in Prague said the teen-agers took a woman hostage, crashed through a glass wall of the VIP lounge, fired several shots and threatened a stewardess.

About 100 people were reported to be on Tupolev-154 of the Hungarian airline Malev when the hijackers, aged 15 and 16, seized it about 10 a.m.

Oswald Neumann, a Frankfurt police spokesman, said passengers reported that one youth fired a "warning shot" out the door of the plane before takeoff that "was not aimed at anyone ... went into the air."

Official Hungarian and Czechoslovak news agencies gave the ages of the hijackers and said they initially demanded to be flown to the United States.

The Hungarian agency MTI said Lajos Taba, Hungarian consul general in Prague, boarded the aircraft and negotiated the release of 82 passengers, including all women and children, trading himself for them.

'Cats take double header from Tigers

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

Eddie Money threw out the opening pitch before the start of the Wildcats' baseball doubleheader with Fort Hays State University, but the 'Cats pitchers didn't need much help.

The K-State pitching staff took charge to help K-State sweep both games, 19-8 and 9-3, Wednesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field, running its record to 15-3.

"I'm real happy with the way we played today," said 'Cats coach Mike Clark. "We didn't do anything poorly. We got to play a lot of kids and we got some different things done."

One of the keys to the victories was the return of Bill Barnard to the K-State lineup. Barnard, who was injured in the first game of the season sliding into third base, went 7 of 9 from the plate, with eight RBI and three runs scored.

"It was good to see Bill Barnard back in our lineup," Clark said. "He's a very big part of our offense and it was very important for him to have a good game going into Oklahoma."

"It feels good to be playing again," Barnard said. "It's been hard to sit and watch and not be able to play. I'm ready for Oklahoma."

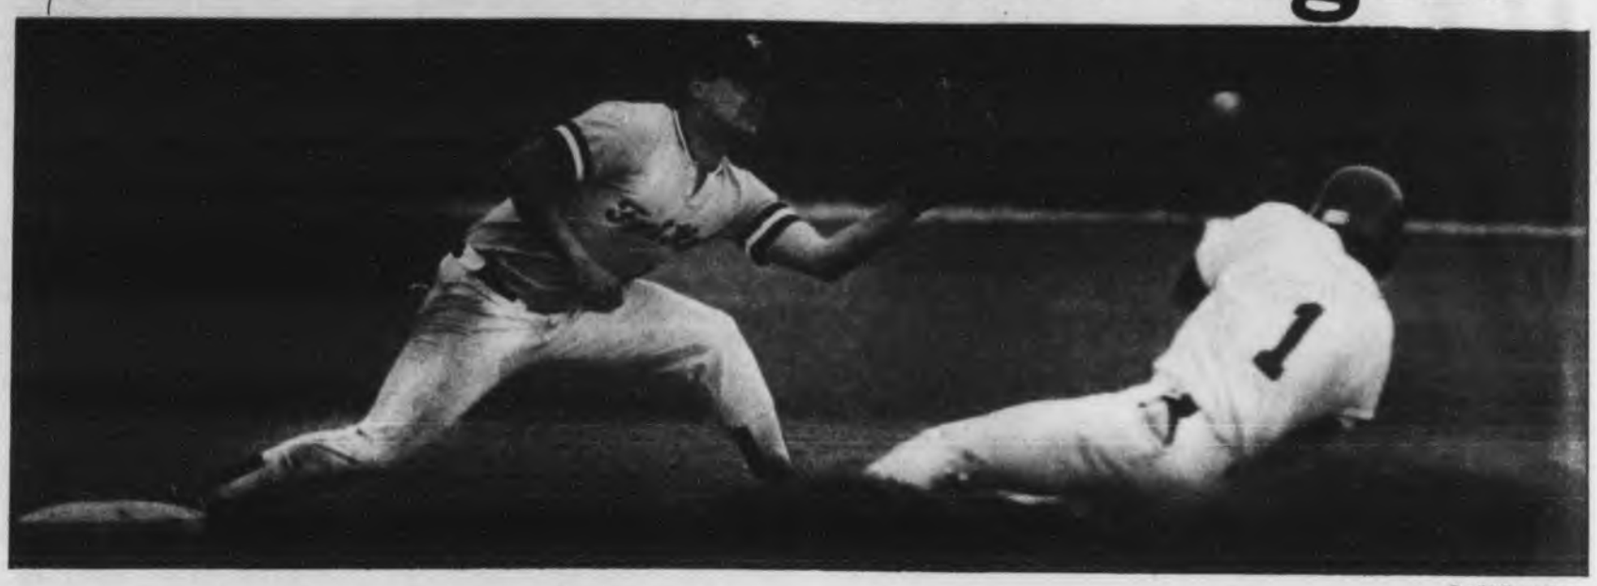
Sean Collins also had a good day for K-State, going 4 for 6 at the plate, with six runs, and four stolen bases.

"Sean has been doing a good job for us," Clark said. "He's played very consistent. To have a lead off hitter that can create different situations like that is really nice."

The 'Cats batted .437 on the day, while the K-State pitchers were able to hold the Tigers to just .280 at the plate.

The winning pitcher for the 'Cats in the first game was Jeff Peterson, who started and pitched four scoreless innings. The victory raised his record to 4-1.

Late in the first game, Clark was able to put some of his younger players in and they did impressively well. Larry Peddy, a freshman catcher, had the day's only home run. Bus Tarbox got a hit at his only plate appearance and Brad Rippelmeyer went 2 for 3 at the plate.



"It was good to see the younger guys do well," Clark said. "It's nice when you can reward them with some playing time."

Jim McClellan picked up the win for K-State in the second game, pitching the first five innings and giving up only five hits and two earned runs. Mike Hedrick pitched two scoreless innings to close out the game for the 'Cats.

"Mike Hedrick has just been outstanding this year," Clark said. "He has pitched 16 innings and has only given up one run. He throws strikes and really goes after the hitters. He has been a real key to our success, pitching-wise."

K-State will open Big Eight play on the road Friday with a four-game weekend series at Oklahoma.

"I think our team is confident, but playing Oklahoma at Oklahoma is a whole different experience," Clark said. "We'll just see how the wind is blowing and hope that Jimmy Haller (K-State's scheduled pitcher in the first game) gets us off to a good start."

Staff/Mike Venso

K-State centerfielder Sean Collins steals second base during the second game of a double-header with Fort Hays State. Collins was called safe on the play. The 'Cats won both games with scores of 19-8 and 9-3 and now have a record of 15-3.

Fogler resigns at WSU

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Wichita State's Eddie Fogler resigned Wednesday to become Vanderbilt's head basketball coach.

"It was a very, very tough decision for me," Fogler told a news conference.

Fogler said there was nothing wrong at Wichita State and he wasn't leaving because of any differences with anyone at WSU.

"There's nothing wrong here," he said. "If there was something wrong here, I would be interviewing every place that came open."

Fogler said he had been approached about 15 positions the past three years. He said the Vandy job was the only one he chose to go after. He refused to name the schools that were interested in him, except for Tennessee.

He acknowledged many coaches would have taken the Tennessee job over Vanderbilt. "But Vanderbilt is something I think I fit very very well."

Comparing it to Duke, he said Vanderbilt has a national reputation as a strong academic school. Fogler said it ranked 14th nationally in total attendance this season and consistently fills its 15,000-seat arena even during losing years.

Fogler said he made his decision early Wednesday morning and then met with Athletic Director Tom Shupe, several boosters and the WSU team. He said he urged the players to remain at Wichita State and added that he had no problems with the university.

Acknowledging the decision is up to Shupe and WSU President Warren Armstrong, Fogler said he recommended his chief assistant, Mike Cohen, be named to replace him.

"Mike's been a big part of our success here the past three years. I think he's entitled to the right to be the new head coach. I think it would be best for the program," Fogler said.

Cohen, 45, has never held a head coaching post at the college level. He was a prep coach 12 years and had several college basketball coaching staff jobs before joining Fogler at WSU in 1986. He is a field goal shooting specialist and also was heavily involved in WSU scouting, recruiting, game preparation and coaching.

Fogler said Rick Callahan, the assistant who coached WSU centers and forwards, will be on the Vanderbilt staff.

Senior Sasha Radunovich and several other Shocker players refused comment following the team meeting. Others said they would decide later whether to stay at Wichita State.

Keith Bonds, 6-foot-2 freshman guard from Oklahoma City, said if Cohen is the new coach he definitely will stay.

Bonds said he and his teammates weren't surprised by Fogler's decision.

"If a better offer came up, we thought he would take it," Bonds said.

At WSU, Fogler was operating under a four-year rollover contract that gave him four more years at the end of each season.

Fogler met with Vanderbilt athletic director Roy Kramer and the school's chancellor, Joe Wyatt, during a visit to Nashville Monday and Tuesday. He said he also talked with C.M. Newton, who resigned the Vandy post to become athletic director at Kentucky.

Fogler came to Wichita State in March 1986, replacing Gene Smithson. Fogler had been an assistant to University of North Carolina Coach Dean Smith since 1971.

In his three seasons at WSU, Fogler compiled a 61-32 overall record and was the only WSU coach to guide the Shockers to consecutive NCAA appearances, doing so in his first two seasons. This year, WSU finished 19-11 after being defeated by Michigan State in the second round of the National Invitation Tournament.

Fogler said the Southeast Conference, in which Vanderbilt plays, is one of the strongest basketball leagues in the nation. He said five SEC teams went to the NCAA tournament this year.

The coach said he doesn't expect unwarranted pressure from Vanderbilt's administration or fans.

"I really think most of my pressure will be self-imposed, just like it was here," he said.

He said money wasn't a factor in the decision.

Chiefs talk to veteran Jaworski

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Veteran quarterback Ron Jaworski, who saw only limited action with the Miami Dolphins the past two seasons, has caught the attention of the Kansas City Chiefs.

Jaworski, 38, started 10 years for the Philadelphia Eagles, taking them to the Super Bowl in 1980 when Carl Peterson, now president and general manager of the Chiefs, was director of player personnel for the Eagles.

"He still wants to play, and what intrigues him about this place is that we don't have a young quarterback coming on or a current young quarterback who is the starter," Peterson said Tuesday after the Chiefs sent Jaworski through a 40-minute workout. "What's enticing to him is that even at 38 years old, he would have an opportunity to start here."

KC sends Pecota down; roster set

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Infielder Bill Pecota was sent down to the minors Wednesday as the Kansas City Royals reached the 24-man roster limit for the opening of the season next week.

"It was one of the toughest ones I've had in my short career," Manager John Wathan said of the decision to option Pecota to the Class AAA farm club at Omaha. "I love him like a son."

Third baseman Kevin Seitzer and shortstop Kurt Stillwell, Pecota's two closest friends on the team, wept at the news. Pecota was visibly shaken.

Pecota, 29, spent all last season with the Royals, appearing in 90 games and hitting .208 with 15 runs batted in. Taking his place on the major league roster will be Rey Palacios, a 26-year-old catcher-infielder.

Palacios, who hit .230 with 27 RBI at Toledo last year, was called up by the Royals at the end of the season and appeared in five games, hitting .091.

This spring Palacios batted only .111, while Pecota hit .294.

Wathan said he decided to keep Palacios because he can both catch and play third base, which will allow the team to make late-inning pinch-hitting and pinch-running moves for catchers Bob Boone and Mike Macfarlane.

In other moves to reach the roster limit, the Royals sent former major league relievers Donnie Moore and Steve Crawford to Omaha, along with first baseman Luis de los Santos and pitcher Kevin Appier. Moore will open the season on the disabled list at Omaha, but will stay at the spring training complex.

De los Santos, the most valuable player in the American Association last year, hit .375 in 19 games this spring, but was playing behind George Brett, Bill Buckner and Pat Tabler at first base.

The Royals also put pitcher Israel Sanchez on the 60-day disabled list and shortstop Buddy Biancalana on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to March 25. Sanchez had arthroscopic surgery to remove a bone spur from his elbow and Biancalana has a bulging disk in his back.

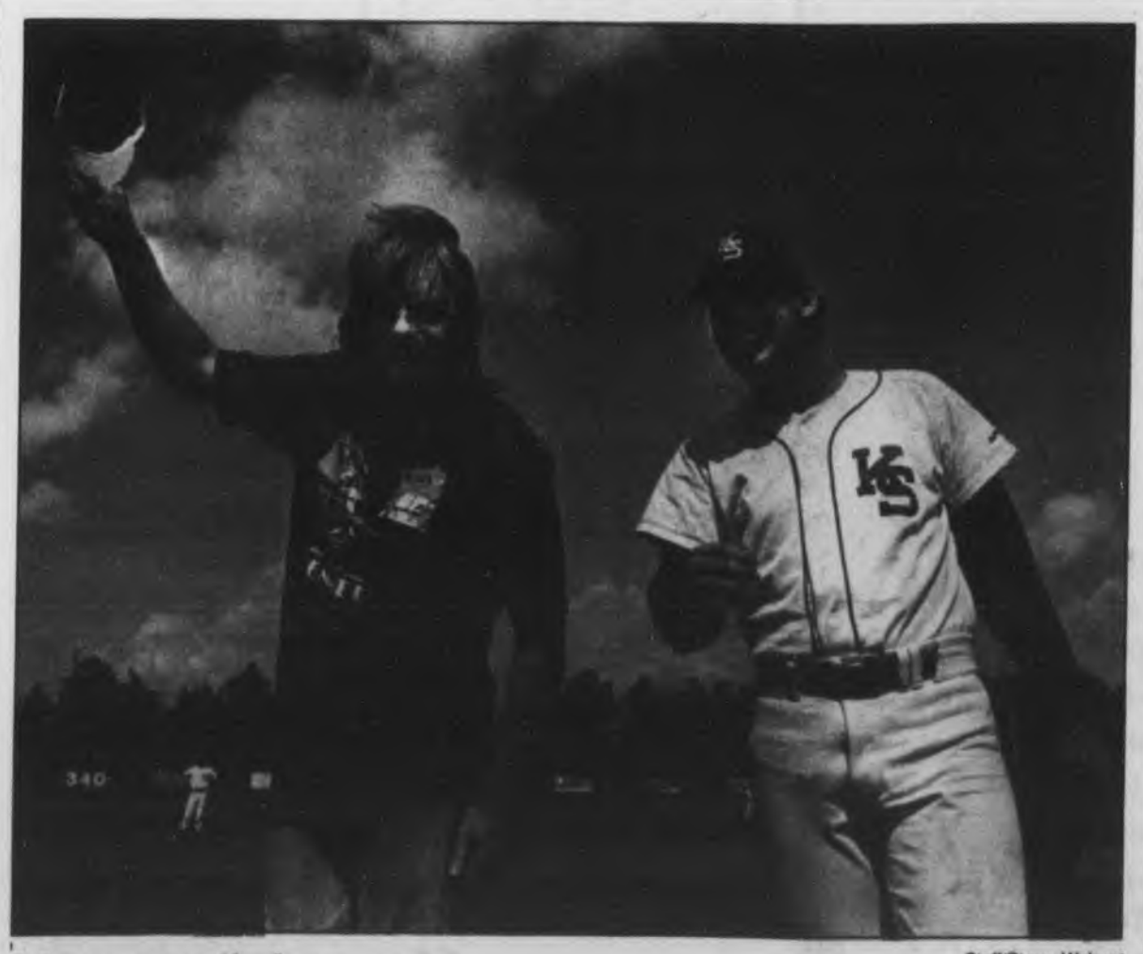
Final 4 coaches critical of firings

By The Associated Press

The Final Four coaches, aware of their own precarious job security, were critical Wednesday of athletic directors who succumb to pressure and fire coaches before there is a chance to succeed.

"An awful lot of coaches just as good or a lot better than our staff have not been given the opportunity that we've had," said Seton Hall's P.J. Carlesimo, whose resignation was demanded by the student senate and newspaper last year, just 14 months before he guided his team to college basketball's pinnacle.

"What's happening in college athletics is wrong. It's very alarming and it's happening because you have athletic directors who are unwilling to stand up to alumni and boosters. At Seton Hall, we were lucky enough to have people who were strong enough to take some criticism."



Carlesimo's comments, made in a nationwide telephone conference call that included Duke's Mike Krzyzewski, Illinois' Lou Henson and Michigan's Steve Fisher, were made more relevant by Fisher's shaky position.

He took over the team two days before the NCAA tournament began, when Bill Frieder took the Arizona State job, and has guided the Wolverines to the four victories that got them into the Final Four. Despite that, he has received no word from Bo Schembechler, the athletic director and head football coach, on his status.

Nevertheless, the 44-year-old Fisher, who acknowledged that "I'd love to be a head coach here," got one endorsement Wednesday.

"I really feel Steve Fisher deserves the head coaching position," said Henson, whose Illinois team, two-time victors over Michigan in the regular season, will meet the Wolverines Saturday after Seton Hall and Duke play in the first game.

Carlesimo and Krzyzewski were more general, talking about the hazards of a profession in which more than a dozen Division I coaches have been fired since the regular season ended three weeks ago.

Redmen win NIT title, 73-65

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Jayson Williams made 11 of his first 12 shots and had 28 points and a career-high 18 rebounds Wednesday night, leading St. John's to a record fifth National Invitation Tournament title, 73-65 over St. Louis.

Williams, named most valuable player of the tournament, was scoreless in the first 10 minutes, but after that he continually got free inside against the smaller Billikens, who won their only NIT title in 1948.

St. John's, 20-13, which shared the record of four NIT titles with Bradley, was making its 25th tournament appearance after a disappointing season in which the Redmen finished eighth in the nine-team Big East Conference.

St. Louis, 27-10, got 21 points from Roland Gray but had foul problems at both ends of the court. The Billikens missed 12 of their first 17 free throws, and Monroe Douglass, who scored 25 points in a semifinal victory over Michigan State, missed most of the game with foul trouble and finished with two points.

Jason Buchanan, one of three freshmen in the St. John's starting lineup, scored a career-high 21 points.

With St. John's leading 44-39 with 13:18 left, Williams scored seven of the next 12 points as the Redmen extended the margin to 56-45. The Billikens got no closer than five the rest of the way, the last time at 70-65 with 33 seconds to go after a 3-point goal and free throw by Jeff Luechtefeld.

Two 3-point goals by Luechtefeld gave St. Louis a 23-19 edge with 6:34 left in the first half, but the Billikens scored only one point in the next 5:41 as St. John's took a 32-25 lead.

A 3-pointer by Gray got the Billikens within four with 52 seconds to go, but Williams, who scored all 12 of his first-half points in the final 9:23, got inside with a second remaining.

From K-State to Golden State

Richmond has taken several habits with him to the NBA, like chewing on his jersey and chewing gum during games.

CHICAGO — Some of his critics said he was too slow too run the floor and handle the ball in the rugged NBA.

Some said he wouldn't be able to play the big guard position in the pros, and was too small to play small forward.

But those who didn't doubt Mitch Richmond's ability to adapt to the pro style of play were right.

The former K-State all-American has taken the National Basketball Association by storm as Golden State's No. 2 guard and second leading scorer and has surprised a lot of people along the way. One who hasn't been a bit surprised, though, is Warrior coach Don Nelson.

"Nothing that Mitch has done has surprised me," Nelson said. "Maybe that he's been able to do it so quickly is surprising, but you can credit that to his great character and that he's a great athlete."

Since putting on a Golden State Warriors' uniform, Richmond has proved he's NBA material. That was definitely evident Tuesday night at Chicago Stadium. The former K-State all-American went up against the best defender in the game in Chicago's Michael Jordan and didn't seem a bit intimidated.

"I was excited the first time. You realize that it is Michael Jordan that you are playing against," Richmond said, "but you have to forget what you see on TV. Michael Jordan is a great player, but you have to go out and do your job."

This night, however, Jordan would get the best of Richmond and the Warriors, as the Bulls won 115-106. Jordan tallied his third triple-double of the season with 33 points, 11 assists and 12 rebounds. But Jordan was not Richmond's primary assignment because Jordan has moved to point guard for the Bulls in the last 11 games.

In the first meeting between the two teams, Richmond got the best of Jordan and the Bulls. Richmond scored just two points in the first half, but then exploded in the second half for 25 points to lead the Warriors to a 109-99 victory in the Oakland Coliseum.

Richmond has been impressive in his rookie season. After being the first guard chosen and fifth pick overall in the NBA draft last summer, Richmond has proved that the Warriors made no mistake in taking him so high.

He was named rookie of the month for both December and January and leads all first-year players with a 21.9 average — making him the leading candidate for the league's rookie of the year honors.

"He's turned in to a great player. He should be rookie of the year," Jordan said. "He's a very good rookie. He plays physical and he likes to bother you on defense. He's just an excellent athlete."

But the leading candidate for rookie of the year has taken it all in stride — even after doing interview after interview after interview.

"This has all been great. I wouldn't trade it for the world," Richmond said. "I think that I always felt I could play in the league, but it was just a matter of time and opportunity."

Opportunity has knocked on the door of the 6-foot-5, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., native — in the form of a five-year contract estimated at $2.5 million.

And he has answered — helping lead the Warriors to a 38-31 record after Golden State won just 24 games all of last season.

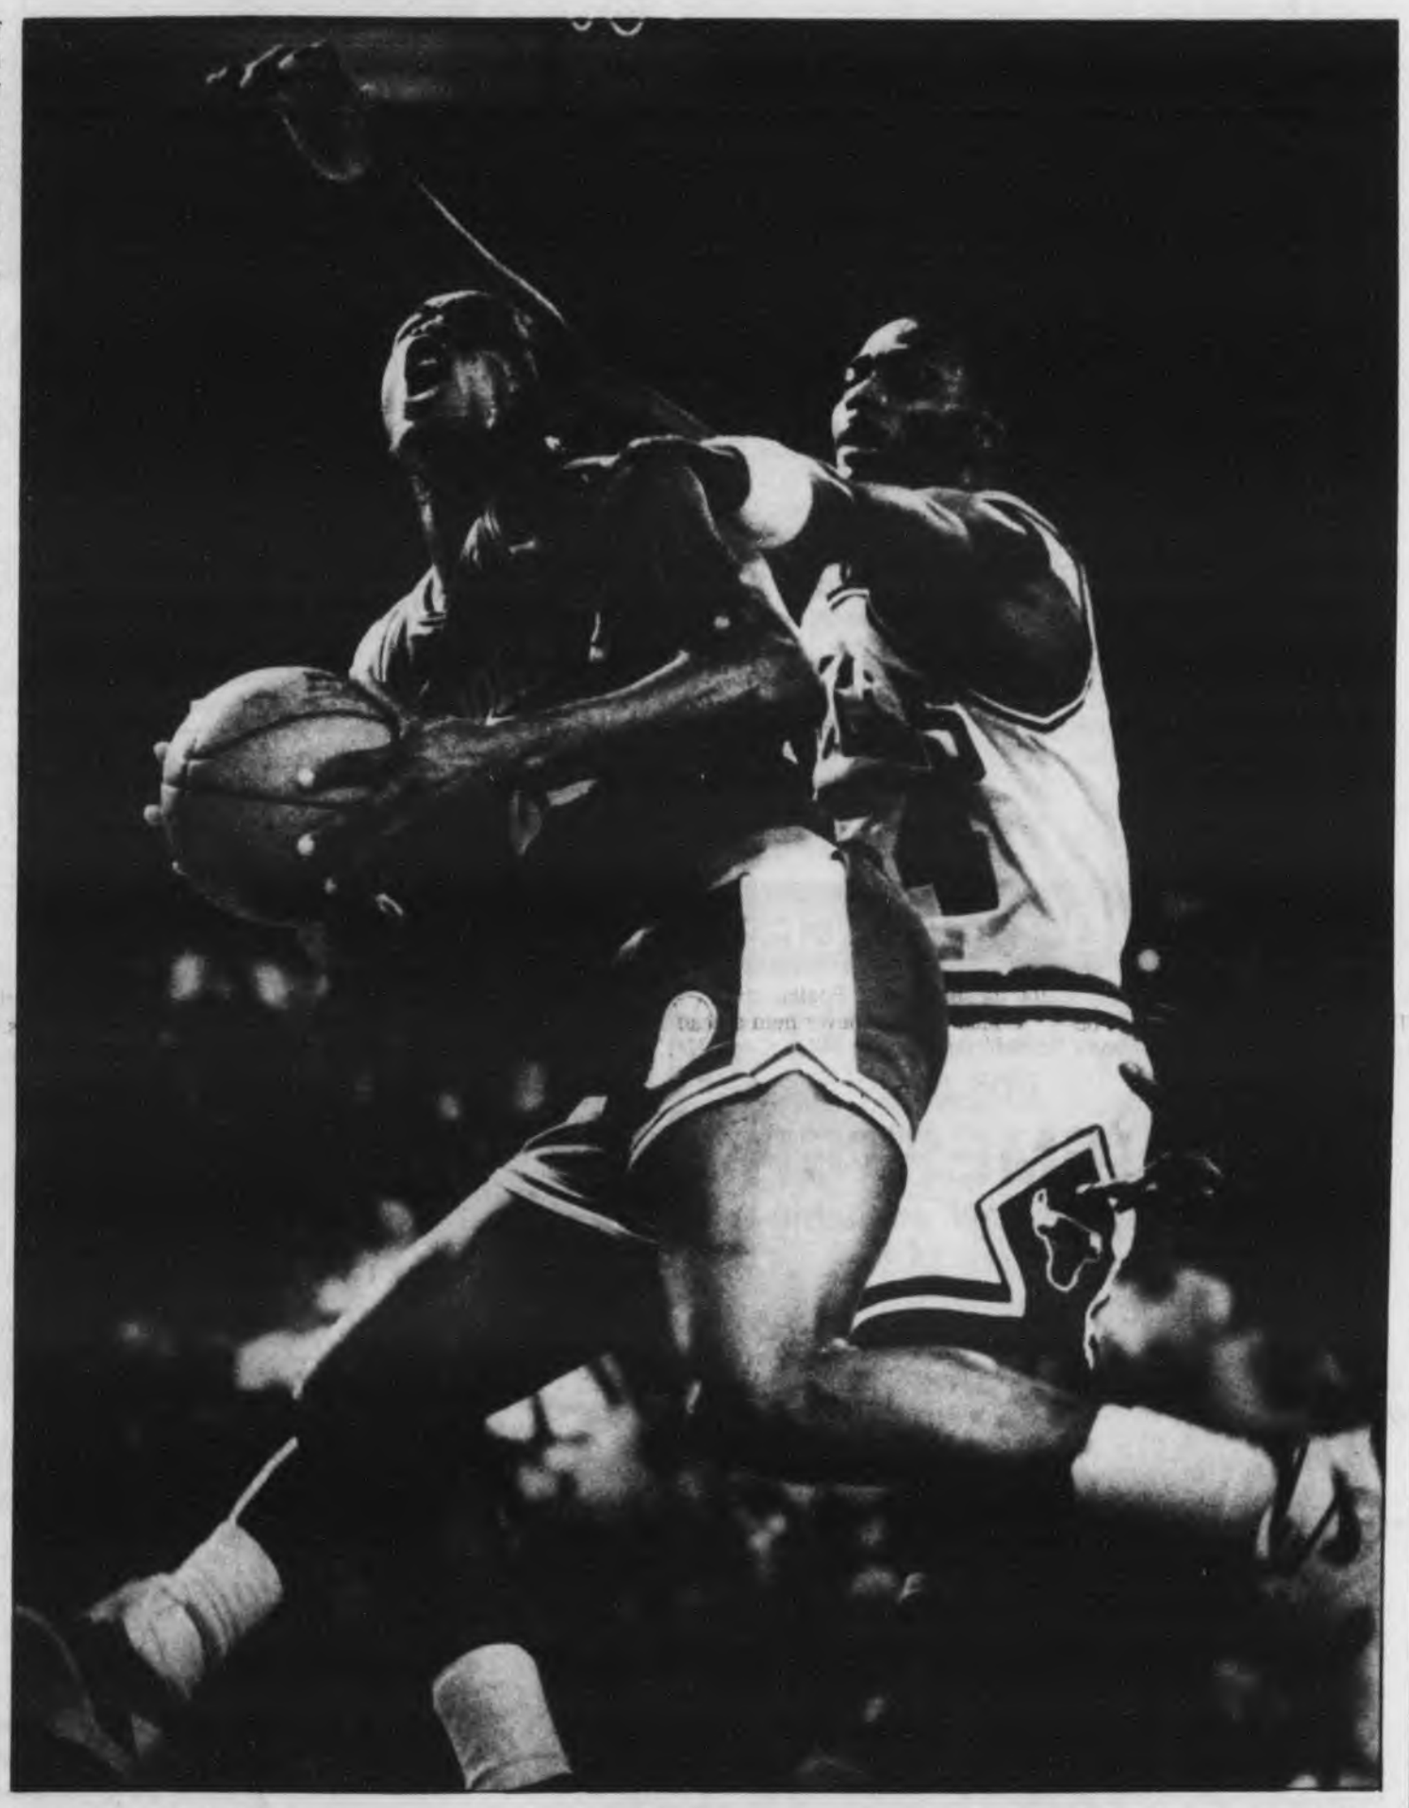
Richmond is also one of just a few rookies from last summer's U.S. Olympic team who has not suffered from a major injury or illness. Danny Manning, Jeff Grayer and Dan Majrle, to name a few, have all missed a major portion of the season. Richmond has missed just one game with back spasms. That and his stout physique are probably why teammate Chris Mullin, among others, dubbed him "The Rock" earlier this season.

"I'm not real sure why that started," Richmond said with a laugh.

It was one of few laughs that appeared on the rookie's face Tuesday. Golden State is mired in a four-game losing streak and, as usual, Richmond seemed to shoulder the blame a bit more than other players might.

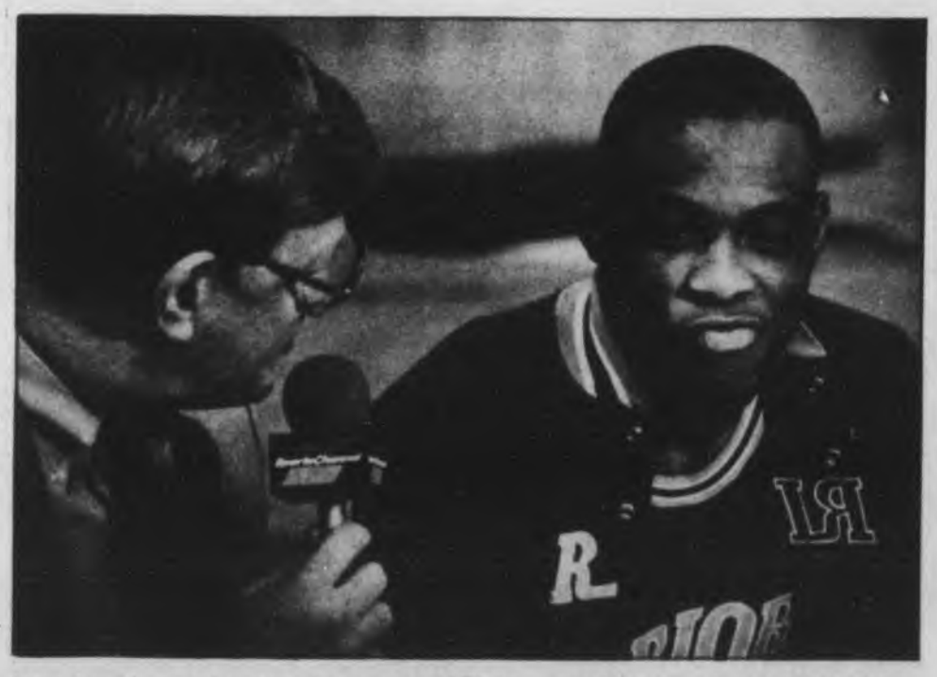
"I feel pretty good right now," Richmond said, at the mention that he might just be feeling the wear and tear of the NBA after going 8-21 from the field Tuesday. "My jump shot just hasn't been going down. I'm getting the shots; I don't know why they're not falling. But I'm not tired; we all feel pretty good."

Richmond attributed his easy transition to the pro style of play to being able to play under two different coaches at the college level — Moberly (Mo.) Junior College coach Dana Altman (now a K-State assistant) and K-State coach Lon Kruger.



"I was able to play two different phases of the game," Richmond said. "We played the faster, up-tempo style under Dana and then we played the slow down, deliberate-type game under Coach Kruger."

No, even though he drives a top-of-the-line, black BMW 725 and is in the process of building his mother the new house back in Ft. Lauderdale that he promised her, Richmond has still not forgotten his days at K-State.



"The thing I miss most about K-State is all of the friends I met and left behind," Richmond said. "Tell them all I said hi back there."

Yes, it's good to see that he is still the same Mitch — just as laid back and free-spirited as ever.

"I don't think I'll ever change," he said.

Golden State's Mitch Richmond gets by Chicago's Horace Grant for two of his 19 points Tuesday night at Chicago Stadium. The former Wildcat all-American is leading the NBA's first- year players this season with a 21.9 point average.

Interviews have taken up a big portion of Richmond's time since he joined the NBA, but the K-State grad seems to always have time to answer questions.

Customers expect occasional belly rub

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

Her shop is like most barbershops: the tile floor is covered with scraps of fallen hair and the sounds of snipping scissors and whirring clippers fill the air, but Shirley Theis said her customers expect her to pause occasionally to rub their stomachs.

Theis owns Shirley's Dog Grooming and her customers include Popcorn and Toughy, the poodles owned by President Jon Wefald and his wife, Ruth Ann.

Theis has been a dog groomer for 13 years, working mainly by herself. She said she doesn't have time to worry about her local competition.

"I've never made it a point to find out about my competitors," she said. "I was told a long time ago, 'don't worry about your competitors, let them worry about you,' and it works. When you're busy you don't have time to worry about it, anyway."

Theis does keep busy. She grooms an average of six dogs a day, six days a week, and her appointments are booked two to three months in advance. She is left with little time for such luxuries as vacations.

"I used to be able to take a week off every January, but it's been a long time since I've been able to do something like that," Theis said. "I had to take a few days off recently when my father had open-heart surgery. When I got back the phone rang for two and a half hours. I couldn't even get my dogs started for answering the phone."

Theis tries to keep the pace as relaxed as possible so she can give special attention to each dog.

"When I'm busy there's no time to rub their tummies, and they expect me to love them because I always have," she said. "If I hurry I miss what I enjoy the most."

Theis can trace her love for animals to her childhood. When she was in school she used to volunteer to work in a kennel feeding and caring for dogs. There she began learning how to trim dogs' hair. Now she owns two dogs, a cat and a fish. She said her menagerie would be larger if she had room.

"I'd even have chickens and rabbits, but I wouldn't be able to handle it when the time came to kill them. I'm not much of a meat-eater," she said. "I wouldn't have made a good farm wife. I would have made pets out of everything."

Occasionally Theis's daughter, Nancy Worrel, helps out at the shop when her mother falls behind. She said dogs are very important to people in Manhattan.

"For special occasions like weddings, we'll paint the dogs' nails and put in ribbons to match the colors of the wedding," Worrel said. "The dogs are part of the family and the company is going to see them, so they have to match."

Marlene Budden, one of Theis's customers, said Theis is an uncommon groomer.

"Shirley is very observant of things and if she notices anything you ought to be aware of, she lets you know," Budden said. "My dogs love Shirley. You can tell if your dogs are happy going to a clipper, and when your dog is happy, you're happy."

Theis said there are some factors to her job that can lead to problems after a number of years. Lifting heavy dogs has left her with a bad back and tendinitis in her arm. She has narrowed her clientele to mostly small breeds to avoid aggravating these problems.

Even with the problems, Theis is doing the kind of job she most wants to do.

"I read an article in a magazine a long time ago that said you should get a job that pays you with love," she said, stroking the head of a dog.

include adding an additional section to the end of the yearbook, she said.

"We are thinking about adding a 16-page full color feature of a 'Walk thru K-State,' highlighting historical aspects of campus.

Hilt said she wants to make the yearbook "a little more loose, less stuffy, and be a little more daring."

Doud and Lambert will be taking applications for staff positions April 3-7 and will conduct interviews the following week.

Johnson and Wyandotte Counties to join the Kansas and Missouri Metropolitan Culture and Recreation District Compact. The measure, which would authorize a one-fourth cent sales tax to provide funding, went to the House.

The money would be used to finance cultural and recreational facilities on both sides of the state line.

"This bill represents a step forward for the Kansas City area," said Sen. Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village.

A commission of six Missourians and five Kansans would be appointed to determine how to spend the money, she said, and a majority from both states must agree on a project before it could be funded.

But Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, said he did not want Kansas tax dollars spent in Missouri.

He predicted a few "crumbs" would be thrown to the Kansas side, with most of the money spent in Missouri.

"Even though safeguards have been included in the bill, Kansas taxpayers should expect their taxes to be spent in Kansas," he said.

"The point of this is to do projects on both sides of the state line," Langworthy responded. She cited as examples of projects that might be funded the renovation of Union Station in Kansas City, Mo., and construction of botonical gardens in Olathe.

The sales tax would not be imposed in the two Kansas City area counties unless approved by voters.

The Missouri General Assembly approved a similar measure in 1986.

The Senate also passed bills to:

■ Allow cities and counties to advertise on television and radio to call attention to published legal notices. Nothing prohibits local governments from doing this now, and the bill is aimed at encouraging the practice.

lost our herring season. We're likely to lose a good bit of our salmon season."

Devens estimated the loss to the fishing industry at $150 million.

He said his community felt "a little betrayed" by the oil industry and its inability to clean up the mess as it had promised.

The Seattle Times reported in Wednesday's editions that the oil industry consortium operating the Valdez port had cut back its oil spill cleanup resources severely in recent years.

The cutbacks prevented the consortium from acting quickly in the early hours of the spill when it still might have been contained, said James Woodle, retired Coast Guard commander and general manager of the Port of Valdez from 1982 to 1984.

"You can't clean up everything in 48 hours," Woodle said. "But you can contain it, and they could have done it with this one if they had the manpower, the initial response."

Exxon's Alaska coordinator, Don Cornett, said he was unaware of such cutbacks and declined to comment further.

RICH SEIDLER for CITY COMMISSION

Dear Voters,

The many people I have spoken to and met with have been consistent in the things they expect from a commissioner. They are: open-mindedness, the ability to see things from another's point of view and honesty. I feel I possess these qualities and that my past involvements in civic and city activities qualify me to represent you on our commission. I will work for all of Manhattan and all of its people, but most important of all, I will listen to your concerns and do what I can to solve your problems. Can we really expect any less from a commissioner? I would appreciate your support on April 4th.

Performance to fulfill 'dream'

Guitarist returns to Manhattan

By Janet Swanson
Editor

"Mom and Dad — Don't wanna get too mushy, but you both always let me go with this thing and so far it's been working — I love you. Dawayne" — a note from Dawayne Bailey to his parents on Chicago's 1988 promotional picture.

If you ask Edie Bailey, it's just a matter of a hometown boy coming home.

"It's difficult to see him as a superstar — maybe some people do. Until we go to a concert, we don't really realize how truly talented he is," Edie said.

Edie and Max's son, Dawayne, plays lead guitar for the group Chicago which will be in concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

"He says coming back here to play is his dream come true," Edie said.

Dawayne, his older brothers, Danny, Dave and Daryl, and his younger sisters, Danise and Dana, all graduated from Manhattan High School. Dawayne, Daryl and Dana each attended K-State for two years, and Danise received and education degree. Edie is a vault teller for the Union's business office.

All of the Baileys are musically inclined, Max said. Daryl plays drums for a local band in Mississippi.

"We don't want to make one of them out to be any better than the rest — all of them are good," he said. "Dawayne is just a musician all of the way."

Edie said in addition to playing guitar, Dawayne plays piano, steel guitar, drums and is learning to play the saxophone.

"He's all self-taught. He use to beg his oldest brother — Danny — to let him play his guitar," Edie said.

Dawayne has been a member of Chicago for almost three years. Prior to that he was a member for two years of The Silver Bullet Band which played with Bob Seger. After leaving The Silver Bullet Band and before joining Chicago, Dawayne returned to Kansas and lived in Wichita.

There he recorded "Private Parts" on Stark Raving records. Nine of the 10 songs on the album were written by Dawayne and one, "Dancing the Marmara," is still available in some record stores.

"Dawayne deserves to be in the spotlight, but he really enjoys writing," Dana said.

He has written songs for the title track to "The Lonely Guy" with Steve Martin and "The Revenge of the Nerds." Bette Midler and Frank Zappa have also purchased songs written by Dawayne.

"The only problem is that once he writes them, they're like his kids and he hates to sell them," Edie said.

Staff/Brian Kratzer

At home, Edie Bailey stands next to a gold record presented to Chicago. Her son Dawayne, the lead guitarist for the group, gave the record to the family. Chicago will be in concert at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at Bramlage.

Max said that when Dawayne first moved to Los Angeles in 1980 he took a job guarding the E.T. character used in the movie "E.T. — The Extra Terrestrial" for 12 hours a day.

"He would take his guitar to the studio and sit there and play it. One day somebody stopped and asked him if didn't he think he was shirking his responsibility and Steven Spielberg came by and said it was OK," Edie said. "We asked him what E.T. was really like and he said he 'was just kind of soft and mushy.'"

A band Dawayne started while in Los Angeles included Jason Scheff, lead singer of Chicago.

"He went up against some big names before he got the job with Bob Seger, but for Chicago — they came looking for him," Dana said.

When Dawayne was 3 years old, Daryl 4, Dave 6 and Danny 8, Edie took them to a talent contest at the Leavenworth County Fair in Tonganoxie. Dressed alike, the four took the stage and with Edie accompanying them on guitar, they sang "You Ain't Nothing But A Hound Dog."

"We brought home second place. I guess you could say that was the start of his professional career," Edie said.

She said she grew up in a musical family where she was taught how to play the guitar and has sung in a few bands.

"Music was our entertainment — our pastime. We didn't have much else," she said. "I remember one time my mom put me up on the stage in a frilly dress and bows. My knees knocked so hard."

When the family would visit her parents, who lived on a farm in Bonner Springs, her father would make guitars out of sticks and ropes.

"We didn't have much, but they had a lot of fun with that," Edie said. "They'd get up on a hay wagon with corn cobs for microphones and put on the best shows."

While in high school, Dawayne and Daryl would travel with bands during the summer as a way of earning money, Max said.

"We sure didn't have much to give them, that's why they (traveled). It's how they made their money. I hope they don't resent that we couldn't do much, but I don't think they do."

Senators approve four budget requests as allocations begin

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

Student Senate began the five-week allocation process by approving the funding requests of four groups in its four-hour meeting Thursday night.

During allocations, Senate will hear funding recommendations made by the Senate Finance Committee, then debate proposed amendments to the committee's proposals. Representatives of the groups requesting money are present to answer senators' questions.

Senate voted to increase the amount allotted for the Mexican American Council of Students' honorariums from the $300 Finance Committee recommendation to $400.

"We have a very diverse audience at our lectures," said Josie Bernal, MACS representative. "There are students who attend the lectures other than Mexican Americans."

"I am in favor of this increase," said Laurian Cuffy, student body president. "We need to open our minds to different cultures."

Senate rejected further amendments to the MACS bill which would have increased the group's budget another $5, on the basis of the group's proposed merger with the Puerto Rican Student Union.

"I am against these amendments," said Lauren O'Connor, finance committee chairwoman. "Budgets need to be done with considerations of what is needed for the next year. This new group has not been formed yet."

Craig Uhrich, engineering senator, suggested Senate should wait to see what progess the group makes in its formation.

"We can wait and see what happens, and if they need to, the group (MACS) can come back to us and request future funds if the groups combine," he said.

Senate voted to approve a $160 advertising budget for Students For Handicapped Concerns which will enable its ability to advertise the Handicapped Shuttle Service on campus.

Open House promotes University, careers

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

K-State's largest promotional event of the year, the All-University Open House, will give students in all majors opportunities to explore career options and meet prospective students from across the state Saturday.

Colleges, academic departments and campus organizations will be represented from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. Faculty, staff and students of all disciplines will be on hand for various exhibits and presentations.

Eva Chatterjee, student coordinator of events and junior in sociology, said she estimates 25,000 people will attend the daylong event.

"In terms of our audience, we do a mass mailing to prospective students and parents of prospective students," Chatterjee said. "We also contact junior highs and junior colleges."

In an earlier statement, Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and Open House committee chairman, said Open House was ranked by faculty as one of the major recruitment tools the University uses in attracting prospective students.

Some of today's Pre-Open House events include the engineers' Open House parade, an engineering awareness seminar, an all-University dance and a display of engineering exhibits.

Hundreds of displays and demonstrations will be presented Saturday.

The Veterinary Medicine Complex, in conjunction with Sunset Zoo, is sponsoring a petting zoo at the complex, Chatterjee said.

"A lot of the colleges are trying some new events," she said. "We are offering entertainment in the Union all day."

Singing and dancing groups, along with other forms of entertainment, will be presented in the Union Courtyard from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Craig Karges, a psychic entertainer, will perform at 4 p.m. in Forum Hall. Admission is $2 for the Karges performance.

Prospective students from high schools and junior colleges will have the opportunity to visit with students and faculty in their field of interest. Students will be on hand to lead tours of the different departments within colleges.

Members of faculty and staff assisting in the weekend coordination include representatives of all colleges, administrators, alumni and members of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. A majority of students will either be participating in the Open House or will visit some of the events, Chatterjee said.

Commissioner calls conflict charges 'lies'

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

Manhattan City Commissioner Nancy Denning, responding to allegations that she has been involved in conflict of interest during her tenure as a commissioner, said in a prepared statement that the accusations were lies attacking her integrity.

An article in The Manhattan Mercury on Thursday alleged that while serving on the Commission, Denning had cast votes which indirectly benefited her marketing and design firm, Denning and Associates. The article stated Denning "funnel(ed) as much as $43,000 to a business she operates."

Denning, a fourth-year incumbent, will be seeking a third term on the Commission when voters go to the polls April 4. Five other Manhattan residents, including incumbent Eugene Klingler, are running for the three available commission seats.

State law prohibits elected officials from benefiting financially as a result of holding public office. Violation of the statute is a misdemeanor but can result in the forfeiture of the position in question.

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said in an earlier statement that if the accusations were correct, the result could range from "a decision that the matter does not merit further legal consideration to a decision that the matter constitutes a crime."

In her statement, Denning said, "the article unfairly and blatantly used 'unnamed sources' to make its accusations and then presented only selected information which attacked my integrity and that of my fellow commissioners."

Kennedy said his office is investigating the accusations made by The Mercury.

However, Kennedy said he may be forced to pass the investigation on to the Kansas Attorney General's office because of his involvement with Denning in many local organizations including the Riley County Law Board. Kennedy has worked with Denning in the United Way.

Denning said she invites the possibility of an investigation by the county attorney or attorney general's office because she is confident there is no conflict of interest.

"My statement is in The Mercury," Denning said. "Basically, (The Mercury is) saying I used my votes to line my pockets."

Mayor Dave Fiser said he is not taking a position on the controversy. He said the commission incumbents and the candidates running in the election consider maintaining Manhattan's quality of life as a top priority.

"I prefer not to comment on that," Fiser said. "That is between Commissioner Denning and the newspaper."

The Mercury said Denning voted to continue to support city legislation that would give Denning and Associates the authority to produce a Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau guide.

The guide and other public relations activities for the city were funded by the Chamber of Commerce. Denning and Associates has contracted advertising and marketing work for the city since 1987.

In Denning's released statement, she said she maintains that more than 92 percent of the $43,665.97 of business conducted through her office paid for advertising in other mediums with a balance of $3,395.50 to pay for Denning and Associates

Cleric had been threatened

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The Moslem cleric slain in his Brussels office had been threatened with death for opposing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's order that author Salman Rushdie be killed as a blasphemer, officials said Thursday.

Vice Premier Willy Claes said Abdullah Ahdal, who was killed Wednesday, got telephone threat March 24 because of his disagreement with Khomeini's death sentence on the Indian-born British novelist for writing "The Satanic Verses."

Rushdie has been in hiding in Britain since Khomeini issued the proclamation Feb. 14.

Claes said "the Islamic world is deeply divided" by Khomeini's execution order, which Iranian clerics accompanied with a reward of $5.2 million, and the threat "clearly referred to the moderate viewpoints" Ahdal had expressed.

He did not exclude other motives for the murder, however. No one has claimed responsibility.

Britain offered to help find the killers. "I stand ready to offer any assistance which may be necessary to track down those who perpetrated this foul crime," Home Secretary Douglas Hurd said in a letter to Justice Minister Melchior Wathelet.

Explosives forgotten on plane

LONDON — A new furor over airport security broke out Thursday after the discovery that a British Airways jet flew with an explosive aboard for at least two weeks because police on a bomb-detection drill forgot to remove it.

The gelignite was tucked in a seat pocket in economy class of the Boeing 747, news reports said Wednesday night. Authorities would not say when the gelignite was put on the plane.

The incident was particularly embarrassing to British officials trying to tighten security following the Dec. 21 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

The Air Transport Users Committee, a consumer group, called it "the sort of carelessness we can't afford."

Lawmaker David Wilshire of the governing Conservative Party said the public was always being told British Airways was among the most security-minded airlines.

"My mind boggles at the thought of what airlines in Timbuktu are like if this is the best," he said. "The worst must be mind-blowingly incompetent."

B-1B bombers grounded

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. — The Strategic Air Command plans another round of tests on a sample of B-1B bombers before clearing the planes for flight, a SAC spokesman said.

SAC grounded the 97 planes Monday after a Texas bomber crew noticed an internal fuel tank on one of the bombers was punctured.

SAC officials found no malfunction on the first inspection of a sample of 25 of the planes, said Maj. Dennis Pierson on Thursday.

"We've completed the first inspection and now the engineers are developing another test," said Maj. Dennis Pierson.

Fugitive arrested in Chicago

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A fugitive being sought by the FBI in connection with the murder of a Kansas City man was arrested Thursday in Chicago, authorities said.

Walter Lee Reynolds, 19, was arrested by FBI agents, said Frank J. Storey, special agent in charge of the Kansas City FBI office.

Reynolds, who also is known as James E. Reynolds and Walter Walker, was charged in a federal warrant in December with fleeing Missouri to avoid being prosecuted for an Oct. 11, 1988, murder.

Gary A. Chase, was shot and killed during a robbery outside a bar in Kansas City, Storey said. A second man was wounded in the robbery.

Reynolds also faces charges on two counts of armed criminal action and one count of first-degree assault, Storey said.

KPL receives suggestions

TOPEKA — The National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating five pipeline accidents involving KPL Gas Service, announced recommendations Thursday for the utility to find the cause of natural gas leaks and make needed replacements.

The latest incident involving the company's gas lines came early Wednesday at Topeka, when an explosion at Topeka killed a 75-year-old woman and critically injured her son.

A team of NTSB investigators arrived in Topeka Thursday to join other officials in looking for the cause of the explosion, believed to have been due to a break in a natural gas main.

In Washington, the board released the text of a letter it was sending to KPL Gas Service, citing concern over its safety procedures.

"During our review of their procedures, we could find no evidence that they had a program for planned replacement of service lines based on their history of failure," said Ted Lopatkiewicz, a board spokesman. "When the lines fail, when they develop a leak, they repair them, but they don't try to determine why the develop leaks."

Rains help troubled farmers

WICHITA — Rains this week may be worth millions of dollars to Kansas farmers, but they fell far short of breaking the drought that grips the state, a meteorologist and agricultural observers said Thursday.

"Any moisture on any wheat in the western two-thirds of the state is much needed," said Jim Shroyer, K-State agronomist. "This rain was worth a lot of money — probably millions. If it rains more, the crop will be worth even more money."

Shroyer said moisture now has boosted the crop's yield potential, which has been severely affected by drought stress. During the next 30 days, more moisture is needed to help the crop realize the potential that was revived with this week's rain, Shroyer said.

The wheat will be forming a growing point, the first step to a seed head, in the next few weeks. How the head fills out determines how well the crop will yield and some of its other quality characteristics.

Shroyer still expects yields much lower than usual state averages around 35 bushels per acre.

Student arrested in auto burglaries

By The Collegian Staff

A second K-State student has been arrested by the Riley County Police Department in connection with past auto burglaries on and off campus.

David T. Stenzel, freshman in secondary education, was charged with three counts of burglary and one count of theft when he was arrested at about noon Thursday. He was released from the Riley County Jail at about 1:30 p.m. on $1,000 bond.

Another K-State student, Derrick Tiers, freshman in business administration, was arrested Tuesday night for possessing stolen car stereo equipment and tools that may have been used in auto burglaries.

Lt. Rodney Jager, Riley County investigator, said the two arrests were the result of an ongoing investigation into recent auto burglaries in the county.

Jager said stolen car stereo equipment was recovered in connection with the arrest Thursday, but he was unable to specify the amount of property recovered.

"We've been investigating different suspects, and the investigation is still going on," Jager said.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said campus police "have been doing a lot of extensive work in the last 30 days, and so have the Riley County Police.

"We've both been working on the car burglaries for some time now."

Candidate states role of research

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

The role of sponsored research is to help support and infuse all of the university programs and intertwine graduate education and research together, said Lee Bulla Jr., candidate for the position of vice provost for research and dean of the graduate school.

Bulla, one of six candidates for the newly created position, made his remarks to about 20 people Thursday in the Union at an open forum for students, faculty and staff.

He said the new vice provost "must be first and foremost concerned with academics and must work cohesively with other administrators to help supplement all other sources of research income."

Bulla said the University needs to expand its search for funding needed in research.

"K-State must look beyond the state boundaries of Kansas to help fund research," he said. "It's the national funds and industrial supports that ultimately will enhance our institution."

Bulla said he believes K-State is ready to move forward to promote graduate education and research.

"I believe that we're seeing a new class of institutions based on priority research," he said. "I can see from the way you are re-organizing and revitalizing the things at K-State that you are serious about being in that new class of institutions of higher education.

"I believe Kansas State University has potential because it has the brain trust already here to accomplish the goal of achieving higher excellence."

Bulla is dean of the college of agriculture and professor of microbiology and molecular biology at the University of Wyoming. He earned his bachelor of science in biology and mathematics at Midwestern State University and his Ph.D. in microbiology and biochemistry at Oregon State University.

Provost James Coffman will be making the final decision on the candidates after the selection committee of 15 University officials makes its recommendation.

"I believe that we're seeing a new class of institutions based on priority research."

—Lee Bulla Jr. Vice provost candidate

Elizabeth Unger, chairwoman of the search committee, said the committee does not have a specific deadline for submitting the recommendation, but it hopes to do so by early next week.

"(Bulla) is the last (candidate) in the first round and hopefully we can get someone in the first round," Unger said. "It's kind of a two-faced thing, in the regards that if the provost is interested in (the candidates) and the candidates are interested in the University, we can make a happy marriage."

Unger said that if a candidate is not approved by the provost, a number of different avenues may be pursued.

"There may be a second round or we might even look again at some of the applicants not selected for interviews," Unger said.

She said several characteristics of candidates have been evaluated during the selection process.

"They have to have excellent communication skills and have to had demonstrated high academic accomplishments," she said. "Since this is a new position, it's difficult to determine what qualities are necessary."

Conference to study minorities in education

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to address problems facing minorities in education, a two-day conference will be conducted Sunday and Monday in the Union.

"Status of Minorities in Education: Elementary, Secondary and Post-Secondary" will feature experts in minority education James Boyer, Richard Hope, William Moore and Shirley McCune, said Jeannette Nobo, equity specialist for the educational opportunities program of the Kansas State Department of Education.

The conference was planned by the Department of Education, which joined with universities and colleges from across the state, with a two-fold purpose, Nobo said.

"(The Department of Education) is looking to increase the number of minorities in the education field and also to increase the number of minorities in education period," she said.

Nobo said the percentage of minorities that graduate from high school is high, but that figure does not extend into college.

"(Minorities in education) has been an issue that has been coming on as an important one for quite some time now," she said. "This has occurred primarily because of the changes within our society.

"The minority population is increasing, and indications are that by the year 2000, there may be a majority minority in schools."

Nobo said K-State's minority affairs department has played a large part in planning the conference.

"With as much attention ... being given to the absence of minority students on predominantly white campuses, this is an opportune time to come up with strategies to address those pertinent issues," said Diana Caldwell, minority student development coordinator.

"The task force that was developed on campus is certainly K-State's effort to address the problem," Caldwell said. "But this particular conference will be reaching a wider audience coming from regional areas, and perhaps some sort of impact will result."

One of the main topics the conference will address is the lack of minority role models in today's educational community, Nobo said.

Although the minority population in this country is increasing, there are very few minorities who teach, she said.

"It seems there are a lot of people questioning whether or not there is really a need for role models in the school system," Nobo said. "People end up saying, 'Do we really need a black teacher for a black student, or a Hispanic teacher for a Hispanic student, or a native American teacher for a native American student?'

"(The Kansas Board of Education's) answer to these questions is yes."

In July, the planning committee for the conference saw this need and searched for other issues relevant to minorities in education in order to schedule the conference, Nobo said.

"We had a number of people who had seen what had been happening within campuses and school districts concerning minority issues," she said.

Boyer, professor of curriculum and American ethnic studies, will kick off the conference with the conference title, Caldwell said.

Nobo said a turnout of 150 people from Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa and Colorado is expected.

Although pre-registration has taken place, anyone wanting to attend the conference could register either day, Caldwell said.

Open House chance to see opportunities

Throughout campus, cleaning and polishing are in vogue and even Mother Nature has kicked in a much needed shot of wetness to add a luscious green background for the All-University Open House.

But as the final touches are administered and the campus is ridded of that elusive last cigarette butt, students also should remember to put their collective best foot forward.

K-State's reputation of having a friendly campus atmosphere doesn't come from glitzy marketing campaigns. It comes from word of mouth by people who have actually experienced it.

Open House is one of the prime times the University must live up to its reputation, and the attitude students purvey toward guests of the University is a big part of maintaining that reputation.

The planning and hard work by so many administrators, faculty, staff and, yes, even students, often is not appreciated to its fullest. Open House provides the best chance for people, including students, to see the highlights of every department and school in each college of the University.

So regardless of your level of involvement with Open House, go out and see the finer things your University has to offer.

Other Perspectives

Hoosier. It's a funny-sounding, seven-letter word that has come to designate residents of Indiana. But no one is sure why.

"We're the only state that's had a single nickname and it's ironic. Nobody knows where it came from. There are probably 150 definitions," said Indiana Senate President Pro Tem Robert Garton, R-Columbus.

... "James Whitcomb Riley told the tale ... of a frontier brawl in a log cabin in the Indiana frontier — one of those particularly mean and vicious eye-gouging fights between two men biting, gouging, and pulling their hair. When the fight was over, someone reached out on the hardpacked dirt floor and picked up a piece of bitten and mangled flesh and said, "Who's ear?" said James Madison, professor of history.

Column insults intelligence

Commentary

Saul Flanner
Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Saul Flanner is a sophomore in electrical engineering.

Recently there has been a great deal of controversy concerning Salmon Rushdie's book, "The Satanic Verses." In his column on March 10, Toqir Ahmad poses the question, "does any author have the right to hide behind the words 'freedom of expression' when he defiles and insults a society?"

My answer has got to be "yes." In fact, I don't think that Rushdie is hiding behind anything. He has the guts to write what he thinks. Maybe Ahmad doesn't know it, but those three little words, "freedom of speech," are what allowed him to have his column published.

These are the same three words that allow me to write this rebuttal. In fact, they are what allows a newspaper like the Collegian to exist in the first place.

Also in the column, Ahmad constantly stresses how peace loving the Moslem people are, and he objects to the fact that Rushdie's book does not promote "love, respect, kindness, and understanding."

Since when has that been a requirement for publication? And if the (Fundamentalist) Moslem people love peace so much, why has a price been put on Rushdie's head?

Why is it that employees of WaldenBooks have received death threats ordering them to stop selling the book? Why is it that the Middle East has been in political turmoil for so long?

Are these the criteria for a peace loving society? If so, then give me war any day.

Ahmad states that he is not in favor of the bounty that has been set on Rushdie's head, but he does feel that Rushdie should pay for what he has done. What sort of payment does he have in mind?

Maybe we could rip out all his toenails. Or we could skin him alive, or make him go to bed without dinner for a week.

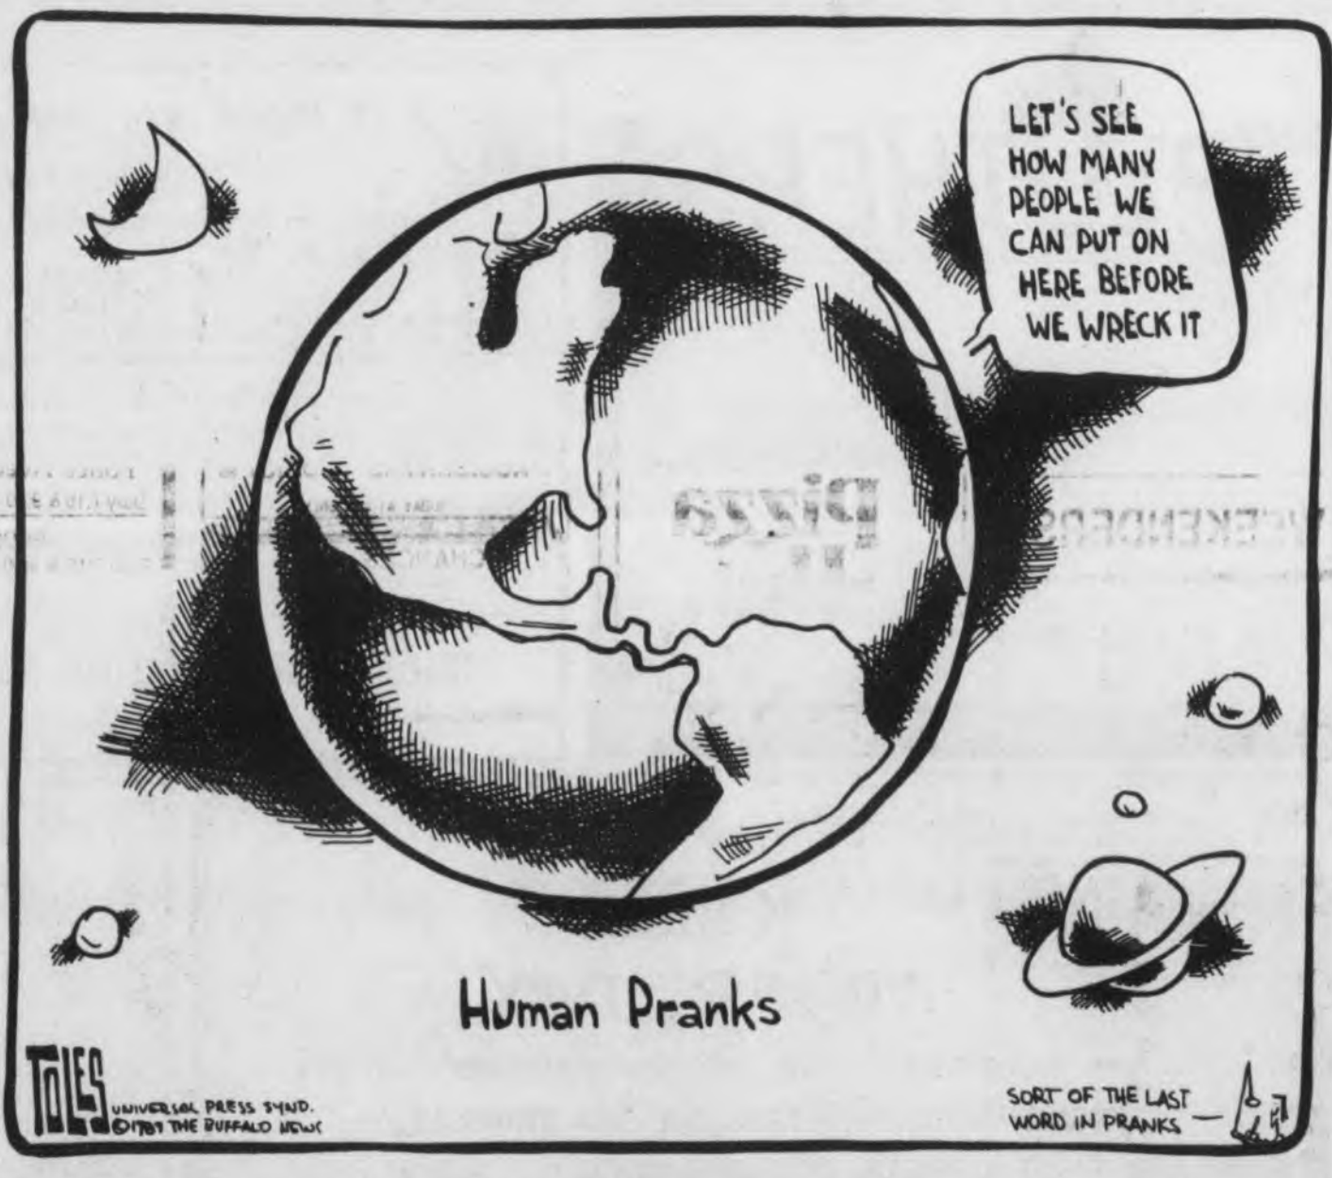
And, if that didn't work, we could always kill him, anyway. After all, he did insult a lot of people. That's surely grounds for capital punishment.

The (Fundamentalist) Moslem community seems to believe that if a (Fundamentalist) Moslem follower were to read Rushdie's book, it would weaken that person's faith in the (Fundamentalist) Moslem teaching.

If people are not strong enough in their faith to receive criticism, then they have no business claiming to be a follower in the first place. I happen to be a Christian, and when I read something that causes me to question my beliefs or look at them in a different light, it usually strengthens my beliefs rather than weakening them.

Personally, I feel that Ahmad's article insulted my intelligence, but you don't see me putting a price on his head.

He has a right to his opinions just like anybody else, and I admire him for having the guts to put those opinions in print.



Freedom of speech is a great liberty, one we often take for granted. This freedom allows me to say, "George Bush is a wimp, the Russian people are all mindless servants of the great evil empire, all engineering students are nerds, or all people with blue eyes are naturally inferior."

Regardless of the accuracy of these statements, it also allows Ahmad the opportunity to refer to Rushdie as a profit-minded hatemonger. Perhaps he should count his blessings that he lives in a society that allows such freedom of expression.

It seems almost ironic that in the time since the Ayatollah issued his demand for Rushdie's head, sales of the book have more than doubled. I, for one, sympathize with Rushdie's plight, and, since I can't aid him in any other way, I think that I will show my support for him by purchasing the book.

That's about all I can say, except that I encourge everyone to buy this book, if for no other reason than to support freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

Oh, by the way, if I have insulted anyone with this article, too bad.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

Changes needed

Editor,

As a second semester environmental design student, I feel the pressures put upon students are far too much for them to handle as freshmen and sophomores. Now I am faced with greater requirements that might prevent me from entering the design program of my choice at the end of my third semester. This is caused by the cap on the number of students allowed to enter each field.

First, I feel many students, including myself, are choosing to devote longer hours in the individual studio classes and therefore deleting extracurricular activities and social life.

Many times students feel they don't have the time to participate in such activities as playing basketball or just going to the recreation center.

Many times students feel if they complete a project, then they deserve a break. But time plays the major role because after completing a project there are always more reading assignments due in another class. This leads to a never-ending cycle of working.

Second, after completing this cycle continuously, students are faced with the fact that they worked so hard to get good grades in studio classes that are only worth two credit hours. This has less impact on the GPA than a three-hour English composition course. This is a greater strain on classes into which you haven't put as much time and effort.

Thirdly, to be accepted into the architecture design program you need to have a substantial GPA of a minimum of 2.5. For all the students who apply, not all of them will get into their desired programs.

This boils down to the fact that I will work hard for two years to gain admittance, but will not know for sure that I'm accepted until the fourth semester. I never know from day to day if I will be in the program in two years.

I feel students should be allowed into their course of study in the beginning, by a tougher requirement of classes and grades from high school, and not be made to re-apply. Students would have the opportunity to remain in the program, depending on a GPA of at least 2.0.

This would allow students to concentrate on individual classes. If students didn't like the program, they could then drop, thus eliminating many students. The pressure would be lifted tremendously.

Engineers arrogant

Editor,

When I first saw the mechanical engineering shirts a few years back that poked fun at the Calvin Club shirts the marketing department sells, I didn't think too much about it.

It was all in good fun, perhaps even displaying a little bit of envy at the neat design of the Calvin Club shirts.

And, over the past four years, I have taken all the insults, the criticism, and the jokes from all the engineers who think their major is so much better than mine in business.

However, I have now seen too much. Shirts are now being sold which blatantly insult business majors. The shirts insinuate that we all have GPAs approaching zero, and that engineers who can't take the heat switch to business.

These shirts only force the gap that exists between the College of Engineering and the rest of the University to become larger than it already is.

In a time when the student body needs to come together, the faculty in engineering are allowing the few greedy individuals selling these shirts to undermine any progress.

Engineers should realize that when we eventually leave K-State and trade our T-shirts and sweatshirts for white collars, that we are going to have to work together.

I urge you not to buy T-shirts that promote such childish arrogancy. It is sad to realize that the juvenile attitudes of so many in engineering have marred the image of K-State engineering to myself and so many others.

Need full stadium

Editor,

The athletic fee would have been nice, but a full football stadium every Saturday this fall would do a lot more for a financially troubled athletic program than any $15 fee.

Education senior studies traditional gospel music

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

Cornelius Cross, senior in elementary education, has started a project studying gospel music or what he calls the "Old 1,000's."

In January, Cross was awarded one of 15 Kansas Folk Arts Apprenticeship Awards given by the Kansas State Historical Society.

He received $1,700 to study the history and sounds of traditional gospel music.

Serving as a master teacher for Cross is James Boyer, professor of curriculum and American ethnics studies. Boyer will assist and supervise Cross in his research.

"Gospel music is a very important part of me," Cross said. "It is an expression of my own feelings and this award gives me an opportunity to learn more about traditional gospel music."

Boyer said Cross is well-versed in contemporary gospel music, but he wants Cross to learn the origin of the music.

"I consider contemporary gospel to be the 'Michael Jackson version' of gospel music," Boyer said. "Traditional gospel had a message that was used to communicate and re-create that which evolved out of slavery."

Cross said he recognizes that today's musicians attract a different audience because they use drumbeat to catch the listener's attention.

"Once (contemporary musicians) get your attention, then they give you the message," he said. "It used to be that the message was the most important part of the music. Gospel singers really sang from the heart."

Cross said he has been involved with gospel music his entire life and developed his vocal background by singing in the church choir.

"My father is a pastor for the Church of God in Christ (in Lawton, Okla.)," Cross said. "There are eight children in our family and we've all taken turns playing instruments for church.

"When one of the children moved away, the next oldest stepped in to play an instrument at church."

Cross said he had little formal music training.

"I took piano lessons for about six years," he said. "I quit when I was 15 or 16.

"Now, I just play from ear. The Lord has blessed my ears so that I can hear a song and then play it. It really is a talent given to me by God."

Cross plays the piano, organ and synthesizer at the Fellowship Temple in Manhattan where Boyer is the leader of the church.

Boyer said he has a collection of Afro-American gospel music and materials for Cross to use as references in his study.

"I bought my first record when I was 10 years old," Boyer said. "It was Afro-American gospel music.

"Records were the way gospel music got transferred throughout the black community back then."

Boyer said Cross will make a formal study of the traditional music through five approaches, including: studying hymns, listening to records, researching archives, viewing videotapes and visiting Nicodemus, the only all-black town in Kansas.

Cross said the study will be completed when he presents a concert June 4, using the material he compiled during his apprenticeship.

Mind reader to perform

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

Craig Karges, an extrasensory perception showman, will perform his Magic of the Mind show at 4 p.m. Saturday in Union Forum Hall in conjunction with All-University Open House, said Mike Penner, program adviser for Union Program Council.

Karges is a national performer and as part of his show he makes tables "walk" and levitate in the air, can read the serial number of a dollar bill when he is blindfolded, and can read minds of audience members and make predictions.

This type of entertainment is rare, Karges said. Of all the members of the International Psychic Entertainers Association, only a small percentage earn a living doing the same type of work, and those touring full-time don't add up to a lot of people.

"I started when I was 12 by doing routine magic tricks and I saw a mentalist perform on television and thought that that would be a good combination of my magic," he said. "Then I found out that my uncle was a vaudevillian and I worked with him to complete my act."

A $10,000 reward is offered to anyone in the crowd who can prove Karges has set up any of his tricks with audience members prior to the performance, he said.

UPC is a member of the National Association of Campus Activities which holds conferences in which performers pay to perform in hopes of getting booked to do their show on college campuses, Penner said.

The UPC executive committee saw Karges perform at a conference in Denver and decided he would present a good show, he said.

"We enjoyed his show and thought that it would go over well as an open house show," said Jill Keever, program coordinator. "It's good family entertainment."

The committee wanted to schedule an event later in the evening but was concerned about attendance because many people go home after the daytime events.

As a member of the NACA, Karges gets most of his bookings from trade shows and conventions put on by the organization. The majority of Karges' shows are on college campuses, but he said he has appeared on the Nashville Network's "Nashville Now" television program.

Karges is also the author of a book, "The Craig Karges Connection," which is sold exclusively to people in his area of performance. It is a book of practical advice for other performers and has been sold in 11 countries.

Karges will be performing teasers from noon and 1 p.m. in the Union Stateroom, Bluemont Room and Courtyard to entice people to become interested in the show.

Tickets will be on sale at the Forum Hall Box Office from noon to 4 p.m. for $2. Tickets may be bought in combination with an all-you-can-eat burger bar after the show for a dollar discount on your ticket purchase.

Midwest sperm in demand

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Long considered a bastion of stability and morality, the Midwest is gaining a reputation for something else: safe sperm.

In Kansas City, Nebraska and Iowa, sperm bank directors report increased calls from doctors on both coasts who are looking for semen from the heartland.

The reason is the perception that the Midwest is a clean, wholesome and healthy place.

In the past two years, frozen semen, used for artificial insemination, has been shipped out of the Midwest like never before.

"We've had requests from as far away as New York," said Elwyn Grimes, director of the Midwest Fertility Foundation and Laboratory Inc. in Kansas City. "There could be a perception that there are more high-risk individuals in some of the larger metropolitan areas."

Company gives 'outstanding' performance

Dancers' repetoire compelling

By Nancy Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

Students, dancers, children, parents, and grandparents left McCain Auditorium on Thursday evening feeling as if they had just seen a show unlike any they had seen before.

The David Parsons Company gave an outstanding performance to an audience of about 1,300.

Founded in 1985, the company is composed of eight dancers and has a repertoir of 13 works, five of which were performed Thursday evening.

Review

Parsons, the artistic director of the company, was born in Illinois and raised in Kansas City, Mo.

The company has performed its style of modern dance across the United States as well as Australia, Brazil, England and Israel.

As the dancers appeared on a bare stage, dressed completely in black, including hoods, the audience knew it was in for a different type of dance performance.

The first piece, "The Envelope," was a whimsical journey following the flight of an envelope from dancer to dancer. At one point a dancer took the form of a frog. He was so convincing in his portrayal that it would have been no surprise if he sucked a fly out of the air.

At the end of the first performance the dancers received an ovation longer than some plays have received.

The audience chuckled during "Sleep Study," a humorous piece devoted to restless sleepers. The dancers' bodies kept perfect time to the music as each dancer rolled across the floor and at times across each other. At times they resembled worms inching their way across the stage into formations.

Their execution and synchronization was so flawless that it was as if their bodies were connected to the sound system. To the eye, their movements seemed completely effortless, like that of a child, yet the mind and body knew it was extremely difficult to execute.

Gary Chryst's performance of a piece titled "Caught" drew gasps of astonishment from the crowd. He perfectly timed leaps to coincide with the flash of a strobe light, thus creating the illusion that he was flying through the air. The effect was magnificent.

Even from the upper balcony, it was possible to see the extreme muscle definition of this accomplished dancer's body.

For 10 years, Chryst was a principal dancer with the famed Joffrey Ballet, performing in New York, the Soviet Union, London and Vienna.

The lighting, designed by Howell Binkley, was incredible and added much to the performance. It was executed extremely well, which is a treat considering that lighting is often a troubled technical area at McCain perfomances.

The music was equally as wonderful and did much to set the mood for each selection.

Staff/Brian Kratzer

Gary Chryst, of the David Parsons Company, rehearses Thursday afternoon in McCain Auditorium. The company, which was founded in 1985, has eight dancers. The double image is the result of Chryst being illuminated twice by a stobe light in the darkened auditorium.

Rich, played by Tony Espinosa, listens as his companion Saul, played by Michael Kinney, speaks about Rich's imminent death from AIDS in the play "As Is," which continues through Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

'As Is' challenging for cast members

Any play involves challenges for the cast and crew. Acting is, by definition, taking on the characteristics of another. The actors and crew of "As Is" had to take radical departures from their own realities to assume the roles of homosexuals, acquired immune deficiency syndrome patients, and drug dealers.

"As Is" begins with a monologue by a woman who has nursed many people as they died in the hospice where she works. The action quickly shifts to another setting as Rich, a homosexual writer, tells Saul, his former lover, that he is dying of AIDS. Then Rich and Saul's relationship is traced through flashbacks, culminating in an emotional scene in Rich's hospital room in the same hospice where the play began.

The play is the thesis project of director Tom McLaughlin, graduate student in theater. He said he chose "As Is," written by William Hoffman, partly because of the special challenges involved with its production.

Transitions in time and setting in the play are shown through shifts in lighting and music. The settings change quickly and include a gay bar, Rich and Saul's apartment, and a group therapy session for AIDS victims.

"There is no unity of time or space in the play and most of the actors change roles many times, so it is an unusual play," McLaughlin said. "Some of the actors are playing homosexuals and at first they were uncomfortable because they aren't homosexual. We've had to get them in a totally different mindset to play these characters."

McLaughlin said to help the actors get in touch with the characters they had to portray, he implemented many improvisational techniques.

During one practice session, each actor stood, eyes closed, in the center of a circle formed by the other actors. They yelled insulting remarks at the actor in the center, then taunted and teased him or her. McLaughlin said this was to help them understand the isolation an AIDS victim feels.

"It has been beneficial to use improvisation," McLaughlin said. "It really fills in the gaps. We performed several scenes that don't appear in the play so the actors could understand their motivation."

Wendy Walburn, junior in theater, portrays four characters in the play, including an AIDS victim who is eight months pregnant. She said she had done extra practice wearing her prop pregnancy stomach to get used to it.

"It's a wierd feeling because I've never been pregnant," she said. "Practice and improvisation really helps. The cast is really close because we've done so much improv together."

Sean Jendlin, sophomore in graphic arts, portrays six characters, including homosexuals and a drug dealer. He said understanding his characters was difficult at first.

"To get that intensity that I think homosexuals have for the same sex, I have to picture (the actor) who plays my character's lover as a girl and that's hard to do," Jendlin said. "It's like you have to be in a different state of mind. It's kind of hard to look at a friend and pretend he's your lover."

Jendlin said he was drawn to audition for the play because of its unusual subject matter.

"To be in something like this is great because it's so controversial," he said. "People are going to be talking about it. It's not your typical nice show."

Jendlin said many of his fraternity brothers, as well as many other people he knows, are planning to attend the play and that may be embarrassing.

"It's kind of nerve-racking to think about what it's going to be like after this — the jokes and comments — but it's not me. I'm playing characters on a stage."

Joel Pollock, senior in technical theater, is the makeup artist for the play. He said the makeup for Tony Espinosa, freshman in theater, whose character is shown in the late stages of AIDS, proved to be a special challenge. He studied photographs of AIDS victims to help achieve the right effect.

"Showing the progression of the illness is very important," Pollock said. "By the end of the play, I had to bring the facial structure bones out more. The elasticity of his skin is supposed to be gone so you can see his bones through the skin."

Walburn said she thought the play has an important message.

"I think people are afraid of AIDS," Walburn said. "Even if they come to this play with a closed mind, it may open their eyes to the disease."

The play opened Thursday in the Purple Masque Theatre and performances will continue at 8 p.m. today and Saturday. Admission is $1 with a student ID and $2 for the general public.

Two customers in a leather bar, played by Lance Schwulst and Sean Jendlin, check each other out. Each actor played several characters in the lives of Rich and Saul.

Friends gather in Rich's room to visit while a nurse checks his temperature.

History, tradition surround local landmarks

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

On the KS Hill, the K was built in 1921 and the S was added in 1930. In 1927, Kiwanis members built the 30-foot high letters of Manhattan on Bluemont Hill for $128.

They are subtle in a way, yet the whitewashed rocks that linger above Manhattan spelling the name of the city and "KS" still exist - and have for many years.

The earliest record of consideration for such a structure's construction was in 1915, said Jeanne Mithen, librarian for Riley County Historical Society.

"In the April 17, 1915, issue of The Industrialist, the college paper at that time, it was stated that four classes of the College of Engineering were planning to build a 60 feet wide by 75 feet high 'K' on Prospect Hill," Mithen said.

But the "K" was not built until 1921 when the Civil Engineering Society planned the construction, she said.

According to the book "Legacy: Engineering at Kansas State University," about 1,000 men worked on the project. Students were to be excused from classes at different times of the day to work on the "K" in an organized way.

"Apparently, it did not work out quite according to plan. Students met in Aggieville and marched to Prospect Hill led by a brass band," according to "Legacy."

The size of the letter is 80 feet long, 60 feet wide, one foot deep and cost $350.

Despite hopes of engineering students, the "S" was not built until 1930 when Sigma Tau honorary engineering fraternity organized the project, according to the Collegian.

"Working in a steady downpour of rain, 500 students built a $500 'S' in 1930. ... The project was student financed," the Legacy stated.

"Raising the money became a major effort for engineers. The fraternity sponsored tag day, movies, boxing matches and promoted donations from everyone they could think of — faculty, businessmen and $125 from the Seminar treasury."

In 1937, Sigma Tau began a movement to acquire the title to the land but was not successful until the spring of 1946.

"In an all-school assembly on Oct. 16, 1947, the deed was presented to the college by Professor L.V. White, faculty adviser to Sigma Tau and consistent promoter of the project for 10 years," according to "Legacy."

In 1964, the members of Sigma Tau discussed the possibility of adding the letter "U" to the hill, but the estimated cost of $10,000 deterred the group, Mithen said.

While the engineers of K-State were busy creating the "KS," the local chapter of Kiwanis began constructing the "Manhattan" sign on Bluemont Hill.

In 1927, 25 members of the club built the 30 feet high letters for $128, said Leonard Fuller, Kiwanis secretary.

Jay McGehe, a 50-year member, said the letters were a service project to identify Manhattan.

"It's up on city property," McGehe said. "It is sort of an advertisement for the town."

Maintaining the letters is an on-going project for Kiwanis. Every year they whitewash the letters, cut the grass and clean the hill.

The letters have been re-built a number of times, McGehe said. Because it is a community project, the city has cooperated by helping with the cost.

"I can attest to the fact that the letters must have been difficult to construct after helping with the whitewash process," Fuller said.

"Unfortunately, in between whitewashes, vandals paint all over the letters," he said.

Circle K International, a University group formed 15 years ago and sponsored by Kiwanis, has helped maintain the hill.

The letters on K-Hill have been maintained by a group affiliated with the original constructors, said Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering.

The Sigma Tau pledge class was responsible for whitewashing the letters until the late '70s, Rathbone said. At that time, Sigma Tau lapsed and Tau Beta Pi took its place.

"The entire pledge class whitewashes the letters once a year during the fall semester," said Michael Armour, Tau Beta Pi president and junior in chemical engineering.

SEXUALLY transmitted diseases

Sexually transmitted diseases, -VD and the clap are names for problems some people would rather not think about.

"It's a big denial game with college students," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center. "It's admitting that they are sexually active and doing something that their parents said they weren't supposed to do until they got married."

Seventy-five percent of the students are sexually active before they attend K-State, and 95 percent of the students become sexually active before they graduate, Burke said.

"It's a fact of life," she said.

"Students may think they are too good to have anything like (a sexual disease) happen to them," Burke said. "Often these individuals are the people who contract a sexually transmitted disease."

She said the students who do not take precautions may be the individuals who deny they have an STD, fail to get medical attention and fail to inform their partners.

Dr. Thomas Ryan, physician at Lafene, said although STDs affect both sexes, women should be particularly careful.

"Women really bear the brunt of most sexually transmitted diseases," Ryan said. "Some of the physical symptoms associated with some STDs are more readily visible in males than females and the effects of some of the diseases are more drastic in females."

Not every STD has detectable signs of infection. Unless diagnosed during an examination, the disease may develop into a dangerous condition.

Lafemme Clinic at Lafene routinely tests patients for chlamydia and gonorrhea as part of the examination, Ryan said.

"The tests are inexpensive and well worth it if we can catch just one person with one of these diseases," he said.

After the chlamydia or gonorrhea tests are completed, the test results are available in three or four days, Ryan said.

"Since we have been screening female patients, we have picked up many people who had chlamydia and were showing no visible symptoms," Burke said.

"We encourage everyone to (have the tests done), because unless both you and your partner have been mutually monogamous for all your lives, you are at risk," Ryan said.

"The more (sexual) partners an individual has the more he or she is at risk of getting one of these diseases," he said. "I'd like to see people with an active sex life and multiple partners come in and be tested for STDs every three months."

Lisa White, disease intervention specialist with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said frequent examinations allow a patient who has contracted a treatable STD to be treated before complications develop.

If a test is positive, the physician must report the patient's name and the disease to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

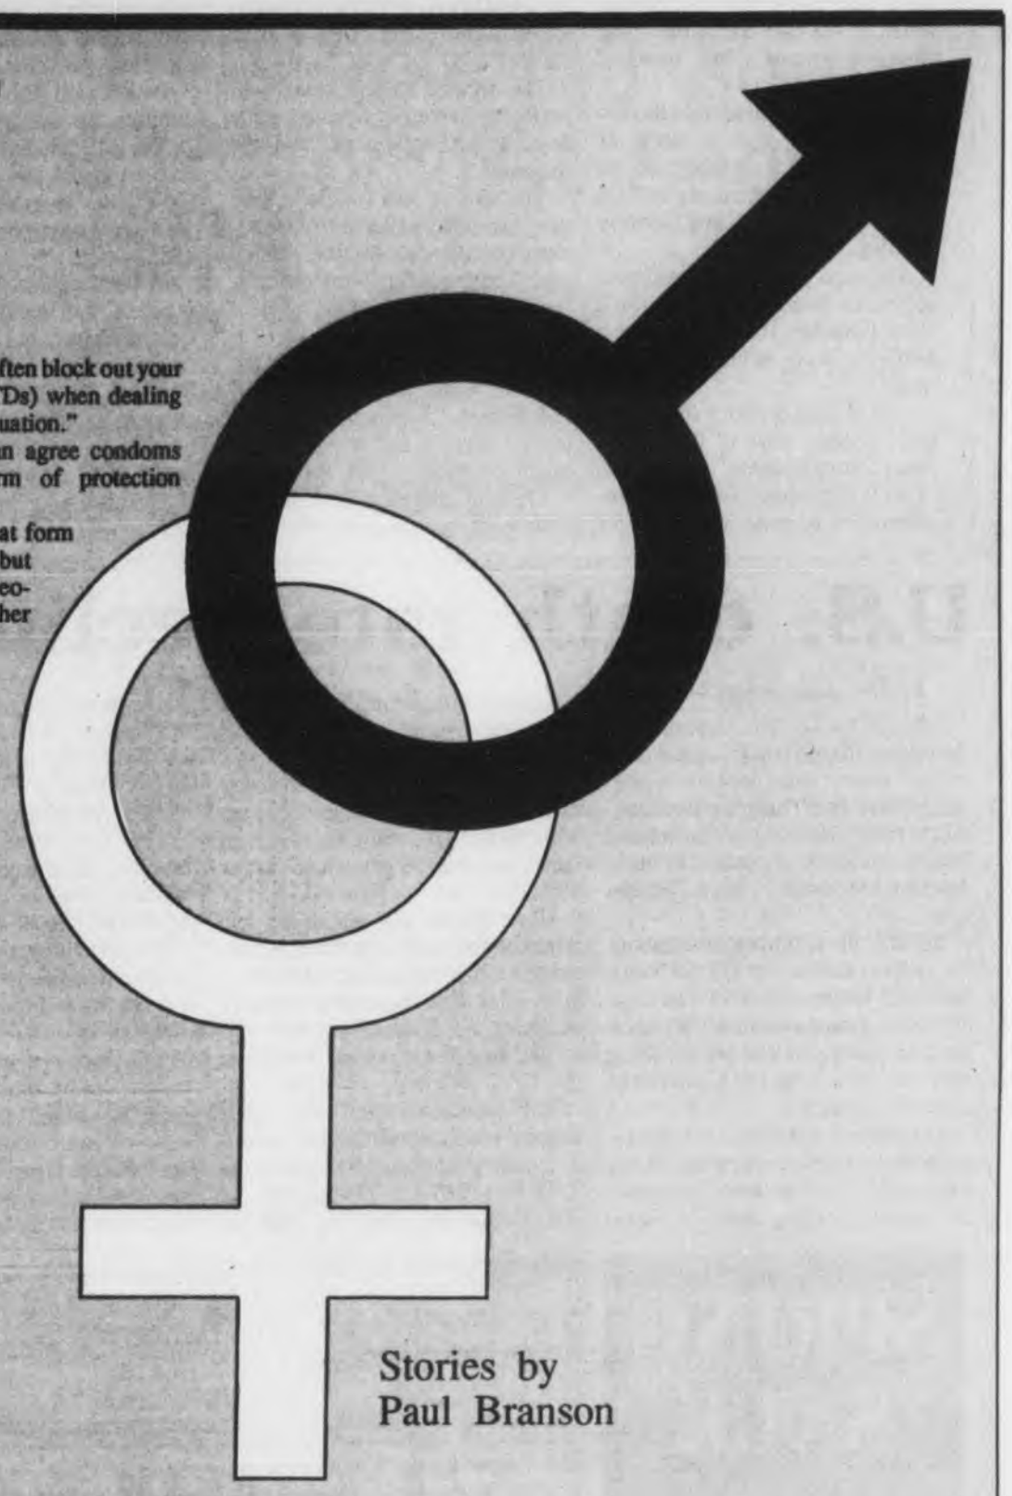
White contacts the confirmed STD carriers and educates them about the disease and its treatment.

"(The department) also elicits a sexual history," she said. "It's my job to get in touch with the patient's sexual partners and advise them of the risk."

The information is "kept in the strictest of confidence," White said.

Confidentiality begins with the initial testing from the physician, Burk said.

If a professor, friend or parent asks if a patient has been checked for an STD, Lafene personnel cannot discuss the patient's records unless written permission was obtained from the individual, she said.



Burke said education and protection are the keys to controlling the spread of STDs.

"When you look at the gamut of sexuality issues, whether it's unwanted pregnancies, sexually transmitted diseases or contraception, if you took a poll, college students say they are well educated in these areas," she said. "But if you look at the numbers of unwanted pregnancies and STD cases, apparently the knowledge and actions play different roles.

"Feelings will often block out your knowledge (of STDs) when dealing with a sexual situation."

Burke and Ryan agree condoms are the best form of protection available.

"The pill is a great form of birth control, but sexually active people need to take other precautions," Ryan said.

Treatment prevents complications

Age group between 15 and 30 represents 85 percent of America's reported cases

A case of sexually transmitted disease occurs every three seconds, and more than 10 million cases are detected in the United States each year.

Of the reported cases, 85 percent are diagnosed in people between the ages of 15 and 30, according to the American Social Health Association.

The following descriptions of symptoms, complications and treatments offered by Lafene Student Health Center are of the most common sexually transmitted diseases.

Chlamydia

Caused by a bacteria, chlamydia is similar to a virus, which infects the urethra in men and the cervix in women.

The disease can be transmitted by contact with mucous membranes in the vagina, mouth, eyes, urethra or rectum.

In many cases there are no noticeable symptoms; however, a yellow discharge in both sexes may be a visible sign of the disease.

Dr. Thomas Ryan, physician at Lafene Student Health Center, said chlamydia is a particularly insidious disease which can cause pelvic inflammatory disease in females. PID can cause infertility and, if left untreated, death.

Chlamydia tests cost $15, and if the diseases is detected, it can be treated with antibiotics.

Gonorrhea

Gonorrhea is a bacterial disease which is transmitted to an estimated 2 million Americans each year.

Both men and women may experience burning during urination and an abnormal amount of urethral or vaginal discharge. Women may experience abnormal menstruation or abdominal pain.

These symptoms do not always occur.

Both men and women risk sterility and other inflammatory diseases such as arthritis and dermatitis if the disease goes unchecked.

Lafene can test individuals for gonorrhea by two different methods. One test is done in conjuction with the Pap smear and is known as a G.C. and costs $6. The other type is called the Gram stain and costs $7.

Antibiotics treat gonorrhea.

Human papilloma virus

"Five to 10 million people in the United States are currently infected by HPV (genital warts), and at K-State there have been 58 female students infected by the virus over the past year," Ryan said.

He did not have statistics to document the number of HPV-infected males.

Complications could result from failure to seek treatment. He said HPV can be a major contributor to cervical cancer with a particularly high risk for sexually active young to middle-aged women.

"HPV is in no way related to the (acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus)," Ryan said. "AIDS is far more devastating because it's always fatal, but if HPV isn't treated, it can also be fatal."

Symptoms include the appearance of pink or reddish warts with cauliflower-like tops on the genitals one to three months after the infection.

The visible warts and lesions caused by HPV often appear to be benign, but they can become cancerous. If a physician detects the disease before the warts or lesions become cancerous, they can be surgically removed or treated chemically or cryogenically, Ryan said.

Doctors can remove the warts or lesions with lasers, but laser treatment is very rare, and it's not done at Lafene, he said.

Genital herpes

Genital herpes is a viral disease. People contracting herpes not only suffer from its effects but are a carrier of herpes for life.

If contracted, the individual may experience a burning sensation during urination, fever and flu-like symptoms. In addition, shallow lesions and single or multiple blisters on or around the genital area may develop and rupture.

The first occurrence of blisters lasts for about 12 days. Subsequent attacks, which can occur periodically for the rest of the patient's life, are usually milder and last only four to five days.

The disease can attack the nervous system and cause meningitis. Females infected by herpes may have an increased risk of cervical cancer.

"A common misconception is that genital herpes can only be contracted through sexual intercourse," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene.

Many students do not realize that cold sores could spread the disease during oral sex, Burke said.

Lafene's test for herpes costs $33.

A physician can prescribe medicine which may suppress the disease or make its effects milder, but no cure is known.

Syphilis

Syphilis was one of the most feared diseases before the discovery of penicillin, which has decreased the prominence of the disease. More than 32,000 cases are reported in the United States each year.

After becoming infected, an ulcer (a chancre sore) appears at the exposure site where syphilis bacteria entered the body. The site is usually on the genitals but may develop in the mouth or anus. The ulcer is a sign of the first of three phases of untreated syphilis. This ulcer is normally painless and will disappear without treatment.

Discharge from the ulcer is contagious.

The primary symptom of the second phase, which starts six to 10 weeks after exposure if the disease goes untreated, is a rash on various parts of the body including the soles of the feet and the palms. Enlarged lymph nodes such as the nodes on the neck, under arms, and in groin areas may be symptoms, as well as a possible fever and sore throat.

The third phase could appear one to 20 years after the initial exposure. During this phase, the bacteria have been dispersed throughout the body and are attacking other areas, including the nervous system and cardiac tissue.

Ulcers on the skin and internal organs, arthritis, and loss of feeling in arms and legs may develop. Phase three is fatal if untreated.

The test for syphilis at Lafene costs $5.

Antibiotics treat the disease.

Pubic lice and scabies

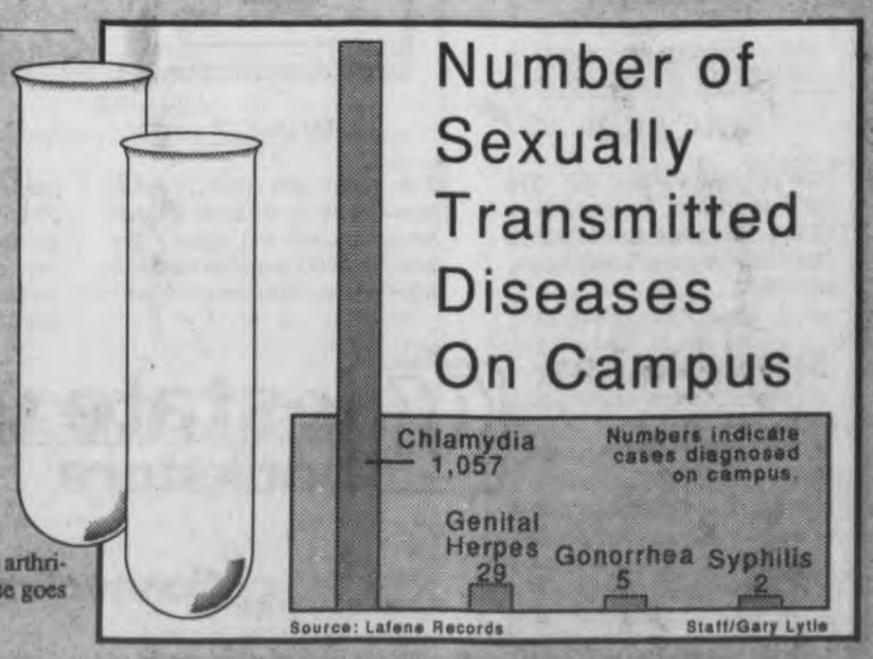
Pubic lice and scabies are infestations of lice and mites, respectively.

The infestations are characterized by itching in the pubic area and seeing the parasites and their eggs cling to pubic hairs beginning four to six weeks after infestation.

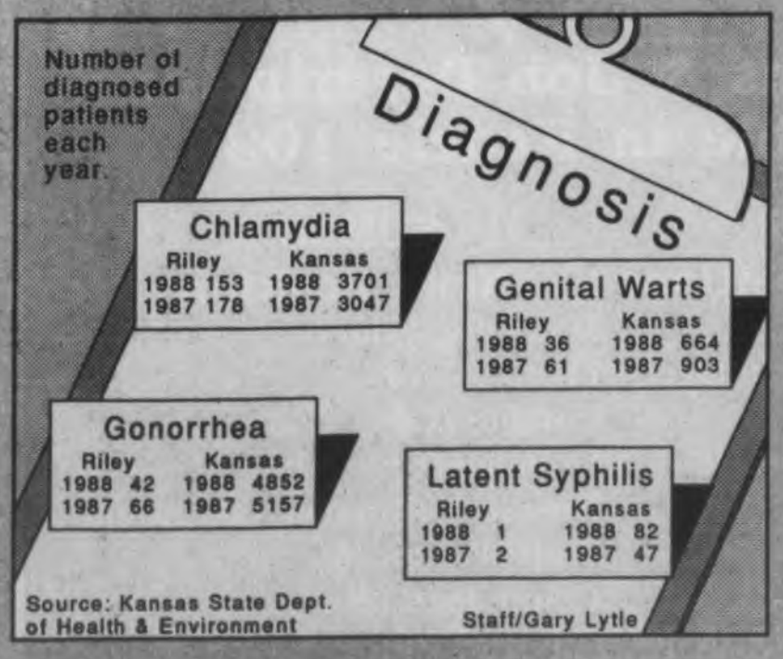
If untreated, scratching of the parasites and the subsequent lesions can cause infection.

Lindane lotion or cream can be applied to the affected area to kill the parasites. The eggs should be removed from articles the person has contacted including sheets and clothing, which should be disinfected by washing in hot water, dry cleaning or removing them from human exposure for two weeks.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome



The virus that causes AIDS and AIDS-related diseases is called Human Immunodeficiency Virus. HIV attacks the immune system and leaves the host individual open to contracting diseases which the body would normally resist.



HIV is passed through the exchange of bodily fluids and can incubate in the body for as many as 14 years.

Most people diagnosed with AIDS die within the first 18 months after the initial appearance of symptoms.

Lafene can test for HIV. The test costs $25.

No cure is known for the AIDS virus.

Singers to present 'SpringShow'

By Steve Logback
Collegain Reporter

The K-State Singers will present their annual "SpringShow" at 8 p.m. today and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Although the singers present about 50 shows each school year, this is one of the few productions which is open to the public. The group is in its 35th year of performing.

Gerald Polich, associate professor of music and director of "SpringShow," said the concert will include arrangements of "All of Me," "Satin Doll" and "Stormy Weather."

A special presentation will also be given in honor of Irving Berlin's 100th birthday. This will include a medley of many of his well-known songs.

"We'll take portions (of songs) and highlight some of the singers doing solos and duets," Polich said. "This is one of our few public performances because most are for Chamber of Commerce-type events. "SpringShow" has a variety of energetic and enthusiastic music and should be a good time for all."

In addition to several solos and small ensemble acts, the show will spotlight the men in the group with their renditions of "Countdown to Love" and "Do you Wanna Dance."

The women in the group will perform of a medley of songs made popular by Diana Ross and the Supremes.

The singers will conclude their program with a collection of television commercial jingles, Polich said. The group has been performing the jingles for the past seven or eight years, he said.

"I think we got the idea (for the jingles) from Barry Manilow," Polich said. "A bunch of us were talking about it and we thought it might be fun."

Michael Franklin, senior in finance, is in his second year with the group.

"It's one of our biggest shows of the year," Franklin said. "It's unique because it gives everybody a chance to do solos and duets."

Membership in the group is limited to non-music majors and includes 12 vocalists, guitarists, a percussionist, a pianist and a sound technician. Freshmen are not eligible.

Polich said 100 to 135 people audition for the group each year.

The K-State Singers have performed at the past three World's Fairs. Their most recent invitation was to Vancouver, Canada, in 1986.

In addition to performing in most of the major cities in the United States, the ensemble has toured seven times for the United Service Organization and the Department of Defense to military bases in Europe, the Orient and the Arctic.

Tickets for the performances are $5.

Arnold Air Society wins national squadron award

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's Lt. Lloyd B. Vorhies squadron of the Arnold Air Society returned from the society's annual national convention in Colorado Springs, Colo., smiling.

"For the second year in a row, the Lt. Lloyd B. Vorhies squadron from K-State was recognized by its peers as being the most outstanding medium-sized squadron in the nation," said George LaVezzi, squadron public affairs officer.

For this accomplishment, the squadron received the Hagen Trophy for the depth and scope of its 30 service projects. The projects included: raising $22,000 for the campus Vietnam Veteran's Memorial, working as volunteers at the K-State bloodmobile, working at the Arts and Sciences Telefund and working at a Flint Hills Festival booth to raise money for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, LaVezzi said.

Fourteen cadets from the squadron flew to Colorado Springs on Friday, courtesy of the 117th Air Refueling Squadron of the Kansas Air National Guard stationed in Topeka, he said.

"During the convention, a business session was held to decide the joint national project for 1989-90," LaVezzi said. "This year's project will be to work with underprivileged children."

"Once a year, all Arnold Air Societies receive national guidance to pick projects that need help and meet Arnold Air Society's goals," said Capt. John Taglieri, the squadron adviser.

The squadron has also been elected as this year's area headquarters, Taglieri said.

"As area headquarters, the squadron is tasked with coordinating activities for Arnold Air Societies in the states of Nebraska, Oklahoma and Kansas," he said.

"The squadron will check on other squadrons' administrations to be sure this year's award packets are being completed and submitted for competition," Taglieri said.

U.S. death rate declining

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The overall U.S. death rate dropped by 8 percent over seven years, but federal health researchers said Thursday that mortality rates from smoking-related lung disease keep increasing as those diseases kill smokers from decades ago.

In 1986, the nation recorded about 2.1 million deaths, or 873 for every 100,000 Americans. That rate is a drop of 8 percent from 1979, when the rate was about 950 per 100,000, said researchers at the Centers for Disease Control.

The decline, the CDC said, is partially due to decreases in the death rates from coronary heart disease — the nation's leading cause of death, accounting for about 593,000 fatalities a year — and stroke, which kills 125,000 people a year.

The mortality rate from heart disease fell 18 percent to 227 per 100,000 in 1986, while the rate from stroke dropped 26 percent, to 56 per 100,000.

Heart disease and stroke are two illnesses for which smoking is considered a risk factor. But while mortality rates from those illnesses were declining, death rates from smoking-related lung diseases were on the rise, the CDC reported.

The mortality rate from lung cancer, which kills 126,000 Americans each year, rose 15 percent from 1979 to 1986, to 50 deaths per 100,000 people. And the rate for smoking-related lung diseases other than cancer — such as emphysema and bronchitis — rose 33 percent, to 28 per 100,000. Those diseases kill 71,000 Americans a year.

The CDC's report also noted trends in other causes of death. The mortality rate for colorectal cancer, which kills 56,000 people a year, fell 7 percent to 22 per 100,000. The rate for breast cancer, which kills 41,000 a year, rose 5 percent, to 16 per 100,000.

The drop in heart disease and stroke deaths and the increase in smoking-related lung disease deaths, even though both types of illnesses are linked to cigarettes, "suggest that shared risk factors may have different effects," the CDC said.

KSU Invitational to see 11 teams

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Saturday at R.V. Christian Track, John Capriotti will be hoping to find out how well his K-State track teams have improved after a two-week layoff. The Wildcats will play host to the KSU Invitational which will also include Nebraska, Wichita State, Kearney (Neb.) State, Morningside (Iowa) College, Pittsburg State, Southwest Missouri State, Haskell Indian College, and Kansas community colleges from Johnson, Barton and Cloud counties.

Staff/Greg Vogel

Wildcat thrower Dan O'Mara practices Thursday at the R.V. Christian Track in preparation for Saturday's KSU Invitational. O'Mara may compete Saturday in three events — the javelin, discus and shot put.

Capriotti said team scores will not be kept because "it's still early and a lot of teams come to this meet and run people in odd races — the shorter races; like the milers will run the half and the 1,500-meter runners will run the mile.

"It's just a tune-up meet to get ready for all the other meets."

The K-State women have been bothered by injuries in both the indoor and outdoor seasons. Capriotti will retain the services of distance runners Angie Barry and Janet Treiber on Saturday. Both missed the indoor season with Barry suffering from a nerve impingement in her ankle while Treiber was nursing a stress fracture in her foot.

Capriotti has decided to redshirt two other K-State distance runners due to injuries. Freshman sensation Janet Haskin will gain an extra year of outdoor competition while nursing a stress fracture in her heel and sophomore Laura Ostmeyer will have a full year of added eligibility after missing the entire year with a stress fracture in her foot.

Sprinter Markeya Jones, who suffered a pulled hamstring at the Big Eight Indoor, will also sit out this weekend's competition. She will compete April 8 at the Washington State Triangular.

On the men's side, sprinter Ray Hill will also wait one more week before returning to competition at Pullman, Wash. Hill suffered a similar injury to Jones' hamstring pull at the NCAA Indoor Championships.

The 'Cats top thrower, Dan O'Mara, may try an interesting triple Saturday by competing in the javelin, shot put and discus.

"We're still in a heavy training schedule. We just want to compete and we'll use this meet to evaluate everyone," Capriotti said. "We should be able to tell where we are at this point and decide who we'll take to Washington State."

Field events begin at 10 a.m. Saturday at the R.V Christian Track and running events are scheduled to start at 11 a.m.

After taking two weeks off, from Saturday through the rest of the season, the K-State track squad will be in action every weekend until the NCAA Outdoor June 1-3.

Baseball squad to visit Sooners

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

After battling mostly non-conference opposition and the Kansas' less-than-suitable baseball climate for nearly a month, K-State coach Mike Clark takes his squad south today to begin the Big Eight portion of its schedule with a four-game weekend set against the Oklahoma Sooners.

The Wildcats are riding a six-game winning streak and have won 10 of their past 11. Their 15-3 mark ties the best start of a K-State team since 1979. The 'Cats come into the series after disposing of NAIA opponent Fort Hays State in a doubleheader Wednesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field, winning 19-8 and 9-3.

Despite the fast start, trips to L. Dale Mitchell Park, home of the Sooners, have not been pleasant for the Wildcats in the '80s. Oklahoma has won 16 straight meetings in Norman dating back to 1981, and have won 22 of the past 23 series matchups. K-State's lone win against OU in the past eight years was a 3-2 decision last season in Manhattan.

"It's a great opportunity for us to go down there and put an end to that streak," Clark said. "Plus, we'll get four games against some high quality competition under our belts."

The Sooners enter the matchup with a 15-6 record. Clark calls the OU record misleading because "most of the losses have come against top-20 caliber competition."

"Their strengths are that they've got great arms," Clark said. "Statistically, their pitching numbers are so-so, but they've got some of the best pitchers in the Big Eight. They've been hitting the long ball well all year, also."

Hitting and scoring have been Wildcat strengths as well. K-State enters the game with a .321 team batting average and has scored 147 runs for an average of 8.2 per game. Senior Bill Barnard led the attack in Wednesday's twin bill, going 7-for-9 with eight RBIs. Junior Rusty Ringgenberg is fourth among Big Eight hitters with a .439 batting average.

Defensively, the Wildcats have made improvements in both pitching and fielding. K-State's pitching staff has an ERA of 4.52 entering Big Eight play, a noticeable difference from last year's mark of 7.19. The biggest turnaround may be in the field, where the 'Cats lead the conference in fielding percentage at .965. Last year, K-State was in the league's cellar at .939.

Each pitcher in Clark's rotation will see action this weekend, with Jim Haller throwing the opening game at 7 tonight. David Hierholzer and Jeff Peterson are slated to pitch in Saturday's doubleheader which begins at 5 p.m., and Jim McClellan is slated for a 2 p.m. start Sunday.

"We're about where we want to be right now," Clark said. "Everything that we've wanted to have happen pretty much has, but I would have liked to play a few more non-conference games to get our depth people some playing time. But there's not a lot you can do against Mother Nature."

Tennis squad to open conference schedule

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

This weekend will be the Big Eight Conference opener for the Wildcat women's tennis team as it travels to Missouri for an 11 a.m. dual Sunday in Columbia.

Although Mizzou may not be one of the strongest teams in the conference, the match is important because of the Big Eight format. Rankings at the end of the season are based on the total points won in dual matches as well as at the conference tournament.

"Team-wise, they may not be a big threat, but individually, keeping in mind the point system, it's important for all of our players to make a good effort," K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said. "It's really a month-long tournament when you consider the format."

Bietau has several goals for the remainder of the season. They include finishing in the top half of the Big Eight and improving upon the Wildcats' sixth-place finish last year. Along with that, he hopes to take advantage of the opportunity to more than double their points at the tournament. Bietau said he would also like the team to continue improving and play its best tennis at the end.

Practices have been shorter in the past week, and more emphasis has been placed on quality, rather than quantity.

"Keeping that in mind, we've structured things in a way that we're not spending a lot of time on the court right now," Bietau said. "I think there's a direct correlation between doing a good job with studying, doing a good job in the weight room and doing a good job on the tennis court."

The main concern at this point is to do some "fine tuning" and to avoid any injury situations, Bietau said. The lineup is fairly set, as players must compete in at least four matches at one position to be eligible for a seed in the tournament. Marijke Nel is in the top singles spot, followed by Helen Schildknecht at No. 2, Sara Hancock at No. 3, Valerie Rive at No. 4, Thresa Burcham at No. 5, and team captain Annika Emtell at No. 6.

In the doubles lineup, the No. 1 threat will be the combination of Schildknecht and Hancock, who will pair up for the first time since last fall. They teamed up at Midland (Texas) Junior College to win the No. 2 doubles title at the national junior college meet in 1987. The Nel/Rive duo will stay at No. 2, while Burcham and Emtell are at No. 3.

"I think the players are comfortable with this," he said. "We'll be one of the better three teams in the conference."

Play continues through next week as the 'Cats go up against the three top schools in the conference. Kansas will be in town on Wednesday, and K-State has two more home matches against Oklahoma State and Oklahoma on April 9 and 10, respectively.

After 37 years Illini in Final 4

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Illinois arrived at the Final Four Thursday, two hours late according to the clock and at least two years late according to the critics.

But that's OK with Lou Henson, whose rather unorthodox way of thinking says he must be a good coach even if he didn't always win when people expected him to.

Henson doesn't take it personally and doesn't feel vindicated now that, after a pair of embarassing stumbles the past two seasons, his team is in the Final Four.

"You have to remember this: They say that about anybody with good teams," Henson said after the Fighting Illini arrived in Seattle. "If you get to the NCAAs the way we have the last nine or 10 years and you don't get in the Final Four, sooner or later they're going to say, 'Can the coach get them there.' "

Two seasons ago, Henson's team was stunned in the first round by Austin Peay. Last year, it was a second-round loss to Villanova.

For seven straight seasons, the Illini have made the NCAA tournament but fell short of the Final Four.

But this year, the team won the Midwest Region, beating Syracuse, 89-86, in the final in Minneapolis to become the only No. 1 seed to make it to Seattle. The third-ranked Illini, 31-4, meet Big Ten Conference rival Michigan , a team they already have beaten twice, in the semifinals Saturday at the Kingdome.

Illinois is making its first Final Four appearance in 37 years, but Henson is making his second. His New Mexico State team lost to eventual champion UCLA in the semifinals in 1970.

Sanders expected to apply for draft

By The Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders has talked with an agent and likely will turn pro, testing the NFL's restrictions against drafting underclassmen, The Associated Press learned Thursday.

A pro football source said Sanders will be represented by David Ware, an Atlanta-based agent, to negotiate his contract. However, it wasn't clear whether he had formally signed with Ware.

Neither Sanders nor his parents were available for comment. Ware was also unavailable.

Sanders, a running back, will announce his decision at news conference in Denver on Saturday.

Joni Jay Samuels, of All Pro Sports and Entertainment, which called the news conference, said she had no idea why the news conference was called. She said the organization represents Sanders' brother Byron, a Northwestern senior, and that their parents had asked All Pro Sports and Entertainment to arrange the news conference.

In January, the NCAA placed Oklahoma State on four years probation, barring the Cowboys from bowl games for the next three years and live television for the next two.

Sanders is a true junior — he has been at Oklahoma State for just three years — and would be the first such underclassman to attempt to enter the NFL through either the regular or supplemental draft.

Sanders rushed for 2,628 yards and scored 39 touchdowns, both NCAA records, last season.

Rugby club to Kansas City

The K-State Rugby Club hopes to improve on its 4-1 record as they travel to Kansas City, Mo., Saturday to compete in the Silver Jubilee Tournament at Swope Park.

Unlike most of their games, the tournament is collegiate, and includes none of the club teams the squad is used to playing.

"It's a really good competition for us," said club member Kevin Wagner. "It's nice to get to play against other collegiate teams once in awhile."

Crew travels to St. Louis

The K-State crews will be racing at the Washington Crew Classic on St. Louis' Creve Cour Lake, Saturday.

K-State's young and relatively inexperienced varsity eight will be rowing for the first time in its new shell, which was just received from Seattle. Last year, at the same regatta, K-State's experienced varsity set a course record in winning the men's division.

The 'Cats finished second at the seven-team heart of Texas Regatta during spring break.

Lady Techsters to defend title in Tacoma

By The Associated Press

TACOMA, Wash. — Louisiana Tech is the defending champion, but top-ranked Tennessee is rated the team to beat in the NCAA Women's Final Four, which gets under way in the Tacoma Dome Friday night.

"They're ranked number one and they should be the favorite," said Lady Techsters Coach Leon Barmore.

"I don't think that's right," protested Tennessee Coach Pat Summitt. "I think any of the four teams here could win it."

Tennessee, 33-2, will meet fifth-ranked Maryland, 29-2, in the second semifinal game at 8:30 p.m. PST after No. 2 Auburn, 31-1, takes on No. 3 Louisiana Tech, 32-3, at 6 p.m. The championship game will be played Sunday at 1:10 p.m. PDT.

Louisiana Tech, Auburn and Tennessee were in last year's Final Four in Tacoma, with the Louisiana team overcoming a 14-point deficit to beat Coach Joe Ciampi's Lady Tigers 56-54.

"Those things tend to stay with you for awhile," Ciampi said. "We hope to use last year to motivate us this year."

Long Beach State, last year's other Final Four finalist, was eliminated 94-80 by Tennessee in the East Regional final in Bowling Green, Ky., last week. The loss broke a 23-game winning streak for the 49ers.

Summitt's Lady Volunteers will take a 15-game winning streak into their fourth Final Four in a row. Summitt was selected as the Naismith Coach of the Year for the second time in three seasons.

Tennessee's last loss came 69-67 against Texas in Austin Jan. 31 in a game in which the Lady Volunteers lost their starting point guard, Tonya Edwards, with a season-ending knee injury.

Freshman Dena Head replaced Edwards and helped Tennessee win 15 in a row, including a 72-65 victory at Louisiana Tech and a 66-51 win over previously unbeaten Auburn in Athens, Ga., for the Southeastern Conference tournament championship.

Maryland takes a 21-game winning string into the Tennessee game, its first Final Four appearance since 1982. The Lady Terrapins' losses came against Auburn 75-63 and Clemson 69-67.

Maryland is the shortest team in the tournament, with 6-3 senior forward Vicky Bullett the focus of its offense with a 21.4 scoring average and 8.8 rebounds a game.

The Louisiana Tech-Auburn semifinal will give Ciampi an opportunity for revenge. Ciampi thought his team was in excellent position to win the national championship last year when they led by a dozen points, 31-19.

"But you have to play a full game, you can't just play 20 minutes," Ciampi said.

Letting them go on their own wasn't always easy, Edie said. Because they were underage, Max and Edie were required to sign permission slips that approved of their children performing in clubs.

"We would put them in God's hands and say good luck," Edie said.

Growing up in a musical family taught Dana independence, she said.

"I look up to all of them — not just for their music — but because of how hard they've worked," Dana said. "They've taught me a lot of independence.

"To see that they can do anything they want to do, but that they've had to give up a lot along the way. I don't see Dawayne as a rock star. It's not a big deal.

"While I was growing up I thought every family had a band set up in their house."

Saturdays may have been cleaning days for the Baileys, but as soon as the chores were finished, Edie said the house was turned over to a jam session.

"We never had anything broken, torn up or taken. Kids would come from all over to hear them play," she said. "We never had a bit of trouble from them.

"All of our kids are superstars."

Max said the success of his children is a result of their own hard work.

"Nobody's given them anything. What they have right now they've earned on their own. They got there by their own work — not as a gift from anyone," Max said.

A photo of Dawayne Bailey when he was home in December.

Although Dana may be the only person in the family who knows date for date and song for song everything Dawayne and Daryl have done, Edie has accumulated 15 scrapbooks, two sizeable boxes and at least one garbage bag of clippings and photos of her family.

"When I retire, I'm going to put all of this in order," Edie said.

Portraits and awards crowd the walls in the family's living room.

"Mom's going to have to start putting photos on the ceiling because she doesn't ever take down the old ones (to make room for the new)," Dana said.

But if one plaque stands out among the family portraits, it's Dawayne's copy of Chicago's gold album and cassette for "Chicago 18."

Staff/Brian Kratzer

Edie, Dana and Max Bailey look though a photo album. The albums and newspaper clippings document the lives of the Bailey children.

Because of the extensive amount of traveling touring requires, Max and Edie said they only talk to Dawayne about once a month.

With the Baileys spread across the United States — two live in Los Angeles, one in Kansas City, Mo., one in Mississippi, one in Eudora and one in Manhattan — Edie said the family remains close through phone calls.

"None of us are very big on writing letters and sometimes our telephone bill looks like the national debt, but we stay close," she said.

The last time the entire family was together was for a 1987 Chicago concert at Sandstone Amphitheater in Bonner Springs.

"Some people think that we get front row seats and all of that, but we don't and we'd rather not. If we sit further back than we can see and hear better than we can if we're up close," Edie said.

Twelve of the Baileys will be at Sunday's concert, Edie said.

"You should be able to hear us the first time Dawayne has a solo," she said. "Especially if Danise and Dana get together."

Alaska newspaper wins Pulitzer Prize

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Anchorage Daily News won the 1989 Pulitzer Prize for public service Thursday for a series on alcoholism and suicide among native Alaskans.

The public service award "will give us a chance to reiterate the point of the stories done in the first place: we've got a serious problem up here," said Pat Dougherty, city editor of the Daily News. The newspaper also won the public service award in 1976 for a series on the Teamsters union in Alaska.

Donald L. Barlett and James B. Steele of the Philadelphia Inquirer won the national reporting prize for a 15-month investigation of provisions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 that gave special tax breaks to many politically connected individuals and businesses. The Pulitzer Board said the series aroused so much public indignation that Congress rejected such breaks.

The Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal was awarded the prize for general news for coverage of a church bus crash that claimed 27 lives and its examination of the accident's cause.

Bill Dedman of the Atlanta Journal and Constitution won the Pulitzer for investigative reporting for "The Color of Money," an investigation of alleged racial discrimination by the city's lending institutions. After the series, a consortium of banks announced programs for lending at least $67 million at low interest, especially in black neighborhoods.

In photography, amateur Ron Olshwanger won for a spot news picture in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of a firefighter giving mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a child pulled from a burning building. Olshwanger, a 51-year-old furniture wholesaler, said he was "at the right place at the right time. Who'd have ever thought I'd win a Pulitzer prize? I'd figure I have a better chance of flying to the moon."

Anne Tyler's novel, "Breathing Lessons," won for fiction.

Two history prizes were awarded, to "Parting the Waters: America in the King Years, 1954-63," by Taylor Branch, and to "Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era," by James M. McPherson.

The biography prize was won by the late Richard Ellmann for "Oscar Wilde."

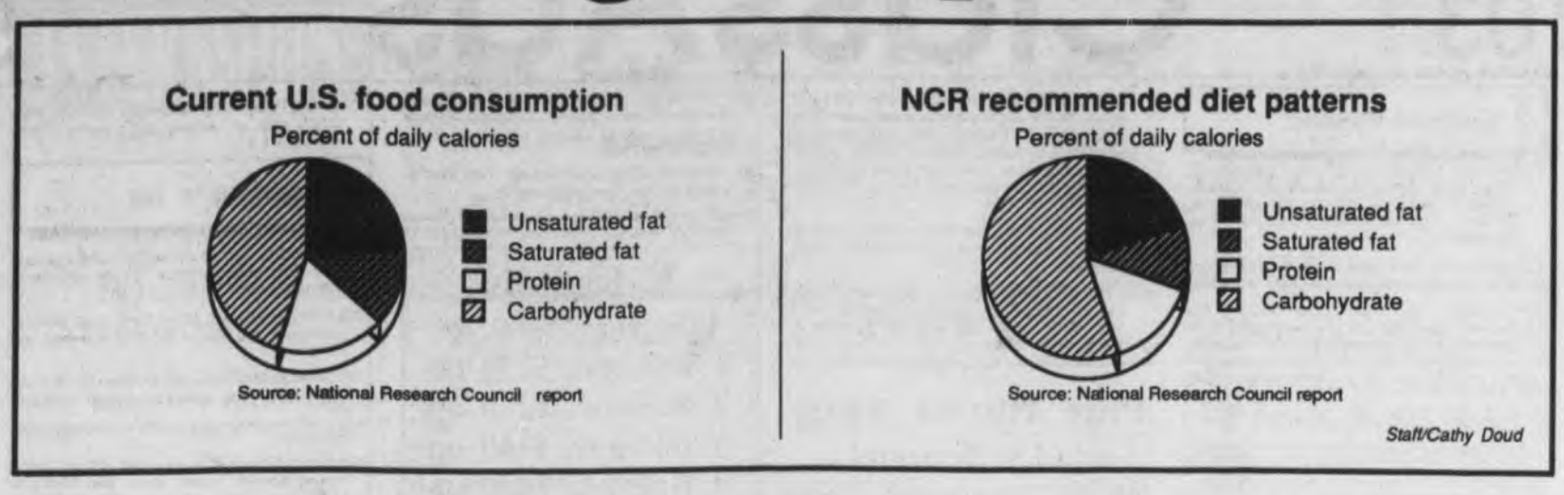
Balanced diet, weight important for health

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

Before biting into those french fries, a candy bar or salty snack, individuals should be aware of the importance of maintaining a balanced diet.

Beth Fryer, professor of foods and nutrition, said to maintain a desirable weight, foods should be eaten in moderation.

"People should not completely cut out any type of food — even sweets — but should include small portions of a variety of foods to allow the body to function properly," she said.



People from 18 to 24 years old tend to think a balanced diet is unimportant, Fryer said. When people reach their 50s or 60s, they start thinking about a balanced diet because of increased health risks.

"(Avoiding a balanced diet) is a step in the wrong direction," she said. "Most people are waiting until they are older to change their eating habits."

Formerly, the main concern of health experts was obtaining the proper amounts of nutrients, Fryer said.

"Our concern now is overeating rather than deficiency," she said.

Women who are from 19 to 22 years old should consume about 1,600 to 2,000 calories daily, depending on their body size, weight and activity level, Fryer said. Men in the same age group should consume between 2,500 and 3,000 calories daily.

People do not need to take as many vitamin supplements because they should be getting them from the foods they eat, she said. If a supplement is needed because of illness, pregnancy or an unbalanced diet, a multi-vitamin should be taken.

According to a pamphlet distributed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, avoiding excess amounts of saturated and unsaturated fat and cholesterol is essential in maintaining a balanced diet.

To avoid fat and cholesterol, people should choose lean meat, fish and poultry, use skim or low-fat milk and milk products and moderate the use of egg yolks. People should limit their intake of fats and oils; trim fat from meat; broil, bake or boil instead of fry; and moderate the use of breaded or deep-fried foods.

Fryer said palm oil and coconut oil should be avoided when preparing foods because they contain saturated fats. Vegetable oils or other polyunsaturated fats can be used as alternatives.

Salt is also used in excess, she said. Moderation should be used when eating processed foods, french fries, pretzels and fast foods. A possible health risk of consuming too much salt is hypertension.

When eating at fast-food restaurants, choosing broiled food and avoiding deep-fried foods such as french fries can help people avoid fat and salt. Although salads are relatively good for people, overuse of salad dressings can decrease the nutritional value, Fryer said.

Harold Solomon, national director of research and development at Domino's Pizza in Ann Arbor, Mich., said pizza has changed from junk food to a nutritional part of a balanced diet.

The meat toppings provide protein, the dough provides complex carbohydrates, the tomato sauce and other vegetable toppings provide vitamins, and the cheese provides calcium.

Although pizza does provide the four basic food groups, Fryer said it, too, should be eaten in moderation due to high caloric content and salt. Two slices of a Domino's 16-inch cheese pizza contain 376 calories, 10.04 total grams of fat and 482.58 miligrams of salt. If double cheese and pepperoni are added, the two slices include 545 calories, 25.31 total grams of fat and 1041.93 miligrams of salt.

Salt is not the only item eaten in excessive amounts. Individuals also tend to indulge in too much sugar, Fryer said. Although sugar should not be eliminated from a person's diet, the selection of sugars should include fruit and naturally sweet products instead of cakes, cookies and candy.

Alcohol is high-calorie food without nutrients, she said. A regular 12-ounce beer has 150 calories, while a light beer has 95 calories. Excessive consumption of alcohol can lead to loss of appetite, poor food intake and impaired absorption of nutrients, which can cause cirrhosis of the liver and certain types of cancer.

According to the National Research Council, too much of a good thing can cause harmful effects. Excessive amounts of protein can increase people's chances of coronary heart disease and increased calcium excretion. Overconsumption of polyunsaturates can suppress the immune system and increase the chance of cancer.

Large amounts of carbohydrates can increase the risk of diabetes, atherosclerotic heart disease, obesity, cancer and dental caries. High fiber intake can be associated with gastrointestinal symptoms, impair the body's absorption of calcium and other minerals, and increase the incidence of cancers of the stomach and the prostate.

To diet effectively, individuals should reduce consumption of fats and sugars and supplement their diet with foods high in protein and carbohydrates because they break down in the body faster, she said.

Board: Oil tanker's captain drunk

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — The captain of a tanker that caused the nation's worst oil spill was fired Thursday following a federal investigation that determined he was legally drunk after his ship ran aground.

The National Transportation Safety Board said Capt. Joseph Hazelwood, who had turned over command of the Exxon Valdez to an unqualified third mate before the accident, had a blood-alcohol level of .061 when he was tested nine hours later.

That exceeds the standard of intoxication under federal law for operating a commercial vessel at sea, which is .04 percent, according to William Woody, who headed a four-member NTSB team investigating the tanker accident.

Shortly after the NTSB announcement, Exxon Shipping Co. announced it was firing Hazelwood, who has been convicted twice of drunken driving.

"I do have permission to confirm that Capt. Hazelwood has been released from the company as of today," said Brian Dunphy, an Exxon spokesman. "I'm really not in a position to make any further comment." He said that to his knowledge no other member of the ship's crew had been fired.

Maximum criminal penalties for operating a ship while intoxicated include a $5,000 fine and up to a year in jail, Coast Guard authorities said. In addition, violators face the loss of their seaman's license and up to $1,000 in civil penalties.

Woody said a Coast Guard officer told investigators he smelled alcohol on Hazelwood's breath a few hours after the accident. But the Guardsman and a harbor pilot agreed Hazelwood appeared competent, Woody said.

Capital suspends Manhattan services

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Capital Airlines, which operates commuter flights between Salina, Manhattan, Topeka and Kansas City, Mo., International Airport, will cease operations today.

William S. Fogerson, president of the Manhattan airline, said the suspension of service was "temporary" but did not give any indication when it might resume. He said 20 employees were told Thursday not to come to work today.

"We've been struggling with this decision for three days," Fogerson said.

He said a rapidly decreasing number of customers made it economically impossible to continue the flights. He said an average of 4,000 people a month used to fly with the airline. That number had dropped to 1,100 by last month, he said.

In January, the airline ran 12 daily flights between the four cities it serves. Fogerson said that number had been decreased to four earlier this month. Twenty-five employees were laid off at the time.

He said much of the decrease in business was caused by news reports that said the Manhattan airport is unsafe.

"In many respects, it's been a shame that public opinion has been manipulated so people think the airport in Manhattan is unsafe," he said.

Capital Air has been operating commuter flights for more than 30 years.

vice and Student Governing Association during the years has supported the advertising," said Gretchen Holden, coordinator of special services for SFHC.

Senate passed an amendment that will increase the budget of Students Against Driving Drunk by $35 for the next fiscal year. The money will be used to purchase an informational packet for the group.

"If there is any group on campus that people should be aware of, SADD is the one," said Barry Beck, business senator.

The total allocation to SADD was $218.60.

Senate also voted to approve the $826.08 recommended budget for the Women's Resource Center.

overhead and employees.

"My accountant states that I lost money on the Chamber of Commerce account," Denning said in her statement. "This does not surprise me. ... The bottom line is I did not profit from my work with the chamber."

Bill Felber, executive editor of The Mercury, said claims that The Mercury story was held until close to the date of election were false. There was no connection between the time frame of the election and publishing of the story, he said.

"The only comment I would make is that the story was published as quickly as it was put together," Felber said.

Open House activities attract crowd

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

The tiny performer hesitated, then placed a foot onto the high, thin wire. The miniature acrobat seemed to glance at the gathering crowd from its perch high above the floor, then ran lightly across the taut tightrope to safety.

The act was a crowd pleaser, and traffic stopped in the K-State Union Saturday to see the unusual performance. Unusual, because the stars of the show were white rats being displayed by Psi Chi, the national honor society for psychology.

The performing rats were only a small part of the many exhibits being displayed for the estimated 25,000 people attending the K-State Open House activities.

Therese Meyer, senior in psychology and president of Psi Chi, said children are especially fascinated with the rats. The only problem was the display reinforced the stereotype about psychologists experimenting with rats, she said.

Nicholas Peak, age 9, Manhattan, petted the rat named "Rumper" as he watched another rat walk the rope.

The rats were taught to walk the tight rope by a process of operant conditioning and chaining, Meyer said. The rats learned their performance by beginning with the final step of the sequence and linking each additional step until they include the first step of the performance. The rats are rewarded with pieces of chocolate chip cookies.

Parents, prospective students, children, faculty and staff crowded the Union and toured the campus to participate in the variety of activities as part of the annual event.

Christopher Brune, 6, son of David and Mary Kaye Brune, Manhattan, plays with a white rat at the psychology booth in the Union.

A variety of displays, booths and exhibits were inside the Union, promoting a departments, clubs and activities.

Geography displayed the "Window to the World." By looking at a colored photo through a stereoscope, the image had 3-D characteristics, said Steve White, professor of geography.

The Division of Continuing Education continued its three-year tradition. Just as in a carnival, contestants from the crowd could spin the wheel, and if lucky, win an ice cream cone from the Union.

Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for the Division of Continuing Education, said the wheel attracted people's attention and gave them a reason to stop at the display.

Union Courtyard Entertainment committee coordinated the musical performances including Farm-House Quartet, K-State Chorale, K-Laires Square Dancers, Sabetha High School Swing Choir and Butler County Community College Choir.

The College of Engineering not only provided a variety of displays in Seaton and Durland Halls but began their activities with the annual float parade.

One exhibit in Durland Hall included astronaut and space equipment presented by NASA and the Steel Ring Professional Engineering Society. Gloves, pants and body suits were displayed for visitors.

Doug Huwer, sophomore in environmental design, won the egg drop competition in the College of Architecture and Design display. The objective of the competition was to constuct an apparatus using toothpicks to protect a raw egg from cracking when dropped from the two story window in Seaton Court. Huwer's structure was successful in nine drops before the egg cracked.

The student chapter of Wildlife Society exhibited native Kansas wildlife, including stuffed eagles, rabbits and rats, snake skins, and live turtles, snakes, fish and rabbits in Ackert Hall.

"The catfish are so big they will eat you alive," said Audrea Telck, prospective student from Canon, Colo., who was viewing a large flathead catfish head.

Kevin Feleay, freshman in fish and wildlife biology, answered questions about the collection of animals, such as how biologists captured the animals and why the specimens were contained in jars.

A Jersey cow was the crowd-drawer of the petting zoo in the Veterinary Clinical Sciences building of the Veterinary Medicine Complex. The cow had a hole in her side so that that visitors could see the thick, green mixture of digested hay.

Melissa Barrett, graduate in veterinary medicine, provided long plastic gloves so observers could stick their hand inside the cow's rumen, which is part of the digestive system.

Barrett said the cow was 10 years old and has had the hole in her side for eight years. The hole has a rubber plug inserted in it to keep the liquid in the cow.

Klan supporters seek town office, stir controversy

By The Associated Press

NORTHMOOR, Mo. — Town government races involving two candidates linked to white supremacist groups have heated up in this tiny Platte County community.

Dennis Mahon, a national Klan organizer who is running for one of three open seats on the Northmoor Board of Aldermen, mailed copies of a Klan newspaper to about 120 registered voters last week.

"I mailed out the paper to show people where I stand on the issues of the Klan, to let the people understand I'm not a terrorist," Mahon said. "Yes, we can be violent. I have been violent before, but it's only in self-defense."

Several residents said they also received unsigned fliers attacking the mayor and town marshal, who are both up for re-election Tuesday. Mahon said he was not responsible for the fliers and did not know who had sent them.

In response to the fliers, Northmoor resident Jerry Copeland said he and his wife, Delinda, sent more than 160 letters to fellow residents Friday.

The Copelands' letter called the unsigned fliers "cowardly" and urged citizens to support the mayor and marshal at the polls Tuesday.

"This is a sad, sorry mess," Jerry Copeland said. "I think it's absolutely horrible. I don't want my community to be connected with the Klan."

Mayor Forrest Stewart, who is unopposed, said he was puzzled by the unsigned fliers.

Northmoor Marshal Charles Fagan called the fliers "just a personal attack."

Fagan is running against Joe Howard, who is now an alderman. Howard has said that he is a former member of the National Association for the Advancement of White People and that he supports many of the Klan's philosophies.

Howard said he didn't know where the fliers came from, but he said it was probably the Klan.

The eight-page tabloid that residents received, called The White Patriot, included more than 10 articles on Klan philosophies, including "KKK and World Jewry" and "Question: Why do you guys burn the cross?"

President Gorbachev visits Cuba for talks

By The Associated Press

HAVANA — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev received a warm welcome Sunday as he arrived in Cuba for talks with President Fidel Castro, who has criticized the Soviet leader's new pragmatic brand of communism.

Castro, wearing the green fatigue uniform that has been his trademark for three decades, walked onto the rain-soaked tarmac after Gorbachev's Ilyushin 62 jetliner landed and threw his arms around the Soviet leader.

It was the third meeting of the communist chieftains but Gorbachev's first visit to Cuba, the island nation that for nearly 30 years has stood as a symbol of Soviet influence 90 miles off the Florida coast.

Castro kissed Gorbachev's wife, Raisa, on both cheeks before escorting Gorbachev on a review of the presidential honor guard.

Hundreds of thousands of Cubans mustered by local neighborhood committees packed the arrival area at Jose Marti International Airport and lined a 10-mile route through downtown Havana to the official guest house where Gorbachev will stay during his four-day visit.

Formal talks between the Soviet and Cuban leaders were to begin Monday.

Gorbachev and Castro rode to the capital standing side by side in an open, Soviet-built parade car. They waved to the cheering, flag-waving crowd stacked several deep on both sides of the road.

Although Castro is known for his ability to turn out thousands of people in this city of 2 million, the welcome for Gorbachev appeared genuinely warm.

Official media in both countries have papered over ideological differences to stress the closeness of Cuban-Soviet relations.

But the contrast between Castro's doctrinaire Marxism and Gorbachev's new-style openness and determination to modernize the Soviet economy is evident just below the surface.

"Cuba needs perestroika and glasnost," one female church-goer said Sunday when asked what she thought of Gorbachev's visit. "God has put Gorbachev in the world, and we are grateful."

The woman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said she hoped Gorbachev would encourage Castro to permit more freedom in Cuba.

Minimum wage bill evokes strong reactions

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

A bill passed by the U.S. House that would raise the hourly minimum wage from $3.35 to $4.55 by October 1991 has generated strong but varied reactions from Manhattan and University officials.

Reactions have followed largely the same path as those already made by congressmen: opponents say too big an increase will lead to more unemployment; proponents say it is time to increase a wage that has lost almost 40 percent of its buying power.

Kim Davis, income maintenance supervisor for the Manhattan Social and Rehabilitation Services office, said the possible increase would be a positive influence on her clients.

Although the increase would put some of the SRS clients above the federal yearly income limit to receive financial subsidies, Davis said many of them "would like to make more and get off assistance."

"It's next to impossible for a mother who has to pay day care to work (at today's wages)," she said.

Because SRS recipients would be earning more, Davis expects a reduction in the amount of food stamps received by the 1,500 to 1,600 Riley County residents who qualify for the program.

Davis estimated that half of the SRS clients work at minimum wage. She said there hasn't been much discussion among the clients about the possible wage increase because the majority of them see it as "an impossible thing."

"They've been living at lower standards for so long ... they see getting more money as a pipe dream," Davis said.

Ken Dreiling, research analyst for the Kansas Department of Human Resources, said the country has "been living on $3.35 for too long." He said any changes during a period of three years would be so subtle they wouldn't have much of an impact on the economy.

Consumers, not employees, will feel the majority of the adverse effects, he said.

"The cost is always passed on to the consumer. If wages increase, then prices will increase," Dreiling said.

But an instructor and a professor said the employment rate will decrease if the wage is increased.

"For every 10 percent increase in the minimum wage, there would be a 1 to 3 percent decrease in teenage employment," said Jim Ragan, economics professor.

Besides having a "disemployment effect," raising the minimum wage would also have a "slight inflationary effect" on the economy, he said.

"Those who are for it say it leads to a more equal distribution of income. There are both winners and losers in this case," Ragan said. "Some will keep their jobs and their income will go up. Others will either lose their jobs or have their hours cut."

Ragan said those most likely to reap the benefits would be children in high-income families, not the poor.

"If the purpose is to raise the pay of those on the bottom of the ladder, then it won't achieve that," he said. "Once employers have to raise wages, they have to cut back benefits and spend less money on training workers. So the workers have less experience and it's harder to move up."

Stephen Shaw, assistant instructor of finance, said increasing the minimum wage will increase unemployment.

"It's going to lock some people out of the market," he said.

Raising the minimum wage is merely a case of "transferring the responsibility," said Shaw, who believes the government is attempting to pass the responsibility of making salaries more comparable to present-day buying power to small businesses.

"If you put it on business, they have to make a choice," he said. "Can they afford to employ 10 people or only eight?"

A wage increase would also upset the traditional wage separation that exists in the United States, Shaw said. Those on the bottom make $3.35, while middle management averages $10 per hour.

"The person in the middle is going to ask for an increase ... the total cost is a lot more than just figuring the

First lady wears wig as joke

WASHINGTON — After a madcap night as a honey brunette, first lady Barbara Bush reverted to her "silver fox" image Sunday as she appeared in public without the brown wig she donned as a joke at a journalists' banquet.

The first lady nearly stole the show at Saturday night's annual Gridiron dinner when she appeared with President Bush in light brown locks that hid her trademark head of snowy hair.

But enough is enough. The wig was gone when the Bushes attended an early-morning worship service at the Washington Cathedral.

"It was just a joke," Barbara Bush's press secretary, Anna Perez, insisted Sunday.

Mental midgets honor saint

SAN FRANCISCO — Let folks back east trust a groundhog. This city knows it's spring when nerds, nitwits and numskulls march through the streets on April Fool's Day to honor their patron saint.

Self-proclaimed mental midgets, led by Bishop Joey of the First Church of the Last Laugh, honored their patron and the new season Saturday in the St. Stupid's Day Parade.

It was either the 10th or 11th year — organizers can't remember which — the parade has moved through the financial district to honor St. Stupid, who devotees call "patron of parking meters and banks."

"We wanted to absorb the aura of stupidity that seems to manifest itself downtown," said marcher David Miles, who said he is most often recognized for his last name's appearance on speed limit signs.

Baseball has own dictionary

WASHINGTON — "You could look it up," Casey Stengel said, and now you really could.

Baseball has its own dictionary.

You could find out that the "Williams shift" is a strategic defensive move in baseball created in 1946 to counter the pull-hitting power of Ted Williams. You could learn how being in the "catbird seat" came to mean being in a position of mastery, thanks to broadcaster Red Barber, who heard the term in a poker game.

You could find out about Babe Ruth's famous "called shot" — and whether it actually occurred. Allegedly — even his obituaries told it as true — with two strikes against him and the score 4-4, Ruth pointed to the centerfield flagpole in Wrigley Field on Oct. 1, 1932, in a Yankee-Chicago Cubs World Series game, then sent the ball flying over the right centerfield wall.

The Williams shift, the catbird seat and the called shot are among 5,000 baseball terms defined and traced to their roots in "The Dickson Baseball Dictionary," published just in time for Opening Day, 1989.

Lawyer to preside at wedding

BOSTON — Chris Kehoe needed an act of the Legislature to conduct a marriage for two friends. So he turned to his mother.

Kehoe, a lawyer from Hingham, would like to preside at the wedding of Denise J. DeNitto and Michael C. Dimko on June 10. To do so, he must be appointed a justice of the peace, and all five positions in his town are filled.

Kehoe did not have to look to hard, however, to find a sympathetic state representative on Beacon Hill.

At her son's request, Rep. Marie-Louise Kehoe filed a bill that would allow him to conduct the marriage.

Attendant injures robbers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A service station attendant fed up with holdups dispatched two would-be robbers Saturday by shooting one and knocking the other on the head with his shotgun.

"Nobody pushes, kicks or shoves me," said Don Hatfield, a Vietnam veteran who works at an east Kansas City service station.

Hatfield's wife, Diana, said several robberies have been attempted at their station but not many have succeeded. She also works at the station.

"Who's going to die for $15 or $20?" she asked. "We will. It's not our money to give away."

One man was hospitalized in serious condition with a shotgun wound and the other was in police custody, said Sgt. Richard Florea of the homicide unit. Police were looking for a third suspect.

Hatfield said a man approached him about 2:20 a.m. in the driveway of the station and bought cigarettes. Another man also approached him.

The first man asked Hatfield if he could return the cigarettes, and as Hatfield reached into his pocket, the man attacked Hatfield, who knocked him down.

The second man jumped Hatfield and they scuffled briefly. Hatfield grabbed a shotgun inside the station door and as the second man began to run, Hatfield told him to stop. He threw a coin holder he had taken, and Hatfield fired one shot and struck the man.

"I saw him stagger," Hatfield said. "The other guy started to get up but I hit him over the head with the barrel of my shotgun. He was out for the count."

Police would not identify either of the suspects and Hatfield has not been charged, Florea said.

Shot kills woman in hotel

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A shot from a high-powered rifle went through a hotel window Saturday, killing a Lawrence woman who had been sitting on a bed, police said.

"Whoever did it could not have seen where the people were in the room, or who they were shooting at," said Don Ash, a Kansas City, Kan., police spokesman.

Robin Wilborn, 32, was pronounced dead about 7 a.m. after the shooting at the Gateway Garden Inn. Police said the bullet penetrated two panes of glass and the closed curtains of a large front window at the hotel.

Ash said Wilborn and three other people from Lawrence had spent the evening at a nearby club and decided to get a room at the motel.

Wilborn was on the bed talking to another woman in their ground-floor room when the shooting occurred at 6:10 a.m.

Police interviewed nearby residents and other motel guests but they did not know if the assailant was on foot or driving by, Ash said.

Leftovers given to charity

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kiwi fruit and baby eggplant were on the menu at some soup kitchens and halfway houses this weekend because of an unusual donation to a charity.

Harvesters-The Community Food Network received 3,500 pounds of food, including the gourmet items, from A. Reich & Sons Inc.

The food distribution company donated the items after a food show at the Kansas City Market Center. Harvesters sent the food to about 30 non-profit agencies.

Record number of grass fires expected if drought continues

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

The number of rural fires in Kansas reached a record high in 1988, and 159 rural fires in Riley County were reported. The trend may continue this year unless there are substantial amounts of rainfall, said Jim Kunkel, K-State forester.

Kunkel analyzes and summarizes Kansas rural fire district reports each year. He said Thursday's rainfall will have limited effects on curbing fires.

"It doesn't take long for the grasslands to dry out," he said. "The next six weeks will be critical. If we get some timely rains, there will be some green in the fields.

"If we don't, this year could be just as bad as 1988."

Del Petty, Riley County emergency preparedness coordinator, said rural fires have averaged about one per day this year. More than 55 rural fires have been reported.

"Usually, December, January and February are pretty quiet because of the substantial snow cover," he said. "The past week hasn't been too bad because of the rain, but when it dries out, we'll be at the same place."

In 1987, there were 87 rural fires in Riley County. In 1988, 72 additional fires were recorded due to the dry weather and drought, Petty said.

"There's no question about this year being just as bad as last year, or even worse," he said. "The rangelands aren't the only dry areas; 85 percent of our calls are for grass fires, but when buildings and barns dry out, the number of fire calls to farmhouses increases."

Kunkel said the high number of fires will continue until the rangelands turn 30 percent to 40 percent green. "It will take more than last week's rain to do that," he said.

Dean Bark, climatologist at K-State, said Manhattan received 3.49 inches of rain during January, February and March, which includes the 1.37 inches from Thursday's rain. Last year, Manhattan received 1.33 inches during the first quarter of the year.

When wind is added to the dry weather, the danger increases, Petty said. According to the National Weather Service, winds blew as fast as 60 miles per hour March 14.

"We're still filling out the paperwork on the fires from that day," he said. "We had at least six fires because the wind was blowing them around."

Petty said that at one point in the day, three fires were going at once, and "there were 15 fire trucks out on calls."

Child development center to celebrate child week

By Mindy Robert
Collegian Reporter

A much greater need for child care exists due to the increase of women in the work force, said Ann Hawks, assistant director of the KSU Child Development Center.

"The economy has made it necessary for both parents to be working to keep the household going," Hawks said.

At the university level, more non-traditional students are returning to get their education after they have children. These changes have "created a much more severe need for services for children," she said.

To increase public awareness and support of early childhood education, the center will celebrate the Week of the Young Child, today through Friday. The week has been a nationally celebrated event since 1971.

The purpose of the Week of the Young Child is "to make the public more aware of the need for quality programs for children," Hawks said.

"Programs across the United States are trying to recognize the needs of young children to better serve them and to inform the public of the need for their support of programs for young children that are qualitative in nature," she said.

It is important for people to know child-care facilities have properly trained staff and are safe and nurturing, she said.

One way to celebrate the week is by "getting out and letting people know you're here," Hawks said.

The center's activities began Saturday during the All-University Open House. Tours of the facility were conducted and games and refreshments were available for children.

Throughout the week, activities are planned to get the public involved with the center, she said.

"When the week is over, I would hope that there would be people who have a clear understanding of our needs and a greater appreciation of children and how we're treating them at our University," Hawks said.

Children will take field trips on campus, and students, faculty and staff are invited to visit the center to encourage interaction between the center and the University, she said.

The public is invited to visit the center from 9 to 11 a.m. and 3 to 5 p.m. during the week.

Kites made by the children and decorated with their messages will be flown, weather permitting. Invitations to celebrate in the activities of the Week of the Young Child have been sent to administrators, parents, student senators and interns, Hawks said.

"Student Senate has been so supportive of (the Child Development Center), we wanted them to have a special invitation," she said. Student Senate allocated $51,093.50 from the Educational Opportunity Fund to the center for the 1989-90 school year.

The center plays an active role in students' lives, said Mike Steinle, graduate student in business administration and a member of Senate.

"For students who have kids, the center is an integral part of their lives," Steinle said. "Without the Child Development Center, (some students) would not be able to go to school."

"Our lifestyles for parents have become so busy," Hawks said. "This is a time to sit back and really enjoy your child and take a more relaxed look at what you can do to make things more pleasant in your lives together."

The week is actually "celebrating children for all the wonderful things that they are," she said.

Each classroom will participate in a multicultural activities festival as an in-house celebration of the week, she said. The center is trying to develop a multicultural curriculum.

The center plans to celebrate the week each year because it will be time used to get the support the center needs to be financially secure, Hawks said.

Ultimately, the goal is for the center to fund itself, Steinle said. Until that time, the center will be funded "as much as possible" in continuing its operation and improvement.

Construction science wins prize

By Lisa Pfannenstiel
Features Editor

The work of more than 300 students secured the Steel Ring Outstanding Department Award for the construction science department as part of the Open House activities in the College of Engineering.

Although the competition began with the noon parade Friday, award-winning construction science projects were in the planning months in advance.

Construction science projects were awarded first place in three divisions of the competition, which were judged from the criteria including professional and graphic presentation, engineering design, problem solving with respect to their curriculum and interest of the public.

"Frost-Protected Shallow Foundations" display included a 1,600 square foot house model which demonstrated the efficiency of a 2 inch thick polystyrene foam foundation material.

The frost protected shallow foundation has been used for 30 years in Scandinavia but has yet to be tried by contractors in the United States.

Building code standards require the foundation to be below the frost line, which is 3 to 4 feet for a Manhattan home, said Daryl Folkerts, senior in construction science. With a 2-inch insulation, the foundation would only have to be one foot in depth.

The average person could save as much as $1,000 in the cost of their foundation construction and up to 16 percent in home heating costs, he said.

The display was awarded first place in the limited class competition which was restricted to class-related projects.

In the open division, which was not restricted to a class project, "Insituform" was the best display, according to the judges who awarded it first place.

Insituform is a method used to repair instead of replace underground pipes, such as a sewer pipe, said Matt Kudrna, sophomore in construction science.

A group of 12 construction science students were awarded first place for their mile-high building history display in the freshman/sophomore competition division.

Included in their display were models of the Wainwright building in St. Louis, Mo., the Citicorp Building and Empire State Building in New York, the Sears Tower in Chicago and a mile-high building which has never been constructed.

Dole's actions provoke appreciative letter

Sen. Bob Dole is a man we should be proud of. He has worked hard in Washington to support policies which promote freedom and democracy both here and abroad.

The Manhattan Alliance on Central America came by some information recently which actually represents a major step forward in U.S. efforts to bring peace to the planet, although some simple-minded, unpatriotic people might claim it portends the opposite.

As Dole deserves part of the credit for the policy which made the events I shall describe possible, I felt obligated as an American who believes in morality, justice, truth and other such rapidly disappearing ideals, to write Dole a letter expressing to him my deep appreciation for his efforts which are so aptly bearing fruit even as I write. What follows is the text of that humbly submitted epistle.

Your most honorable sir:

It behooves me to congratulate you on another important success. A magnificent example of courage and beauty occured on Feb. 22, when, utilizing the weapons and training that those of your respectful ilk hath so seen fit to provide them with, the Salvadoran military carried out a glorious attack on a hospital near El Chupadero, El Salvador.

Little more than a week later, those defenders of liberty returned to the town and made certain conjectures such as requesting that the Air Force bomb it. Then they politely took with them two men who had accompanied a human rights organization, Tutela Legal, to the hospital to aid the victims of the first glorious "battle." Neither of these men have been heard from since. They are, or were, if your boys are doing their jobs right, Joaquin Rivera Guevara, 27, father of six, and Rosalo Guevara, 39, father of seven.

Now, some communist-leaning liberal fanatics might be so forward as to suggest that steps be taken on the part of our government to gain the release of the aforementioned persons. You and I know better than that.

As with the case of South Africa, where President Reagan duly encouraged us not to consider the killing and torturing of those darn, rowdy negroes "emotionally," we can see that it benefits us to entertain the same restraint here. After all, there's a war going on in that struggling democracy, and people get killed, as Sen. Mitch McConnell (R) of Kentucky, that dedicated scholar of the truth, so informed us recently.

Commentary

Contributing Columnist

As he suggested, we need to put all of this so-called "death squad" gibberish in its proper context. The Bible says "To everything there is a season ... To everything there is a reason."

The Salvadoran security forces work in mysterious ways that are not ours to judge nor question. The forceful rendering of accountability, which of course the communists insist on calling "torture," and the selective elimination process, other terms for kidnapping and murder, has its place in God's creation, and thus in U.S. foreign policy.

Thank you, senator, for standing so strong in the defense of freedom in El Salvador. Too much confusion has arisen over why we need to bomb, kidnap, torture, rape, and murder the people of El Salvador in order to defend their freedom. No one seems to realize that nothing in this world is free. Our forefathers died for their country. The Salvadorans can do so for theirs.

Your most faithful and admiring servant (Sieg Heil!)

I don't know about the reader, but I sort of get all giddy just thinking about the many things that Dole has done and is attempting to do to promote the American ideals that are so beneficial to humankind.

He has staunchly supported the Contra rebels who, like their Salvadoran brothers I just described, are fighting freedom, (isn't that what "freedom fighters" do?) in Nicaragua.

He is clearly in touch with his constituency, and has his finger directly on the pulse of American public opinion, as evidenced by his remark a while back when, while speaking about Nicaragua, he boldly stated, "I don't think anybody would mind a little three day invasion down there."

Along with Sen. Jesse Helms, Dole has been key in petitioning Congress for military assistance to the RENAMO rebels in Mozambique. RENAMO is often even more efficient than their brothers in arms in Central America at eliminating pesky civilian resisters to the cause, reportedly managing to wipe out 400 — 500 at a clip on a good day, and being so attentive in their work as to take the time to slice babies out of their mothers' wombs. Thereby they are ingeniously stomping out the communist seeds before they sprout.

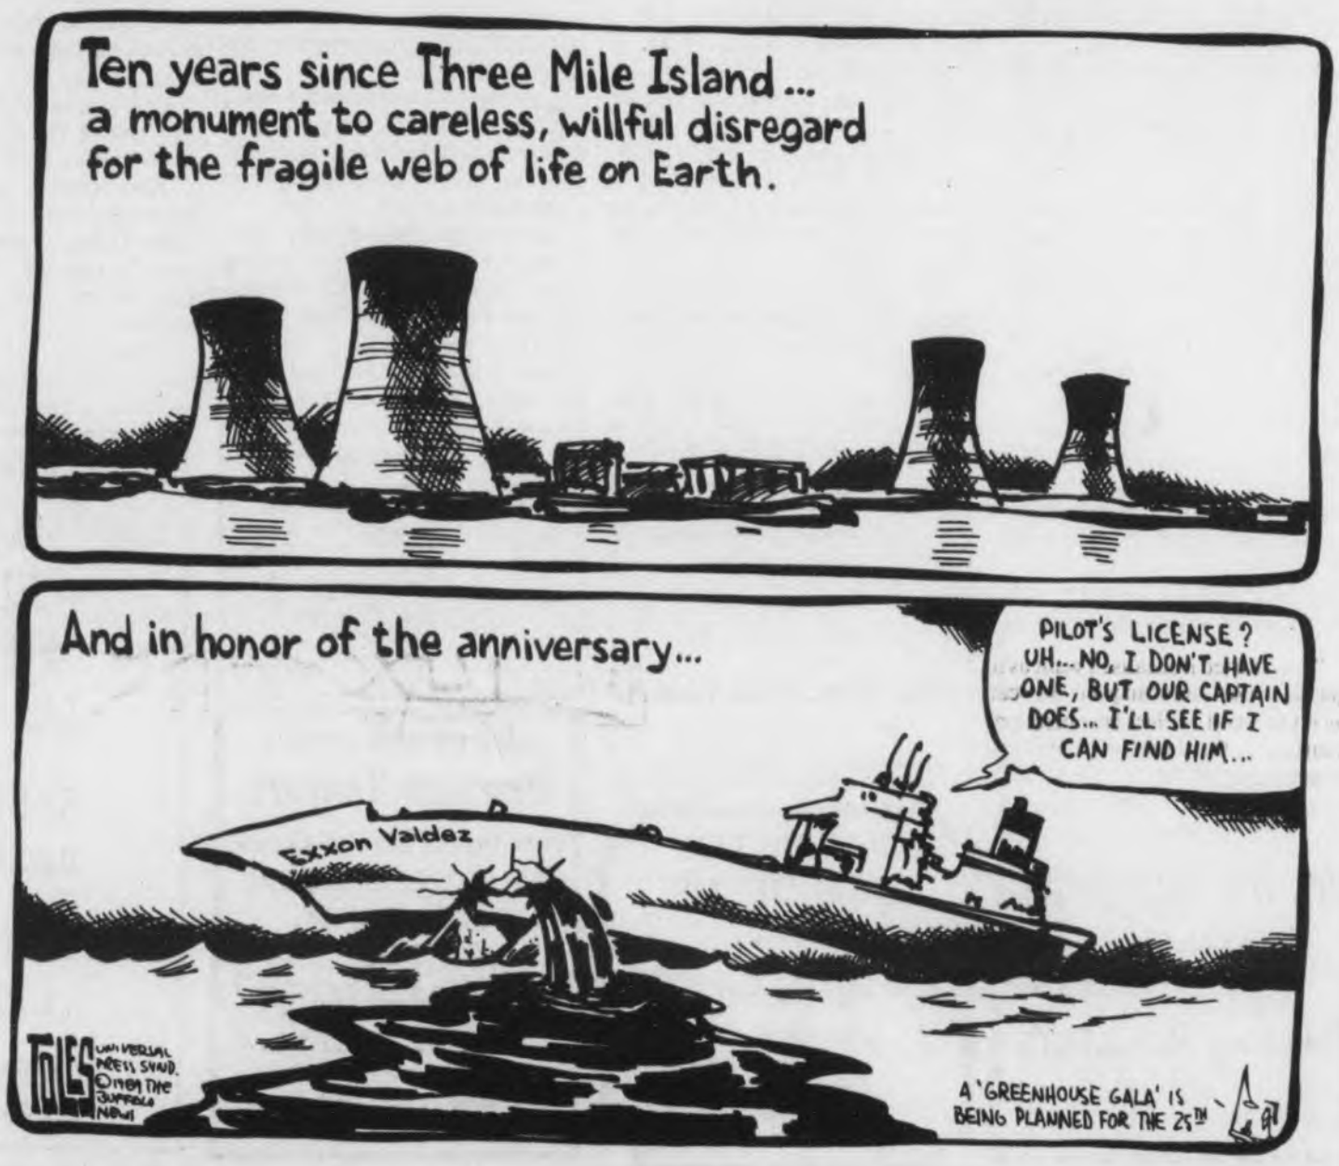
Lest one of my dear readers be driven by some misunderstanding in the nature of what I have said and decide to write the good senator or any of his colleagues in Washington demanding an answer to any or all of the issues I have mentioned, take heed that the consequences may entail so gross a measure as being from this day forward barred from attending any and all of the most fasci-onable dinner parties related to future national Republican conventions.

Alaskan oil disaster shows need for action

As the trend heads toward recycling and conservation, the lack of action by President Bush's administration this past week during the crisis caused by the Alaskan oil spill is intolerable.

The oil spill, which is being labeled the United States' worst ever, is now considered to be uncontainable. Officials are hoping to be able to save the endangered fish hatcheries. Hoping is the key phrase.

When the tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground, officials said crews would begin work Tuesday to clean up the mess. However, local fishermen have said they haven't seen any progress being made to contain the spill.



Covering more than 500 square miles, the oil is expected to contaminate even more miles of coastline and kill even more fish. Those fish are as important to the Alaskan economy as grain is to the Midwest, thus the necessity for immediate government intervention.

Perhaps the only irony of the situation can be found when U.S. technological advancements are considered. How is it that people can be sent to the moon, but measures can't be found to prevent oil spills of this magnitude? Or, if we're not able to prevent them by using better technology, perhaps we could just find a way to facilitate their cleanup before the environment is destroyed.

It's not as though this is the United States' first oil spill. It's just the biggest. Once cleanup is completed, attention needs to be focused on preventive measures to ensure the impossibility of other such disasters. Surely some measures can be found, and perhaps Exxon would like to be a corporate sponsor of the research.

Spring brings urge to whine

We want to whine, so let's. It seems like spring could be here, possibly. But you never know with Kansas weather. Look for television news crews doing live remotes from muddy fields as they inform us about the drought. But the weather here varies: snow, rain, tornadoes, dust storms ...

Where are we now? We came back from break, broke out our shorts and talked about summer. Do tans mean all that much, or do we really just like the idea of charring ourselves? Where are we now?

Miles from nowhere ... guess we'll take our time. But that was before Cat Stevens became a literary critic and put in his two cents worth to help derail the peace train. We don't know where we are, but we certainly aren't going to take the peace flight via Scotland. At least not until Abdul back there turns that jam box down.

Speaking of international conspiracies, the good ole boys from the Central Intelligence Agency paid us a visit last week. A bunch of liberal yahoos took some of the obviously abundant time which they seem to have on their hands to protest "The Company."

We'd hate to live in a world without the CIA. We'd also hate to live in a world without liberal yahoos.

Where are we now? Well, speaking of liberal yahoos, we're almost not in South Africa anymore. Thanks to some people with nothing better to do, K-State is on the verge of divesting from the racist capital of the world, save Mississippi. Well, not "save Mississippi," but rather "with the exeception of ..."

We know it's a good idea. But there is something so disgustingly idealistic about it that we have to wonder if it will work. But we gotta say, "Hey, we did it without one single eyesore of a shanty town." Good thing, too. The shacks might have ruined our drought-stricken, muddy campus lawns — the ones we cultivate with the love that most schools reserve for libraries.

Where are we now? We say art imitates life, but more and more it seems reversed. That woman over there, whether her name is Mona or Lisa or whatever, should smile more. But we have the feeling it's going to take more than equal pay for equal work.

We are watching life rip off art. All our lives really need is a soundtrack, preferably from a Jonathan Demme film. We can't read the subtitles because the film is bleached, but we are sure someone is doing something important.

Speaking of pretentious, when are all those post-modernists going to give us some answers, and none of the "true/false" gibberish. Where are we now?

Well, we might be at the Depresso, as in Cafe Cafe. "Just shut up and let me read my poem!" But we are leaving when the townie skate punks show up. The roar of juvenile skateboards tends to drown out the gay angst music, but only for a while.

Where is the athletic fee now? Not down our throats making us cough up phlegm and money, that's for sure. Again, maybe it is a good idea, maybe it isn't. But if we were to turn over our dough for that, where would the lawn-watering money come from?

We were wondering about a rumor we heard. Does President Jon Wefald let Fluffy or Popcorn sleep on his bed? President George Bush does, and its news on all three networks. Just like the drought.

It's at this point we want to look at it all and whine "whatever." We like the ambiguous absoluteness of the word. And, thankfully, we refuse to lose sleep over all those missiles they tell us are buried under the muddy, drought-stricken ground. We definitely like that absoluteness. "Back to the stone age, baby. Let the roaches rule." Whatever.

Where are we now? We will tell ourselves in a second, after one more game of Super Mario Brothers on the Nintendo. Push the reset, will ya. Got any chips?

Phone needed

Editor,

My intention is to encourage the KSU Police Department to install an emergency phone beside the alley behind Seaton Hall.

I feel the area is potentially dangerous for the students leaving Seaton at night. It's also dangerous for students crossing the alley to get to either sets of residence halls.

The alley is an easy access through campus. Although campus safety officials don't encourage the use of the alley, a phone should be put there for the protection of students.

Issues examined by city, school candidates

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

Once its members are elected, the most pressing issue the new USD #383 Manhattan/Ogden school board will have to face is the problem of overcrowding in the district's schools.

"It's gotten so bad it seems the kids are coming out of the windows, and the board can't put it off any longer," said Beverly Eversmeyer, director of guidance at Manhattan High School and board member for two years.

Last June, the board voted to hire planning advocates for $54,000. Their purpose was to help the board determine the need for additional space and equipment based on program needs and projected population trends.

At the same time, a core committee comprised of parents, teachers, students and non-parent residents was appointed to determine a solution to the problem. The committee, which is independent of the board, will present its solution May 17.

The decision to spend $54,000 for a consulting firm was questioned by Eversmeyer and two challengers running for the board.

"To have some consultants from out of town come in and tell us what we already know for $54,000 makes the hair on my neck stand up," said challenger Meryl Wilson, Manhattan attorney.

Pediatrician Graham Rose agreed with Wilson.

"When we have the University here that has a better feel of Manhattan, and the consulting firm was hired anyway, I questioned if was the right thing to do," Rose said. "It's time to get on with addressing the problem of overcrowding."

Eversmeyer said she voted against spending the money to hire the consulting firm.

"I am adamantly opposed to the money spent on this, because we could have used K-State's expertise and other local resources to get the same results," she said. "The superintendent and his staff should be taking care of what the firm is doing."

The two other incumbents, Martha Miller and Roger Reitz, said the firm's hiring price was high, but the board was justified in using its services.

"I supported it because I want us to get the best information we can receive," said Miller, an operations manager at the Garment District and board member for 12 years. "We need to have full attention focused on this problem, and there are times when you have to expand your expenses."

Reitz said $54,000 was an "outrageous amount, but we needed the expertise that could put time into the study and come up with definite results."

Although the final decision is up to the committee, board candidates have expressed opinions on the short- and long-term possibilities for the solution.

Mobile classroom units were cited by several candidates as a short-term solution. Reitz said the units would ease the space pressures at different schools.

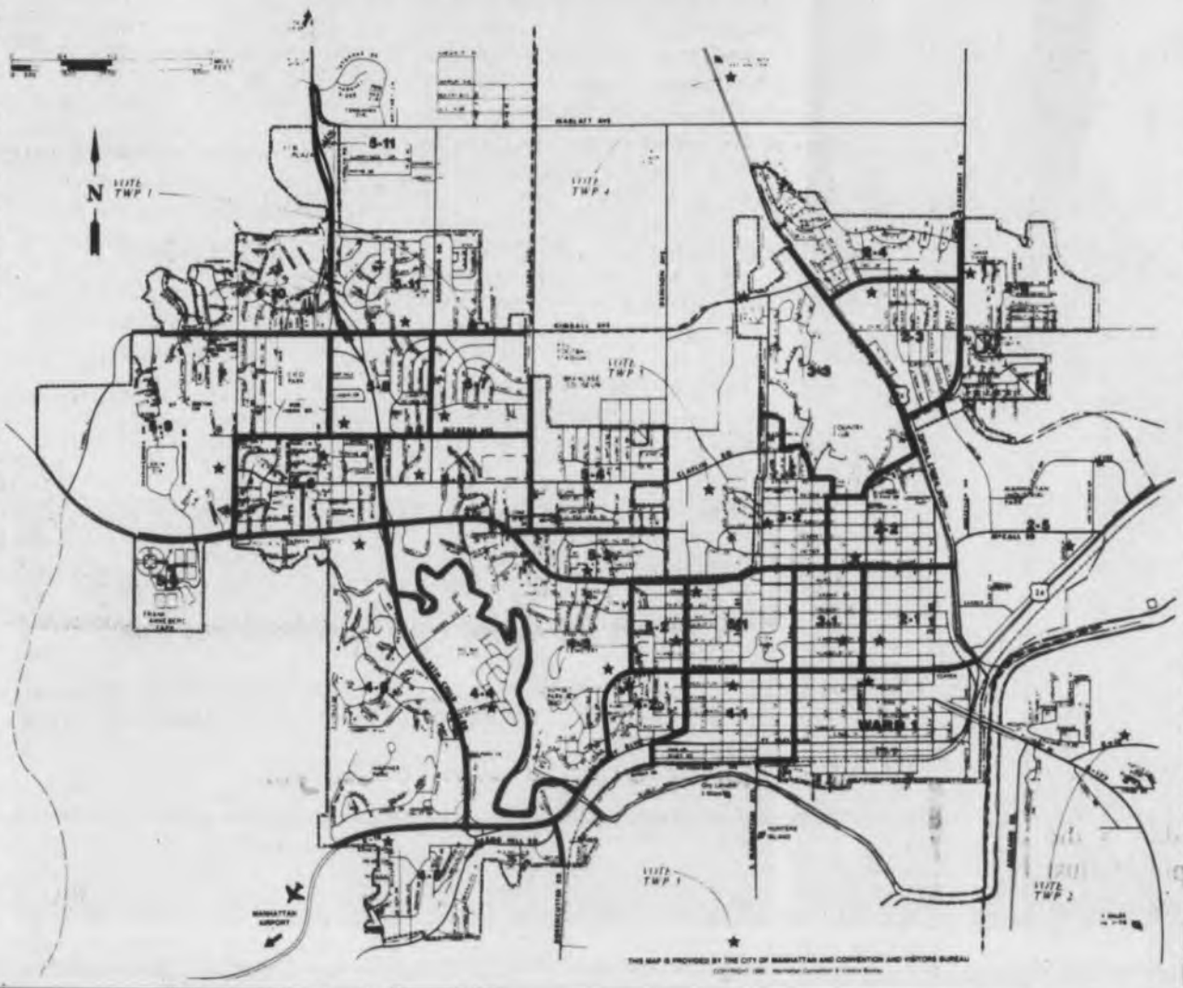
"The administration can put them wherever they see the pressure building, and these can be in use until the long-term overcrowding is solved," said Reitz, a doctor of internal medicine and board member for 12 years.

Miller said mobile units aren't the only possible solution.

"Renovations of existing buildings and space is also being addressed by the committee," she said. "What we do during the interim before the long-term projects are done is important."

"There aren't going to be any perfect answers; only compromise answers," Eversmeyer said.

Regrouping students is another issue that is associated with overcrowding, and some candidates say they would rather have the high school occupied by grades 10 through 12 than by grades nine through 12.



"As a pediatrician, I'm concerned about the age grouping at the high school," challenger Rose said. "It's critical to students at that level to be more physically and socially alike, and there is too much of a difference between a freshman and a senior."

Wilson also said going to a three-year high school would ease the problem for that school.

"Approximately 500 students would be taken out," he said.

Changes in curriculum is another concern of the board candidates. The five candidates say they are in favor of dealing with "at-risk" students, which are students identified as in danger of dropping out of school because of social problems with the family and peer groups.

MANHATTAN, KANSAS
VOTING WARDS-PRECINCTS

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

Although one candidate described the Manhattan City Commission race as a "no-issue, low-interest campaign," candidates seem to have quite a variety of non-issue items to discuss.

Six candidates — two incumbents and four local businessmen — will vie for three commission seats when voters go to the polls Tuesday.

Roger Maughmer, Dennis Marten, Richard Seidler, Stanley Crowder and Commissioners Eugene Klingler and Nancy Denning have formally filed as commission candidates. Mayor Dave Fiser has decided against running for re-election.

Although there are several important issues to consider, this campaign will not be dominated by one single issue, Klingler said.

"Three big issues facing the city are landfill, the jail and overcrowding in the schools," Klingler said at a March 27 forum on possibilities for the Manhattan Municipal Airport. "Let's work with the things we can do."

Other concerns expressed by the candidates include city spending and taxes.

"One of the key issues is taxes and what reappraisal has done for the city," Marten said.

The mill levy is important to voters because the commission is one of the taxing bodies setting the mill levy, he said. Despite the one-year freeze on the mill levy, people fear they are going to get "zapped" two years in a row — once by reappraisal and once by an increased mill levy.

Reappraisal and re-classification will produce tax increases for some taxpayers, especially small-business owners. Maughmer said city spending will be carefully watched by voters.

"I think one of the larger concerns has been (local) governmental spending," he said.

Marten said he believes maintaining the city's infrastructure should be the first consideration of the new commission. Maintaining streets and the airport should be a top priority for the city, he said.

At a forum sponsored by the K-State Flying Club and the Kansas Pilots Association, commission candidates discussed the airport and other issues related to the growth pattern of the city.

Marten reflected the candidates' general sentiments when he said, "The airport continues to be a problem."

Crowder said he believes the taxpayer should not be responsible for airport upkeep since a relatively small number of Manhattan residents use it.

"I say get rid of the sucker (the airport tower)," Crowder said. "I don't think the taxpayer should have to pay for that tower."

Candidates agree maintaining the airport is vital to the future growth of Manhattan. Funding options discussed by the candidates include an increase in the transient guest tax, an increase in user fees, funding by federal or military sources, and funding from the city's general tax base.

Already this year, commissioners were forced to deal with land use issues but did not have a land use policy to guide them. Developing a land use plan and growth plan has become an urgent issue for the city.

"Parts of (the land use plan) are very, very old. The growth plan is over 20 years old," Marten said. "The

Semsroth qualifies, sets javelin record

Staff/Greg Vogel

In the 440-yard relay, Darrell Wyatt takes off after receiving the handoff from Tyrone Watkins Saturday at the KSU Invitational. K-State won the event with a time of 41.3 seconds.

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Freshman Greta Semsroth unleashed a K-State record throw of 172-11 feet in the javelin Saturday to highlight an otherwise average day at the KSU Invitational.

Strong winds early in the day proved to make a big difference in the track events and no records were set on the R.V. Christian Track.

Semsroth however, didn't appear to be bothered by the wind as she easily won the event, outdistancing second-place teammate and fellow-freshman Debra Schmidt by over 20 feet. Schmidt threw 148-3.

"Her throw doesn't really surprise me because she's that type of quality thrower," K-State coach John Capriotti said. "I think she can throw 180 and if she does that, she could be all-American."

Semsroth, from Independence High School where she was state champion in the javelin and high jump last year, qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships June 1-3 in Provo, Utah with her record throw. The national qualifying standard is 168-0.

"She had a really good throw, especially for today," Capriotti said. "You want to have a little head wind, but not that much."

K-State's Matt Vavala, running in his first-ever steeplechase, took first place honors in the 3,000-meter event with a time of 9:25.3.

"Matt Vavala did a great job," Capriotti said. "He looked really good in his first steeplechase ever, especially with 40 mph winds in his face."

Also turning in a solid performance was K-State's Pat Hessini in winning the 800 meters. Hessini's first place time was 1:52.7.

"Her throw doesn't really surprise me because she's that type of quality thrower. I think she can throw 180 and if she does that, she could be all-American."

— John Capriotti
K-State track coach

"I thought Pat really ran well," Capriotti said. "That is a really good time on a day like today."

Other first-place finishers for K-State were Charles Armstead in the 100-meter hurdles (14.2), Darrell Wyatt in the 100 meters (10.4), Angie Miller in the shot put (44-2) and also both the men's and women's mile and 440-yard relay teams.

K-State travels to Washington State for a triangular Saturday.

Wildcats snap streak; OU takes 3

Victory first at Norman since '81

From Staff and Wire Reports

NORMAN, Okla. — K-State went into its weekend series at Oklahoma looking to snap an eight-year streak during which the Wildcats were unable to capture a victory at Norman. Well, the Wildcats did manage to put a halt to the Sooners' home field dominance with a 12-1 win in the first game of Saturday's doubleheader, but OU still took three games from the 'Cats in the Big Eight Conference opener for both schools.

In the first game of the four-game series Friday night, Oklahoma pounded out 13 hits en route to a 9-1 victory. The Sooners then won the nightcap of Saturday's doubleheader, 6-3, and finished out the series with a 12-3 win Sunday afternoon.

Sunday, Oklahoma's five-run fourth put the Sooners on top 8-1, and the Wildcats never threatened from there. K-State's only real threat came in the first inning.

The Wildcats had the bases loaded with no outs, but could only manage one run as Mike Rosenboom hit into a double play and Bill Barnard popped up to end the inning.

OU starter Corey Keeling scattered four hits in seven innings of duty, upping his record to 3-0 on the season. The loser for K-State was Jim McClellan, now 2-2.

K-State's victory Saturday ended a 13-game losing streak to the Sooners in games played in Norman.

The 'Cats struck early and often, as Rusty Ringgenberg enjoyed a four-hit day, Craig Wilson stroked three doubles and Sean Collins had three hits, including his sixth home run of the season.

After Ringgenberg singled and scored on a Wilson double in the fourth, Collins smacked his home run in the fifth to put K-State up 11-0. The 'Cats added their final run in the seventh when Wilson doubled and then scored on a Brad Rippelmeyer double.

David Hierholzer picked up the victory for the 'Cats, upping his record to 4-0 on the season. The K-State pitcher had a shutout until Scott Campbell homered in the sixth for OU's only run.

In the nightcap Saturday, Campbell's second home run of the day was the difference. OU scored three runs in the first, but the Wildcats answered with three runs of their own in the second.

After Campbell's three-run shot in the third, both teams played scoreless baseball the rest of the way.

Wilson added three hits, including a double in, to lead the 'Cats. Jeff Peterson took the loss and saw his record drop to 4-2.

Friday, Oklahoma starting pitcher Kevin King turned in the Sooners' best mound performance of the season in OU's 9-1 victory. King struck out 12 K-State hitters and turned in the Sooners' first complete game of the year. King, now 3-2, allowed just four hits and struck out every K-State batter at least once except Ron Bradshaw.

The Sooners took control with a four-run fourth inning. K-State starter Jim Haller, now 2-2 with the loss, couldn't pitch around two 'Cat miscues in the deciding inning. Haller did strike out eight OU hitters and walked just three in seven innings of work, but he allowed 11 hits and uncorked three wild pitches.

K-State, now 16-6, will be back in action at Frank Myers Field with a doubleheader at 5 p.m. Wednesday against Marymount. The 'Cats resume Big Eight play Friday night as arch-rival Kansas comes to town for a four-game weekend series. Friday's game starts at 7 p.m., a doubleheader slated for Saturday at 5 p.m., then a single game at 12:30 p.m. Sunday will conclude the series.

'Cats record sweep Sunday at Missouri

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

After a two-week layoff, K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau was wondering how his squad would perform during this weekend's Big Eight Conference opener at Missouri. And perhaps the Tigers wish now that they had faced a tired K-State team instead of the well-rested Wildcats that beat Missouri 9-0 in Columbia, Sunday.

"We had not played in a match in two weeks," Bietau said, "and you always have to wonder how sharp you are going to be.

"I thought we played well. It was the kind of match where we were expected to win and there may have been more to lose than to gain."

The Wildcats recorded two shutouts on the day. Annika Emtell defeated Vicki Hatfield, 6-0, 6-0, at No. 6 singles, then Emtell teamed with Thresa Burcham to defeat Hatfield and Jennifer Kuester at No. 3 doubles, 6-0, 6-0.

At No. 3 singles, Sara Hancock fell one set short of sweeping Cortney Elliot, 6-1, 6-0, as did Marijke Nel and Valerie Rive at No. 2 doubles, defeating Patty Heckman and Elliot by the same score.

Nel defeated Heckman in the No. 1 singles spot, 6-1, 6-4; Helen Schildknecht downed Amy Snook at No. 2 singles, 6-2, 6-0; Rive took the No. 4 singles title with a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Kristen Wright and Burcham defeated Kuester, 6-1, 6-1 at No. 5 to round out the singles division.

The No. 1 doubles tandem of Schildknecht and Hancock defeated Snook and Wright, 6-3, 6-1.

"We did have some rather lopsided scores. There were a few spots that I was concerned about, coming in," Bietau said. "No. 1 and 2 singles and possibly No. 1 doubles, those particular spots. We did good job of controlling the situation though, and we didn't allow to get any momentum and build up their confidence."

K-State will be back in action at 2 p.m. Wednesday when Kansas visits the L.P. Washburn tennis courts.

"I would rank them (KU) clearly the No. 2 team in the conference," Bietau said. "They are very deep and very well-coached. They're strong in all six singles positions and also in doubles."

Crew wins 3 golds

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's freshmen eight women's crew squad turned in an impressive performance winning the division title at the Washington Crew Classic at St. Louis' Creve Cour Lake, Saturday.

K-State won three gold medals on the day, with the freshmen men's lightweight four taking first in its category and the Manhattan High School shell competing in the freshmen women's four also capturing first.

"I'm terrifically pleased that every one of our coaches and every one on the team shared in the medals that we received," Coach Don Rose said. "Our success all the way around the board indicates a broad, positive overall aspect for our program."

The women's varsity eight finished third of three teams while the varsity four took third out of 10 teams in the competition.

K-State had two teams entered in the freshmen men's eight and placed fourth and sixth, respectively, out of eight teams.

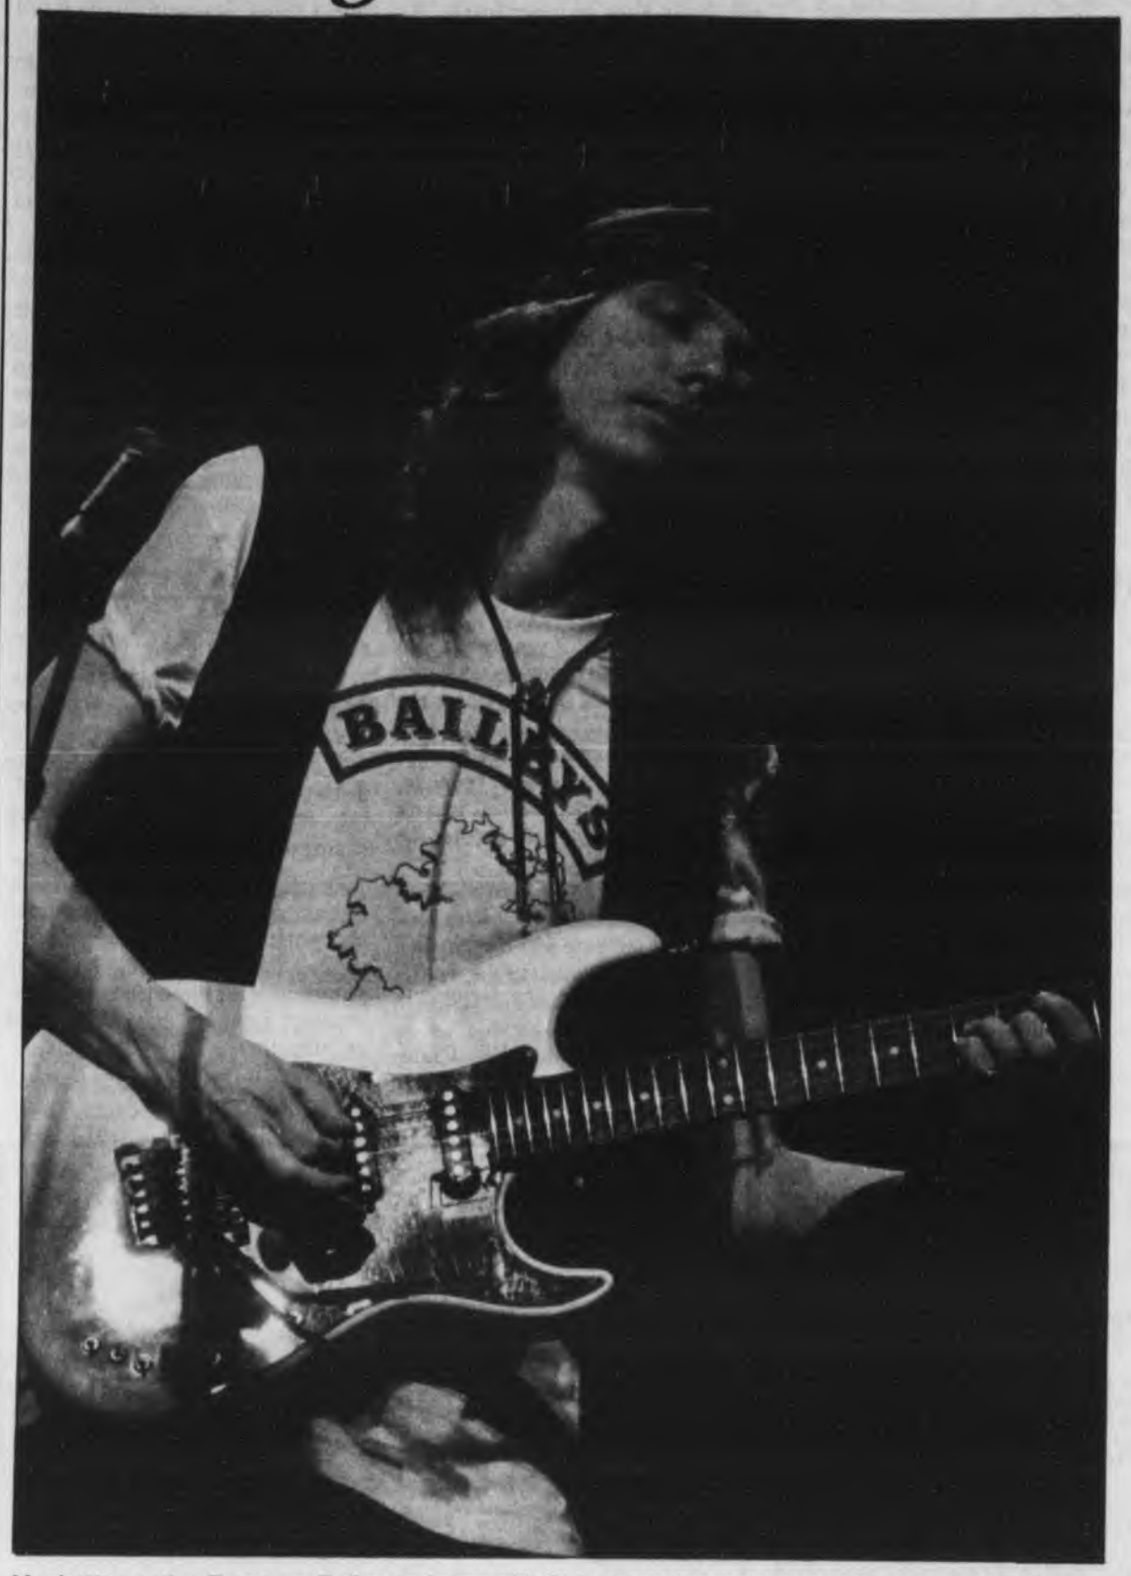
The men's varsity crew was a "disappointing" third, said Rose, beacuse they had just set a course record at the same meet last year.

Rugby places third

By The Collegian Staff

By defeating Central Missouri State, 22-4, in the third-place game of the Silver Jubilee rugby tournament in Kansas City, Mo., K-State finished with a 3-1 record on the weekend.

The lone K-State loss came to arch-rival Kansas, 11-0. K-State's Tim Dougan, hooker, cited team fatigue as the main factor in the loss to KU. The Wildcats had just defeated Oklahoma State, 15-6, and had to get right back on the field to face the Jayhawks.



"We barely had time to walk off the field and get a drink of water and we were back on it," Dougan said. "Because we were all tired out from the first game, it took us about 10 minutes to get our concentration back."

The first 10 minutes proved to be a big key, as KU scored on two quick tries to jump out in front 8-0, and the Jayhawk squad held on from there.

Dougan also said that, because the tournament was not set up in a seed format, KU and K-State wound up playing in the same bracket.

"What you basically had was what would of been the finals in the second game," Dougan said. "The quality teams were us and KU and we usually would have been playing in different brackets. It was the most important game of the tournament."

'Chicago' dazzles crowd with classic tunes

A light show entertained those who attended the concert.

Trombones, flutes, saxophones and soaring electric guitar solos were just some of the means by which Chicago gave the crowd at Bramlage Coliseum a dazzling show Sunday night.

With its recent hit, "Look Away," Chicago introduced an array of tunes that spanned nearly 20 years, from its first self-titled album to the present "Chicago 19."

If the trademark instruments, i.e. trumpets and trombones, had been lacking in the group's recent material, Chicago certainly rectified the problem with this latest tour. Few of Chicago's classics were omitted, and the brass and woodwind instruments were back.

Some of the crowd favorites were "Beginnings" featuring a Danny Seraphine drum solo, the old version of "25 Or 6 To 4," and "You're the Inspiration," with Manhattan's own Dawayne Bailey bringing the crowd to a deafening roar with a prolonged guitar solo that showed incredible talent.

From the start, Chicago made it clear that it intended to perform from its entire repertoire, a move that brought delight from the older fans. About three-fourths of the show consisted of material from its pre-Warner Brothers days — that is, the albums numbered one to 16.

The main lead singer, Jason Scheff, ably filled the spot vacated by Peter Cetera and was helped out by several other of the band's members. Brass arrangements were added to the new songs, a move that brought Chicago closer to the sound that brought its initial success.

Bailey, a native of Manhattan, shone throughout the entire performance. His skill was demonstrated by an impressive performance. At one point, Scheff, the other new member of Chicago, thanked Manhattan for producing Bailey and gave him a friendly hug.

Chicago plainly gave an outstanding performance and its obvious success should go a long way in securing future acts for Bramlage.

Manhattan native Dawayne Bailey performs with Chicago during their concert Sunday night at Bramlage Coliseum. Bailey, who performed several solos, has been with the band for three years. RIGHT: Bailey's family welcomes the band to the stage.

Entertainer performs psychic demonstrations

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

Amidst the bustling activities during All-University Open House, Craig Karges performed a variety of demonstrations of his talents to an awe-filled crowd Saturday afternoon in Forum Hall.

To introduce his type of entertainment to a crowd largely unfamiliar with it, Karges asked five volunteers to place personal articles from their pockets in five separate drawstring bags, which were then placed in a larger bag. One at a time, he proceeded to identify the owner of each bag by a variety of methods. Without looking in the bags, but relying on the volunteers' responses or subtle changes in their expressions, he matched owner to bag in an entertaining demonstration.

This was by no means his most impressive feat, but merely a primer for the more stunning exhibitions of his power. For more than an hour, he proceeded to read volunteers' minds, identify unseen objects, and move objects by using only his mind.

One important distinction he insisted be made about his act was the fact that none of it actually involved psychic phenomena. By using an uncanny sense of intuition and a few admitted tricks, he managed to give the appearance that he was actually psychic. He said he was an entertainer, not a psychic.

Even if he wasn't psychic, Karges was definitely capable of looking like it. One of his more impressive feats involved three rings taken from members of the audience. After the rings were examined by a volunteer, he proceeded to interlink them together with the volunteer only a few feet away. Each owner identified his ring before Karges separated and returned them.

Karges was very capable of performing what seemed to be forms of psychic power. With his eyes quite convincingly blindfolded, Karges identified objects held in front of him, even to the precision of correctly identifying the serial number of a dollar bill that was given to him.

With the help of a volunteer, Karges surprised the audience by successfully levitating a table and carrying it around the stage by the tips of his fingers. This is a form of psychokinesis, Karges said, or mind over matter.

For the incredible finale, Karges gambled his paycheck for the show on the success of his last act. He sealed his check in an envelope and mixed it in with two identical envelopes with blank slips of paper inside. A volunteer mixed them out of Karges' sight and then chose two of them. Those two were burned, only the one not chosen surviving. To the gasp of the entire audience, his paycheck was in the intact envelope. In all of his performances, Karges said that he has lost his check only three times.

Karges said he became interested in magic at the age of 12, but has specialized in mental acts since 16. Karges learned the secrets of the trade from his great uncle, a mentalist for a Vaudeville show.

After graduating with a degree in speech and journalism in 1980, he has made his living as a mentalist. He is one of the few mentalists in the United States who actually do it full time.

One of the reasons he is able to do this for a living is that he is so convincing. He insists that he has no outside help, and to prove it, he offers $10,000 to anyone who can prove someone in the audience is an accomplice.

Even if Karges doesn't use psychic phenomena, his acts are so startling, so convincing, that people watching find themselves believing — at least for a while — in things they would never allow themselves to at any other time. Karges showed Saturday that he is an expert at what he does, leaving a stunned crowd wondering, "How did he do that?"

Guerrilla fighting threatens nation's move to freedom

By The Associated Press

WINDHOEK, Namibia — Territorial police reported killing more than 40 guerrillas Sunday in widespread fighting that shattered a cease-fire and threatened to derail Namibia's day-old transition to independence from South Africa.

South Africa accused the rebel South-West African People's Organization of launching the attacks, but SWAPO said its guerrillas were defending themselves.

Since late Friday, the eve of the truce, more than 80 guerrillas and four policemen have been killed, according to officials from South Africa, which agreed to give up control of Namibia under a U.N.-monitored process that began Saturday.

Namibian police said fighting continued into Sunday evening, with more than 30 confrontations during the day, but no details about the encounters were released. A police spokesman, Kierie du Rand, said 44 guerrillas were killed Sunday and that the toll probably had risen past 50.

Thirty-six guerrillas were reported killed in clashes late Friday.

The territorial army, due to be dismantled in mid-May as part of a U.N. accord, suspended its demobilization process Sunday because of the fighting and began reassembling some units.

South African's foreign minister, Pik Botha, accused SWAPO of ordering hundreds of insurgents to cross into northern Namibia from Angola in violation of the U.N. agreement, which was reached in December.

On Saturday, Botha said his government might order the 1,000 U.N. troops in Namibia to leave if it was not satisfied with a U.N. response to the fighting.

SWAPO, which has waged a bush war for independence since 1966, accused South Africa of initiating the clashes and said its guerrillas "fired only in self-defense after being hunted down and attacked.

"It is the earnest desire of SWAPO to scrupulously observe the terms of the cease-fire agreement," SWAPO said in a statement from its headquarters in Angola. It did not explain why its fighters were inside Namibia.

Until Friday, there had been no fighting between South Africa and SWAPO for more than six months as both sides observed an informal truce.

SWAPO urged the United Nations to deploy more peacekeeping troops to monitor the truce "with seriousness and a sense of urgency." Thus far, only about 1,000 of the planned 4,650-member U.N. force is in Namibia as the territory prepares for elections in November.

A spokesman for the U.N. force, Fred Eckhard, said SWAPO's guerrillas were supposed to stay at least 100 miles inside Angola as of midnight Friday. He said it was unclear whether the Namibian police, who remain in charge of law enforcement until independence, were entitled to operate against the guerrillas.

Leak causes water well to pump oil

By The Associated Press

ELLIS — Some days, the well on Al Dreiling's property brings up 400 gallons of crude oil from a depth of 80 feet.

Trouble is, the well is not supposed to be producing oil. Until a year ago, Dreiling's well about 7 miles west of Ellis was pumping water into a stock tank.

In December, the situation became the subject of a lawsuit.

"This is just unbelievable," Dreiling said. "It's just one big mess that I've got here."

Oil covers the ground near the well. Black spots pepper the sides of the stock tank, remnants of the dust storm that swept through the area March 14.

"When that wind blew so hard, that oil just sprayed. Once it sprays, you can't control it. It just goes all over," Dreiling said.

A Koch Industries pipeline comes out of the side of a hill just north of the fenceline, running above ground for several hundred yards before disappearing underground.

No one actually saw it break, but the 6-inch pipe ruptured in late February or early March of 1988 and began spilling crude oil onto the ground. The company sent a crew to repair the break.

The pipe began leaking again in mid-February of this year, and again the company sent a crew to repair the break. Now, steel patches cover the holes.

But Dreiling contends the patches solved only part of the problem. Below the pipeline, the soil is dark from oil that escaped before the workers arrived.

On Dec. 7, 1988, he filed a lawsuit against Koch in Trego County District Court alleging that the pipeline break caused pollution of the well. It asks for more than $10,000 in damages.

Company spokesman Kim Carraway said that because the matter is in litigation, the company would have no comment.

But Mike Larson, an environmental geologist with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said in a March 1 letter to Dreiling that Koch's representatives are "willing to implement a clean-up strategy."

Dreiling raised cattle on the 160-acre parcel before the oil entered his water supply. When he first noticed the oil, he said, he began skimming it off the surface. Later, he installed a pipe to draw water from underneath the oil in the tank.

Eventually, he hauled water in a truck from Ellis.

'As Is' educational, aesthetic

By Mark Schreiner
Collegian Reviewer

Focusing on the experiences and feelings of a homosexual who is dying of AIDS, the performance Thursday night in the Purple Masque Theatre of the play "As Is" was intellectually thought provoking and emotionally gut-wrenching.

Rich — played by Tony Espinosa, freshman in theater — is a young writer with AIDS grappling with one of the play's central questions, "What about me?" Rich tries to articulate his problems, the same problems of any dying person, but prejudice against homosexuals and fear of AIDS reduce the support he receives.

Review

Saul — a photographer played by Michael Kinney, sophomore in humanities — is Rich's former lover and the only one willing to stay with Rich until death. Struggling to support the sometimes difficult Rich to whom he has pledged his love, Saul also asks, "What about me?"

Along the way, the couple battles against family members who are ashamed to approach Rich, friends who are scared to get near Rich, and doctors who are unable to provide hope or help for Rich.

After a long struggle, Rich overcomes his rage against AIDS and accepts Saul's offer to take him "as is." After asking, "Why me?" he accepts Saul's answer of "Why not you?"

During the play, the audience's emotions rise and fall like a ship on a stormy ocean, with tension building in a scene only to be relaxed by jokes from the characters.

The play's humor helps balance its touchy subject matter. Saul and Rich are chummy enough that they can play the dozens on each other's homosexuality. Rich even jokes, "They probably have a separate AIDS section in the cemetary so I won't affect the other corpses."

Another strength of the play was the ensemble, a group of actors playing different roles in nearly every scene. After surprising the audience with their first appearance, these characters provided glimpses of the viewpoints of the people surrounding an AIDS patient.

Each character often began telling a separate story concerning AIDS, or groups of actors would engage in separate conversations. By spacing their speech carefully, words and phrases from one conversation fit between words from another, producing a third statement.

The separate conversations often converged and became louder and ended with the same words. For example, each character would say, "and then he died." The cast was able to fit lines together without flubbing and it was impressive.

Carrying a white hospital bed onstage in the dark while funeral organ music played made the bed look like a coffin and was a nice touch.

The play has some weaknesses. The characters, from the drug dealers to the homosexuals whose occupations are artsy, largely conform to stereotypes.

Rich and Saul attempt to endear themselves to the audience through corny memory sequences concerning an aunt's hooked rug and statements like, "The sky was the same color as that twilight when I was a kid." It just doesn't work.

The play has an educational purpose as well as an aesthetic one. It tries to prevent reactions similar to that of one of Rich's friends, who told Rich, "Go away. Good luck."

One actor compares those who don't understand AIDS patients to robots. The play tries to show that anyone, even pregnant women, can come down with AIDS.

A hospice worker who cares daily for dying AIDS patients opens and ends the play with soliloquies. She is held up as an example of how to deal with AIDS. She says, "I always go along with what (the dying person) says. My job is not to provide enlightenment. My job is to provide comfort."

"As Is," was written by William Hoffman and directed by Tom McLaughlin, graduate student in speech.

Food service gives prizes in contest

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

The Food Services department Friday gave away two custom-built Bianchi racing bikes worth $500 each to culminate Health & Nutrition Awareness Month. Two Sony Walkmans and two backpacks were also given away.

The contest was part of an education and awareness program designed for the month, said John Pence, director of food services. The bikes were donated by Domani Foods, which provides Italian foods for the campus.

"Three winners were chosen from each of the two pools of contestants," Pence said. "We split the residence halls up into two pools to keep the contest fair."

Rhonda Rumpel, freshman in business administration, and Dewayne Hatcher, junior in electrical engineering, were the winners of the two bikes. Julie Ball, sophomore in agriculture, and Mark Hausner, freshman in business administration, won the Walkmans. Receiving the backpacks were Mike Webb, senior in architecture, and Don Wilcox, freshman in arts and sciences.

The program was aimed at educating and increasing student awareness about nutrition and health, said Barbara Scheule, unit manager of Boyd Hall food service. Scheule said food services ran a four-part program to help achieve its goal.

"A brochure was used for the first part of the program," she said. "Students could fill out the answers to personal eating questions, and then rate themselves on a scale on the back of the brochure. The main point of the brochure was to emphasize the importance of eating a variety of foods."

The second part of the program featured a quiz on sugar, Scheule said. Students were asked to guess the amount of sugar (in teaspoons) in five food items, to educate students on weight loss and sugar content in different foods.

"I think it's surprising how much sugar is in certain foods," she said.

The third part was a quiz on fat and fiber.

The final part consisted of a summary of the first three parts in the form of a crossword puzzle, Scheule said.

Recidivism rates high for inmates

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nearly 63 percent of the inmates released from state prisons are re-arrested for a serious crime within 3 years, according to a Justice Department study.

The department's Bureau of Justice Statistics examined the criminal records of more than 16,000 men and women who were among 109,000 offenders released from the prisons of 11 states in 1983.

It found that by the end of 1986, about 62.5 percent of the former inmates had been re-arrested for a felony or serious misdemeanor, 47 percent had been convicted of a new crime, and 41 percent had been sent back to prison or jail.

Acting Bureau Director Joseph M. Bessette said the report, released late Sunday, represented "the most comprehensive and detailed ... recidivism study ever conducted."

It tracked the records of people released from prisons in California, Florida, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon and Texas.

According to projections from the sample — with a margin of error of plus or minus 1 percent — about 68,000 of the 109,000 people released in those states were re-arrested within 3 years and charged with 326,000 new crimes, including 2,300 homicides, 17,000 robberies, 36,000 burglaries, and 46,000 drug offenses.

Before their 1983 release, the inmates averaged more than 12 criminal charges each, and almost two-thirds had served previous jail or prison sentences. The bureau estimated that the prisoners released in the 11 states — representing more than half of those released nationwide — had been charged with a total of 1.7 million serious crimes throughout their lifetimes. About 265,000 of those were violent crimes.

Recidivism rates were highest for young prisoners and those with extensive prior records. An estimated 68 percent of those younger than 25 at the time of their release were re-arrested within three years, compared with 40 percent for those 45 or older. Almost 79 percent of the former inmates with 11 or more previous arrests were re-arrested in the study period, compared with 38 percent for first-time offenders.

A whopping 94 percent of those younger than 25 who had 11 or more prior arrests were re-arrested.

Recidivism rates were highest during the first year of release, with 25 percent of the former prisoners re-arrested within six months and 40 percent within one year.

Former inmates were frequently re-arrested for the same offense for which they had been imprisoned in the first place.

Recidivism rates were higher for men, blacks, Hispanics and those who had not completed high school than for women, whites, non-Hispanics and high school graduates.

In general, the rates did not appear related to the amount of time served, although prisoners who had served more than 5 years were re-arrested less frequently than those with shorter terms.

Haitian leader overcomes coup

By The Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The government said it foiled an attempt by rebel army officers Sunday to overthrow Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril. U.S. officials said loyal soldiers apparently rescued Avril as he was being driven away to be deported.

A government communique read over state-run television said "certain officers besieged" the palace "and attempted to overthrow the government."

Earlier, sources in Haiti said military commanders had ousted the 6-month-old government. It would have been the third coup in this Caribbean country in less than a year.

The communique did not explain how the plot was suppressed but said "Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril is in control of the situation and guarantees peace in the streets and the security of life and property."

It said he would address the nation on television later.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Susan Clyde said reports indicated the coup attempt occurred about 4 or 5 a.m. and that Avril was detained for a time.

"But it appears that when he was being taken to the airport to be deported ... members of the presidential guard arrived at the airport and escorted him back to the palace to be president again," she said in a telephone interview from Port-au-Prince.

She said there was apparently no bloodshed during the ouster attempt and that the city was calm.

There was no word on the fate of the coup leaders, who included the army commander-in-chief, Maj. Gen. Herard Abraham. The attempt came four days after the discharge of four top army officers accused of drug trafficking.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Dennis Harter said the situation in Haiti "remains fluid."

A State Department official who asked not to be identified by name said Abraham was involved in the coup attempt and had claimed at one point to be in charge.

Clyde said the U.S. Embassy also heard Avril was detained at the barracks for awhile.

"There has not been any visible reaction from the people. The streets are very calm. People are going about their business as usual," she said.

Haiti's international airport was closed, a move taken after previous coups, and large numbers of soldiers were at the palace.

State-run radio and television continued regular programming and made no mention of a coup several hours after the initial reports of shooting.

Susan Clyde, spokeswoman for the U.S. Embassy in Haiti, said there were "reports that there has been a change of government," but that the capital of Port-au-Prince appeared calm.

Five soldiers of the Presidential Guard arrived at independent radio station Liberte at 11:45 a.m. to deny the reports Avril had been ousted.

Wage

minimum wage," he said.

"Minimum wage legislation is not the way to solve the problem. It should be done through training and education — if (workers) are better trained, they will be able to produce more."

Dennie Anderson, manager of Wal-Mart, called the increase a "back-door tax increase."

By raising the minimum wage, he said the government "has a tax increase without enacting it and they look like the good guys. You make more so you pay more."

Anderson said a minimum wage increase wouldn't affect Wal-Mart's hiring practices. Employees start at $3.75 and are reviewed after 90 days.

"It wouldn't necessarily mean fewer people were hired, but it would mean a forced increase in productivity. It would force them to cut the waste out," he said.

Cheryl May, director of University News and Information, said she likes to hire students at minimum wage then increase their salary quickly if they do a good job. However, May said her budget "won't allow for substantial increases" if the wage is raised.

No work-study students are employed at University News.

K-State received $686,000 in work-study funds for the 1988-89 academic year, said Christine Crenshaw, associate director of student financial assistance.

In 1988-89, only one out of every three students who qualified to receive work-study funds chose to use the federally funded program. Seven hundred students are participating in work-study this year, but present funds could accommodate 1,000, she said.

"The way the program is working right now, if minimum wage went up, we wouldn't even blink an eye," Crenshaw said. "It would be a blessing, because we could utilize the funds we have."

Increasing the minimum wage would not affect the student's work award, she said. Instead it would change the number of hours the student worked.

According to figures from the February 1989 payroll, 689 of the total 3,113 students who are employed on campus are working at minimum wage. Although no exact breakdown exists as to where the majority of students are employed, Celeste Tillson, director of payroll, said she thought the Department of Housing has the greatest percentage because it has the largest payroll.

Coralie Boatman, administrative officer for the KSU Department of Housing, said the majority of the 700 to 800 students employed by housing begin at minimum wage. Although Boatman said department officials haven't discussed the matter of dealing with a wage increase, she expects they would have to rework the wage scale.

K-State voluntarily complies with the federal minimum wage, Tillson said, adding that she thought this was because the University had so many federal sources of funding it was "administratively easier."

Assistant vice president for administration and finance Tom Schellhardt said if Congress did increase the minimum wage, the administration and the Board of Regents "may have to revisit the earlier decision (of complying with the federal wage), but would probably be guided by the federal decision."

While local officials have varying opinions about the House bill which passed by a margin of 248-171, at least one Kansas Senator is adamantly opposed to the the bill. The Senate will begin debate on the bill in early April.

"The House bill is a sham," said Walt Riker, press secretary for Sen. Bob Dole. "We support the president's plan."

Bush proposed a more modest increase, which would raise the minimum wage to $4.25 per hour by 1992. In Bush's plan, newly hired employees would be paid a wage beneath minimum standards for six months. Republican representatives offered this plan as a substitute.

Even though that plan was supported by the House Republican leadership and 40 Democrats who crossed party lines, Bush's proposal was defeated 218-198.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum supports the Bush's opinion as well, according to her press secretary, Larry Shainman. But before the House voted, she had "expressed hope that there could be a compromise (between the two proposals)," he said.

The House bill also provides for new employees to receive a subminimum wage for two months.

The first minimum wage law, established in 1938 by the Fair Labor Standards Act, required that workers be paid no less than 25 cents per hour. Many amendments have been made to the law, with the most recent passed in 1977.

According to the U.S. Code from 1978, a law imposing a step increase for the wage was enforced beginning Jan. 1, 1978. Workers could earn no less than $2.65 per hour in 1978, and the wage increased yearly until the present hourly wage of $3.35 was enacted Jan. 1, 1981.

Coast Guard holds captain

By The Associated Press

LONG BEACH, Calif. — The Coast Guard ordered a cargo ship captain to relinquish control of his ship after crew members complained that he was drunk and navigating erratically, authorities said Sunday.

The incident aboard the Century Hope early Saturday came just eight days after the oil tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground near Valdez, Alaska, causing a vast oil spill. The captain of the tanker has been accused of drinking.

"The Century Hope crew probably knew about the Valdez incident and were sensitized to what could happen," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Brad Smith. "They acted very responsibly to let us know about their captain."

Smith said Captain Allen Jones, 58, of Ealing, England, voluntarily submitted to a blood-alcohol test and is being investigated for possible federal charges of operating a vessel negligently and being drunk at the helm.

Results of the test were not immediately known. Jones' whereabouts were not revealed.

Under federal law, a ship operator's blood alcohol level must be less than .04 percent, considerably lower than the .10 percent standard for automobile driving in California.

The Century Hope, a British-registered ship owned by a Hong Kong company, departed Long Beach Harbor at 12:30 a.m. Saturday carrying 57,000 tons of soy beans picked up in New Orleans and bound for Yokohama, Japan.

First Mate Leung Wing Yu, the second in command, said Jones was guiding the ship on a collision course with the breakwater, which could run the craft aground and block one of the two entrances to the adjacent harbors of Long Beach and Los Angeles.

The captain then suddenly changed course, Leung said.

"He is lucky," said Leung, a Hong Kong resident. "Otherwise, he would have hit the breakwater. There is no doubt. We would block entrance of the port. There is no doubt."

Leung said he and the second mate smelled alcohol on Jones' breath and urged him to give up command, but that Jones "started cursing and insulting us."

Gorbachev

In Havana, Gorbachev will hold lengthy discussions with Castro. Castro has criticized Gorbachev's pragmatic reforms, and Soviet officials have said they may reduce aid in the future to the Caribbean nation.

"We are going to discuss Fidel Castro's performance, just as he is going to discuss our own performance," Soviet spokesman Gennady Gerasimov told ABC-TV in an interview from Havana. "We will exchange views and experiences."

Earlier Sunday, Gorbachev stopped in Ireland and held a "shamrock and sickle summit" with Prime Minister Charles Haughey, who suggested the next U.S.-Soviet summit be held in Ireland.

Gorbachev's two-hour stop to the politically neutral, staunchly Roman Catholic Ireland was the first by a Kremlin leader. It was Gorbachev's first overseas visit since a December trip to the United States.

Gorbachev will be in Cuba through Wednesday for meetings with President Fidel Castro.

city has fallen down in the job of keeping things up to date. The catch is that (updating) is expensive."

Manhattan has many aspects that are often identified with a much larger city, Maughmer said. The commission's main goal should be to maintain Manhattan's progressive stance.

"The original land use plan had (Manhattan) growing northeast, or even east," he said.

The need for student housing should be addressed in a land use plan, he said.

"Well thought out and reasonably placed student housing should be considered," Maughmer said. "Maybe the University needs to build a new dorm; maybe the city needs another apartment complex or two."

Crowder, agreeing with the other candidates, said the city needs to set a policy that will direct the commission when considering new construction. However, Crowder said he believes the city should consider expanding to the south when it is ready to develop a growth plan.

During the general election, polls will remain open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday. Registered voters who live within the city limits of Manhattan or the voting precinct are eligible to vote.

Exxon apologizes, plans to continue cleanup attempts

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — Exxon apologized Monday for causing the nation's biggest oil spill and promised to clean up every fouled beach in Prince William Sound, but workers on those greasy-smelling beaches said their efforts are futile.

Police continued searching for the captain of the tanker Exxon Valdez, which crashed into Bligh Reef on March 24, spilling 10.1 million gallons of North Slope crude.

The oil slick has now grown larger than Rhode Island. Scientists reported more wildlife deaths and food, an indication of how rapidly the spill was spreading.

"That's bad news. That's the top of the food chain," Lyman said.

On nearby Green Island, hundreds of birds lay along the beach, as black and lifeless as the oil-smeared rocks around them. Sheltered coves and rocky points, usually clamoring with the sound of gulls and other shorebirds, were silent.

"Every day, it's getting a little worse," otter rescue specialist Chris Donohoe said as he squatted by a dead sea duck. "You clean a beach up, the tide changes, and the oil comes right back."

Oil is so thick that walking on once postcard-perfect beaches is treacherous, and workers wear hardhats to protect against injuries from frequent tumbles on rocks. Oil sprayed by waves splatters rocks and driftwood logs high above the tideline. Beaches smell like gas station garages.

More than half the spawning habitat used by Prince William Sound herring has been fouled, said Dennis Haanpaa, a fisheries biologist with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game.

Exxon officials have conceded that beach cleanup efforts so far have been futile. But the company said it began a new assault with more effective gear, more workers and a floating command post.

Exxon Shipping Co. President Frank Iarossi said Exxon planned to flush beaches by pumping seawater over them, then collect oil from the water with skimmers.

"We intend not to leave until the job is done," Iarossi said. "We intend to leave Prince William Sound close to what it was before the tragedy."

State officials have blasted Exxon's effort to scrub beaches as dismal and ineffective. Less than 4 percent of the thick crude has been recovered.

The spill has fouled more than 800 miles of shoreline in Prince William Sound, and the amount grows each day.

Exxon fired Capt. Joseph Hazelwood last week.

"We cannot, of course, undo what has been done. But I can assure you that since March 24, the accident has been receiving our full attention and will continue to do so."

said a vital herring fishery was threatened. The Prince William Sound fishery is worth more than $150 million annually.

"I want to tell you how sorry I am that this accident took place," said Exxon Chairman L.G. Rawl in full-page advertisements placed in newspapers Monday.

"We cannot, of course, undo what has been done. But I can assure you that since March 24, the accident has been receiving our full attention and will continue to do so."

More than 1,000 seabirds and at least 20 sea otters caught in the oil have died, some found covered with asphalt-hard oil. Officials said the death toll is probably much higher, but they have had time to survey only a slice of the sound's 2,500 miles of coastline.

Department of Fish and Game spokesman Jon Lyman said Monday a deer found dead on Naked Island about 25 miles southwest of the tanker had apparently eaten contaminated

Instructor 'nuts' about marbles

By The Collegian Staff

After attending antique shows and browsing antique shops as a collector, Gary Woodward, head of the art department, began purchasing old jars of marbles because they reminded him of his childhood.

"I started collecting marbles 12 years ago," Woodward said. "As a kid, I was nuts about playing marbles, so it was natural for me to start my collection."

Although Woodward has collected 5,000 marbles, his collection does not contain marbles from his youth because he doesn't know what happened to his childhood treasures.

He collects marbles in endless varieties and colors, including ones made from clay and precious stones. He also has acquired swirlies and machine-made marbles, which are the most common type of marble and can be purchased in a dime store.

Woodward's largest marble is 1¼ inch in diameter, he said. Marbles were made in larger sizes and are worth as much as $200 for the old, unique items.

"Marbles come in all sizes," Woodward said. "The biggest ones were 2½ inches (in diameter) and were made in Germany. A few were also hand made in the United States by German immigrants who knew the trade."

Woodward's collection is about 95 percent machine-made marbles.

"I don't have many valuable marbles," he said. "The most I've paid for a marble is $35."

Although he began collecting all types of marbles, Woodward is buying fewer, and concentrating on more specialized types.

The swirlie has been his favorite and he has 35 in his collection. The swirlie was made in Germany in the 1870s.

"The swirlie is very detailed and pretty to look at," Woodward said. It is clear glass on the outside with colored, swirled glass on the inside, like a barbershop pole, he said.

Panelists discuss illiteracy

Campaigns ineffective solutions

By Lance E. Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

By Jonathan Kozol's estimation, there are 60 million Americans who cannot read these words.

Karen McCulloh, coordinator of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, Ron Kolenbrander, Manhattan High School instructor, and Tom Parish, professor of administration and foundations of education, were the three panelists for the Monday night pre-Lou Douglas Lecture discussion which focused on the causes and possible solutions for illiteracy.

Kozol will give his lecture, "Where Stands the Republic? Literacy and Social Justice," Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

"Does the illiterate person see education and literacy as liberating, or a form of social indoctrination?" McCulloh said. "We need to search for a positive relationship between literacy and a social world."

Literacy campaigns such as the Right to Read Campaign of 1969 have not been as effective as Martin Luther's reformation of the 16th century, she said.

McColloh said there is a need to look back five centuries and evaluate the positive aspects of the Protestant Reformation.

"It is important that a literacy campaign utilize relevant reading material," she said. "Martin Luther was successful with the Reformation because he used the Bible to interest the people."

Cuba's literacy campaign uses political material to gain the interests of the citizens, McCulloh said.

"There are 60 million people in the United States who should be considered illiterate according to Kozol," she said. "Of those, 44 percent are black adults who cannot read and write at an adult level of participation."

Research indicates parental hostility and criticism from instructors were the greatest factors in shaping the education of children, Parish said.

"We are in a system in which one out of five students drops out of high school before graduating," he said. "For our teachers to be effective they have to be the benefactors and friends of the student."

Parish said he sees the solution to illiteracy as one which has to come from within the students.

"The students need to own the problem and the solution," he said. "We need to allow the student to deal with the problem from an internal perspective."

Kolenbrander said one of the more successful programs he has encountered is one which requires the students to tape an oral history of their family. The tapes are then transcribed and read by the students.

"Successful programs have got to deal with the needs of the person and motivation ... " he said. "We need to tie the programs into other needs of adults which may include job skills and child care."

"In any program there need to be (instructors) in there who are paid for their work," Kolenbrander said. "We need to ask how much of the work can be done by volunteers."

All three panelists agreed that a

Conference focuses on problems in education facing minorities

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

"I'm going to give you my little test. Name two black playwrights. Name two Mexican American historians. Name two native American writers. Name two Puerto Rican actors or actresses. Name two female scientists or inventors.

"If you do not have a bachelor's degree, you are excused from missing a few on this test. If you have a bachelor's or a master's degree, you should be ashamed of yourself if you missed any. And if you have a doctorate and missed some, you should give your degree back."

In the opening session of a two-day conference discussing the status of minorities in education, James Boyer challenged a group of more than 200 educators from five states to answer these questions to emphasize how America's system of education often overlooks minorities.

The conference, which took place Sunday and Monday in the Union, was the first time a formal conference on the problems facing minorities in education has been conducted in Kansas, said Veryl Switzer, head of minority affairs.

"Kansas State University can feel good about being host to such a conference," Switzer said. "It has brought educators together concerning minority issues, enhanced opportunities for minorities in the state of Kansas, and provided the beginnings of a support system for minorities in the state."

The conference consisted of four general sessions featuring speakers who are experts in the area of minorities in education, and six concurrent sessions that ran both days to allow participants to discuss the topics in detail.

The topics of the conference ranged from minority athletes, standardized testing and perceptions of minority students on white campuses to minority teachers and support systems for minorities in education.

The main focus of the conference was on the rapid change which is occurring in America to the number of minorities and how this change is affecting education.

"Not only is America changing, it is changing rapidly, forcefully and fiercely," said Boyer, professor of curriculum and instruction.

"A conference such as this is not only timely, but essential," said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. "By the turn of the century, more than one-third of the nation's population will be non-white."

Boyer listed demographics of major U.S. cities, pointing out that more than 50 percent of the urban American population consists of minorities.

Boyer said European Americans were traditionally considered to be normal and the rest of the people were considered abnormal, so, "The definition of who you are began to take on a major reference in terms of the status of minorities in education."

"As recently as the 1830s, it was against the law to teach blacks to read and write in America," he said. "A black American who could read and count was always considered dangerous.

"We're not talking about 200 years ago. We're talking America — we're talking schooling."

Nationally, 87 percent of white Americans age 25 to 34 have graduated from high school, Boyer said. About 80 percent of black Americans and 59 percent of Hispanic Americans have done the same.

"The state of Kansas is only 5 per-

Class teaches Chinese police

BEIJING — When James Murray talks about free speech and the right to remain silent, Chinese police pay attention.

The 60-year-old former police chief from Milpitas, Calif., is the first foreigner ever to be hired as a professor at the People's Public Security University, an elite training ground for Chinese police officers.

Murray, who arrived at the four-year academy last fall, teaches a broad survey of American police science. He lectures to about 80 uniformed students on Western law enforcement history, the makeup and management of American police agencies, search and patrol practices, technology, race relations and police ethics.

"I have a free hand to teach what I want and answer any questions," he said.

Murray said he even showed the movie "Dirty Harry" to point out methods of interrogation that would be unacceptable in a real-life case.

Child abuse charges filed

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. — A Kansas woman was charged with child abuse Monday for allegedly leaving her 3-year-old daughter on Interstate 40 last week, authorities said.

Deputy Coconino County Attorney Fred Newton said the count was filed against Kimberly Owuor, 30, of Topeka. He said his office would seek extradition from California once a psychiatric evaluation of her is completed.

Owuor was arrested in Malibu, Calif., Saturday night following a series of hit-and-run accidents in several locations in the Los Angeles area.

A motorist on I-40 had picked up 3-year-old Elizabeth Owuor on Wednesday evening after seeing her being dropped off from a westbound car near Ash Fork, west of Flagstaff. The girl told investigators that her mother dropped her off after getting angry at her.

Superior Court Judge William Garbarino scheduled a closed hearing Tuesday in Flagstaff on custody of the girl, who has been staying at a crisis nursery since she was dropped off.

The mother was awarded custody of the girl when she and the child's father divorced more than a year ago. The father, George Owuor of Arlington, Texas, traveled to Flagstaff and was attempting to get custody.

Police conduct gambling raids

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — More than $200,000 in cash, stolen cigarettes worth $90,000 and several hand grenades were among items seized over the weekend by FBI agents and police in a series of sports gambling raids, court records showed Monday.

The raids, supervised by the federal Organized Crime Strike Force, took place in Kansas City and the suburbs of Blue Springs, Mo., and Overland Park and Olathe. The authorities had 28 search warrants which they began executing about 4:30 p.m. Saturday, starting time for the NCAA basketball semifinals in Seattle.

Records filed in U.S. District Court showed the raids focused on associates of Jack Lascoula, identified as owner of The Wheel tavern in Kansas City. At that location, authorities seized five live hand grenades, 10 dummy grenades, seven explosives detonators, gambling paraphernalia and more than $13,000.

Most of the money, $184,892, was seized from the home of Norma Taibi, where agents also found gambling paraphernalia. The cigarettes were seized at UNI Cartage. Officials said the cigarettes are believed to have been part of a $250,000 shipment that was reported stolen in the fall.

Saturday's raid was said to be related to a similar sweep in December, when 42 search warrants were served in the Kansas City area. Authorities said the two raids attacked different branches of the alleged gambling operation.

Three men named in the December raid pleaded guilty Thursday to federal sports gambling charges, and authorities said all three had agreed to cooperate in the continuing investigation.

Avis signs repair agreement

TOPEKA — Kansas Attorney General Robert T. Stephan and attorneys general from six other states have signed an agreement with Avis Rent-A-Car that prohibits the company from overcharging customers for car repairs, Stephan's office said Monday.

In signing the agreement, Avis did not admit to any wrongdoing, but did agree to reimburse $175,000 spent on an investigation of complaints. Each state will get $25,000 of that money.

Stephan said overcharging customers for repairs to damaged vehicles was found to be a common practice among the nation's car rental companies.

"We found when reading the small print in many car rental agreements that customers who did not purchase the collision damage waiver were liable for the cost of repairing a car they damaged," Stephan said in a prepared statement.

Auto accident injures 2

Two K-Staters were treated for minor injuries in the emergency room of The Saint Mary Hospital Monday after they were involved in a two-car accident at the intersection of Denison and College Heights.

Kelli Corrigan, freshman undecided in the College of Arts and Sciences, and Kristi Cox, freshman in business administration, were injured when the accident occurred at 11:20 a.m. Cox was a passenger in the car driven by Corrigan. A second passenger, Curt Wagner, freshman in business administration, was uninjured.

According to Riley County police reports, Corrigan's car was eastbound on College Heights when it was struck by a car driven by Lisa Kramer, fifth year undergraduate in landscape architecture. Kramer was northbound on Denison.

Lieutenant Buddy Mays said Corrigan was given a citation for failing to yeild the right of way.

Public attends forum

Denning defends actions

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

City Commissioner Nancy Denning conducted an open forum Monday at the Wareham Theater to discuss allegations made by The Manhattan Mercury concerning accusations of a conflict of interest between her public office and a marketing, design and advertising firm she owns.

Today is election day for Denning and five other commission candidates competing for the three seats.

Denning said implications that she is using her position as a city commissioner to "line her pockets" with city funds are false. Business conducted between her firm and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce has been legitimate and ethical, she said.

According to her records, Denning and Associates conducted $43,665.97 in public relations and promotional work for the chamber since Oct. 21, 1987.

At Monday's forum, Denning produced copies of billing notices to the chamber showing Denning and Associates lost money in 1988 through its financial dealings with the chamber.

In a statement released to area media, Denning said The Mercury had been aware of the information concerning her firm's financial dealings with the chamber "for weeks." The Mercury chose to publish the story in an "attempt to influence the outcome" of today's city commission election, she said.

According to the statement, "When the commission unanimously voted to continue the contracts with the chamber, my company had no contracts with the chamber nor any assurances we would be utilized in the future."

Commissioner Nancy Denning conducted an open forum Monday to discuss allegations made by The Manhattan Mercury.

Denning said she was aware of the story as early as March 24, when she was contacted by the The Mercury. She said she was told by representatives of The Mercury the story would not be published before Tuesday's election.

"Paul Rhodes said the story would not be published until after the election," Denning said. Rhodes is managing editor for The Mercury.

According to articles published Wednesday and Thursday in The Mercury, Denning has "cast votes over a two-year period that had the effect of channeling as much as $43,000 in public funds to a business she operates."

County Attorney Bill Kennedy said in an earlier statement his office was conducting an investigation into the accusations of conflict of interest.

Denning resigned March 27 from Manhattan's 700-member chamber because of the the allegations made against her, but said Denning and Associates was still available to work with the chamber.

Speaker: Consumer rights differ between countries

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Retired professor John Thirlwell, a leader in Great Britain consumer affairs, said it is the right of the consumer to question the manufacturer.

Thirlwell spoke to the Consumer Education and Protection Association of Kansas Inc. Monday at 1 p.m. as part of the group's annual consumer day forum.

Thirlwell, who has a mechanical engineering degree, said his efforts have been concentrated in the field of consumer product testing and reporting.

He said consumer interest in Great Britain began in 1936, but didn't catch on until 1942.

"Interest developed after the war due to the great American economic expansions," he said. "Many people felt consumer awareness was an important element."

The British Consumer's Association employs about 400 people in its offices outside the city of Westminster, he said.

The company publishes "Which" magazine, the British counterpart to "Consumer Reports." Thirlwell said it has been successful and has more than 900,000 subscribers.

"We are an independent organization with our own testing laboratories and car test track," Thirlwell said.

He said any consumer business must make enough money to survive and grow, but his organization does not receive funds from the government.

"With governments like (the United States and Great Britain) it is very wise to stand on your own two feet," he said.

He said the company can comment effectively on all consumer goods.

"We have the best washing machine tests in Europe, perhaps in the United States as well," he said.

Knowing a great deal about money has helped people in Great Britain to analyze and stay away from consumer problems, he said.

"This sort of thing is not done by opinion," he said. "When we give advice, we set it out to be exact — so it reads properly and the person will understand it."

Aside from "Which," Thirlwell said the organization publishes consumer books and guides to restaurants, hotels and public housing.

He said about 5 percent of the organization's turnover goes to campaigning, lobbying and international work.

"We are particularly interested in Third World countries," Thirlwell said. "The Third World now contains 116 countries, some of which are very poor and contain very small organizations, but all have the same sort of needs.

"Our ultimate goal is to protect the person paying the bill against the retailers who could do a variety of things, some of which are not being done deliberately, but they can still do them."

Thirlwell has served on the British Standards Institution and was elected to the city council of Westminster, said Richard Morse, professor of family economics.

The goal of the forum was to bring into focus some major consumer issues of today, Morse said.

"Accenting problems, making improvements, considering legislation, and consumer action and awareness are what we concentrate on."

In addition to Thirlwell's talk, lectures were given on consumer and economic education and consumer protection and regulation.

The forum was co-sponsored by the Consumer Relations Board of the K-State Student Governing Association, Friends of the Libraries and the English Speaking Union of Manhattan.

Bush, Egyptian leader begin talks

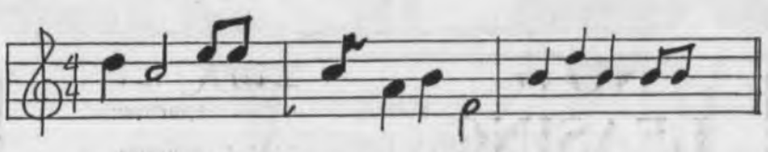
By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, opening a week of intensive talks on the Middle East, met with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on Monday and said "a new atmosphere" must be created between Israel and Arab nations.

After more than an hour of discussion, Bush urged an end to Israel's occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, endorsed the "achievement of Palestinian political rights" and said a "properly structured" international peace conference could play a useful role.

The tone of Bush's remarks suggested the United States may attempt to exert pressure for compromise on Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who arrives in the United States on Wednesday and confers with Bush on Thursday.

Shamir's government has opposed any settlement based on trading land for peace, and has been deeply skeptical about any international conference.



Mubarak, standing alongside Bush at a ceremony in the Rose Garden, said, "We found ourselves in agreement on most issues at stake."

Bush did not specify whether his administration was demanding total Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, seized in the 1967 Middle East war.

Nor did he define what he meant by a "properly structured" international conference, although a senior U.S. official said Bush emphasized "the key factor of direct negotiations in any peace process."

U.S. policy on the occupied territories has been to urge Israel to trade land for peace while leaving open the possibility of Israel retaining some of the land for security reasons.

In his talks with Bush, Mubarak rejected Shamir's suggestion for elections among Palestinians to find leaders who would negotiate their future with Israel, according to a senior U.S. official.

- Why most corporations will hire a 3.0 student instead of a 4.0 student.
- Why most interviewers know in the first 15 minutes if they'll hire you.
- How to make your interview an opportunity for the corporation, not an interruption.

Corporate sponsorship possible for schools

Once upon a time, television was a curse for educators: It was the inane and vacuous box that turned promising students into mushy-minded morons. Many talked of an entire TV generation — flabby bodies plopped into bean bags and La-Z-Boys, watching "Gilligan's Island" reruns, eating Lucky Charms and Frosted Flakes while their rotted teeth fall into the milk.

But all that is soon to change. "Channel One," the brain child of self-proclaimed "Media Guerilla" Chris Whittle, is a new TV program having a test run in several high schools across the country.

Whittle Communications gives each participating high school about $50,000 worth of video equipment, including satellite dishes, VCRs and televisions. In return, all the schools have to do is force their students to watch a 12-minute news and current events program put out by Whittle — "Channel One."

By all accounts, the program could be worse. The shows do make an honest attempt to mention something important, albeit superficially. But two of the program's 12 minutes are taken up with commercials from big corporate sponsors, like Levi's 501 jeans and Snickers candy bars. This, of course, is how Whittle can afford to give all the free video goodies to the schools.

Studies have shown that television has trained most of us to have short attention spans. Instead of trying to painfully reverse this tendency by inundating students with long, involved lectures, why not go with the flow? Interrupting lectures every 15 minutes with a word from sponsors would be a dandy way to raise money for our schools.

Moreover, "Channel One" is the kind of private sector initiative that gets conservatives all misty-eyed, for here at last is the kindly invisible hand of capitalism stepping in to improve our schools and bring joy to our lives.

If "Channel One" succeeds, conservatives will doubtless have more reasons to continue slashing education budgets. After all, if money-grubbing vultures like Chris Whittle are already making a mockery of our education system, why should the government get involved?

I can see the future now, and it means corporate sponsorship for education to a degree never known before. Can you see it too?

Commentary

Mark Schmeller

Collegian Columnist

Picture IBM Middle School in your future or maybe Prudential-Bache Prep. How about Exxon Elementary? Or International Harvester High School? Procter and Gamble Pre-School?

It seems to me that schools run by corporations would make for a much more honest approach to education. Instead of feeding the kiddies all this malarkey about the government and democracy running the country, why don't we let 'em know who really runs the show — big business.

Enough of this high school civics crap about the executive, judicial and legislative branches, and the FBI, CIA, EPA, HUD, DOD, DOJ, and all that. Tell the students about what really matters: AT&T, TRW, ITT, GTE, and RJR.

"Channel One" promises to mix the ethics of commercialism and the entertainment value of television with the enrichment of higher education to bring students a new and better learning experience.

No longer will they have to sit through all that abstract, impractical nonsense about Aristotle, DNA, Shakespeare, the Trojan War and quantum physics. Now students will be able to learn about things in the real world, like why Oxy-10 is better than Clearasil, or how Vidal Sassoon repairs split ends.

If "Channel One" makes it good, expect to see it on the university level as well. After all, universities are just as strapped for money.

K-State has already had some swell big-money programs. Remember the defense industry-sponsored "Perspectives On Biological Warfare: Uncommon Colds for Commies?"

How about the student foundation's tutorial on "South African Justice: The Corporate Perspective?" Or, what about that perennial K-State favorite, "Pesticides, Herbicides and Hormones: Food For Tomorrow's Mutated Americans," brought to you by a host of carrying agricultural companies.

Imagine the course offerings at the corporate university of the future: "Miller High Life presents: Brews, babes and biostatistical analysis," "Great writers, great side dishes: Uncle Ben's presents romantic poets and their favorite rice dishes," "Problems in biology: Bayer Aspirin, the wonder drug that works wonders," "The nothingness of being: Will a Snickers Bar fill it up?" and "Betty Crocker, Aunt Jemima and Mrs. Pauls: Leaders in the struggle for women's rights."

Imagine looking at a test and finding questions like: "How much would a McDonalds Quarter Pounder (pre-cooked weight) weigh on the surface of Mercury?" "Was Charlemagne a 'Bud Man'?" "Are neutrinos a subatomic particle or a tasty new breakfast cereal from Kelloggs?" "Could Spuds MacKenzie have survived the ice age?" "Compare and contrast the Tidy-Bowl Man with Ahab in Melville's Moby Dick."

The corporate-sponsored universities and public schools of the future will indeed be well-funded and easily accessible institutions. Come to think of it, they will be more than mere learning institutions; they'll be more like shopping malls of knowledge.

Racially tense election tests democratic ideals

Same song, second verse. Well, not quite.

For the second time this year, a present or previous member of a white supremacist group has been in the news regarding his association with public office.

It began in February when David Duke was elected to the Louisiana House of Representatives. The nation was shocked by the display of racism shown by the Louisiana community that elected him.

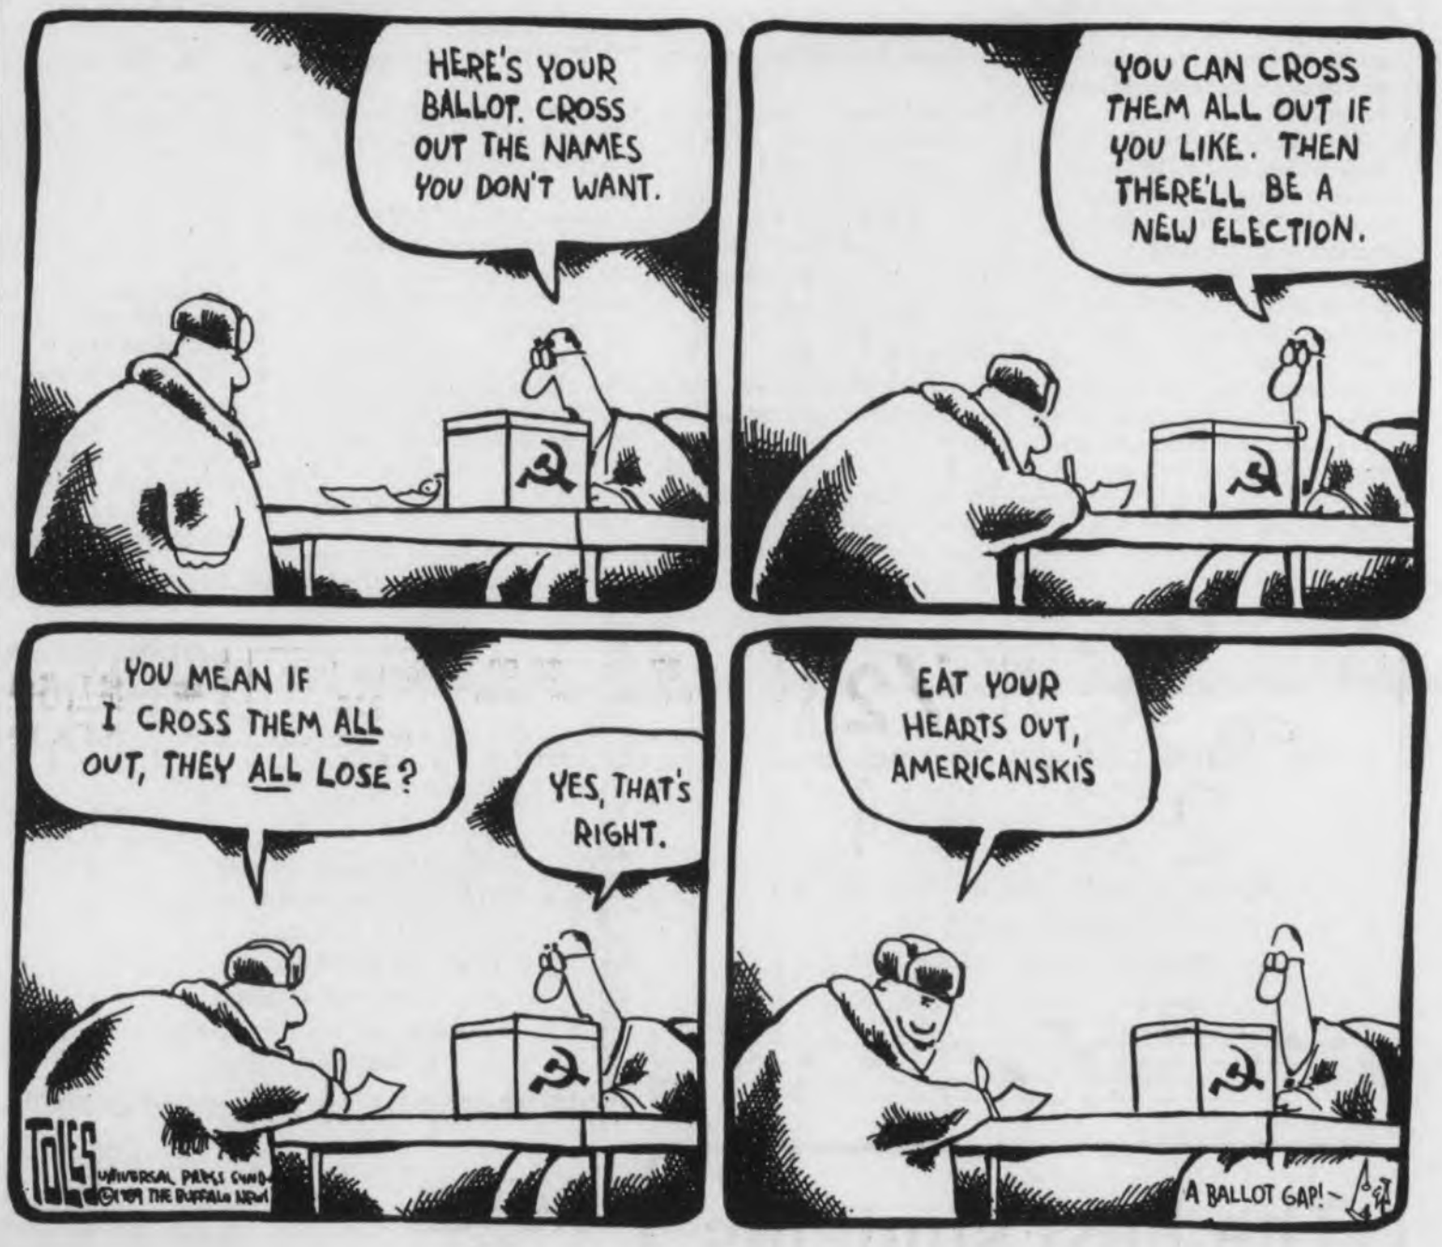
Blatant racism wasn't supposed to be around anymore. After all, the United States celebrates Martin Luther King Jr. Day; that should prove that racism is a bygone.

But the truth is, racism is alive and well in the United States, despite efforts to encourage equality among all races. The election of Duke only served to show that we had just been kidding ourselves about the state of racism in America.

And now, it would seem that the stage is set for this to happen all over again.

Dennis Mahon, a national Klan organizer, is running for one of the three open seats on the Northmoor Board of Aldermen in Northmoor, Mo. But this time the issues are a little different.

Whereas Duke had already won a democratic election in Louisiana, it was a little late to start complaining about him afterwards. That was action which should have been taken before he was elected. Mahon, however, has yet to be elected.



He has not only admitted to his involvement in the Klan, but has gone so far as to mail out copies of the Klan newspaper, containing such stories as "KKK and World Jewry."

However, despite his racist views, Mahon should not be barred from the election. Far from it. This is a chance for voters to prove that a democracy actually works.

Mahon should be given the same opportunity to run for a public office that any American citizen has. It is now up to the voting public to show that they actually care about who runs their community.

By restricting people from running for office on the basis of their beliefs, we would be no better than any other country that we condemn for interfering with free elections. If we were to start restricting candidates on this criterion, the propensity for abuse of this system would be great.

No matter how repugnant the views of Mahon and any other racist may be, they should still be allowed to run for office. That is the best way the voters can shows them how they feel about their antiquated, repulsive views.

Time to make sacrifices

Styrofoam usage should stop

Commentary

Saskia Given

Guest Columnist

As a student at K-State, I would like to see the University actively participate in the environmental movement, as many other universities across the county have. To start off with, we should eliminate the use of Styrofoam at the Union.

From June 1987 to May 1988, the Union used 1,182,400 Styrofoam products. These products are not only non-reusable, but they are also non-biodegradable. Most importantly, some of them are made with chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs), an ozone-destroying chemical.

During the course of making Styrofoam, 90 percent of the CFCs used are dispersed into the air, depleting our natural protection from ultraviolet rays. Not all of the Styrofoam used at the Union contains CFCs. The other Styrofoam uses pentane as a foaming agent. Pentane is a highly flammable, smog-causing hydrocarbon.

Styrofoam, technically called polystyrene, is composed of the following: benzene, a material known to cause cancer; pentane, a smog-causing chemical; carbon tetrachloride, a chemical which causes cancer in lab animals; and styrene, an extract of benzene, which has been linked to abnormal pulmonary function, cancer, chromosomal damage, and inhibition of blood platelets, which are used in the natural process of blood clotting.

Those of us who drink coffee out of Styrofoam cups are especially in danger. The combination of the heat and acidity in coffee causes the styrene in the Styrofoam to leach out, causing increased health hazards.

If all of this isn't bad enough, the disposal of Styrofoam brings us to many more startling facts. If you throw it away, it sits in the ground for 400 to 600 years, while our water and land absorb its poisons.

Experts have estimated that 25 percent to 32 percent of our garbage nationwide is made up of Styrofoam. This brings up the subject of our overburdened landfills, which many people are becoming aware of with the increased price of trash collection.

If you burn Styrofoam, it becomes a toxic air pollutant, and if you toss it out the window, wild animals eat it and die.

Why do we use this deadly product? The answer is that it is convenient. It is convenient because it is inexpensive and keeps our burgers and coffee warm.

Will we still insist upon this convenience when our air is too polluted to breathe, our children die of cancer, and our land has become a cemetery of our trash? Is this the world we want to leave to our surviving children?

The time to act is now. I propose, as an alternative to using Styrofoam, the Union could use a recyclable paper product. Paper is not as harmful to the atmosphere and it is biodegradable.

Also, Edward Rice, director of University Facilities, is beginning a recycling program here on campus through which these products could be recycled.

Many students may complain that paper cups and plates don't insulate as well as Styrofoam. To those customers who find paper products unbearable, I want to point out that the Union does offer alternatives.

There are the Willie mugs, but there are also glass and ceramic dishes provided at the Union. These alternatives are made as convenient as possible. If you purchased Wille mugs, not only is hot water provided to clean them after use, but a discount is also given to those who use them.

I spoke to Becky Lind, service dietician at the Union cafeteria, and she informed me the Union staff had tried to switch from Styrofoam to a less harmful product in the fall of 1986.

The majority of customers at the cafeteria complained and insisted the Union return to Styrofoam products. The new cups, they said, collected condensation and left puddles, causing their books, hands and paper to become wet. Because the change was met with such negative response, the Union returned to Styrofoam.

Now it is up to us, as concerned citizens and students of this University, to do our part. The Union has tried, but we fought against it. We must be willing to give up the convenience of Styrofoam to protect the safety and endurance of our land.

We must be willing to make sacrifices for the sake of our children in the future. If we don't do something, it may be too late for them, and maybe even for us.

Ruth Morris Keesling, president of the Digit Fund of Englewood, Colo., narrarates a slide show during the program "Saving the Mountain Gorilla" at the Manhattan Holidome Monday night.

Speaker promotes fundraising for mountain gorilla research

By The Collegian Staff

Dian Fossey's struggle for the preservation of the endangered mountain gorillas in Africa is not only the subject of the award-winning movie, "Gorillas In The Mist," but the driving force behind the Digit Fund's efforts to save the remaining 282 gorillas.

"The Digit Fund was founded in 1978 by Fossey, gorilla researcher, when one of her research gorillas, Digit, was speared, decapitated and had limbs cut off so poachers could make ashtrays out of his hands.

Ruth Morris Keesling, president of the Digit Fund in Englewood, Colo., presented her slide presentation, "Saving the Mountain Gorilla" and the video documentary, "Promises in the Mist," Monday night at the Manhattan Holidome.

Keesling was entrusted with the Digit Fund after Fossey was brutally murdered by a machete strike to the skull in her cabin at the Karisoke Reseach Center in Rwanda, Africa, in 1985.

"Dian Fossey was a strong woman who did amazing amounts of work with animals and understood them when she, herself, was misunderstood," said Don Wixom, education coordinator for the Sunset Zoo at the final presentation of the 1989 Winter Education Program Series.

"The movie has raised a level of consciousness among people and we're trying to capitalize on it to achieve our goals," Keesling said.

Fossey wrote in her diary, "I can only very half-heartedly conclude that Digit did not die totally in vain because he gave his life for his group so that they might survive. ... Perhaps, though, if the public has further knowledge of his life and personality, he can serve to protect those animals remaining."

"Our biggest task is to protect the gorillas from poachers because the gorillas get caught up in the wire snares."

—Ruth Morris Keesling
Digit Fund President

Keesling said, "The goals of the Digit Fund are to maintain the Karisoke Research Center in the Virunga Mountains in Rwanda, Africa, to promote and continue anti-poaching efforts, and to continue behavioral studies of the gorillas.

"It costs $85,000 to maintain the research center and $65,000 to maintain the Veterinary Center. When we inherited the Fund the current account only had $30,000," Keesling said, adding that the Fund is unable to meet its expenses.

"Our biggest task is to protect the gorillas from poachers because the gorillas get caught up in the wire snares," she said.

The wounds are difficult to see through their long coats. By the time the researchers detect the injury, the gorilla could be permanently maimed and have gangrene, Keesling said.

In addition, the center immunizes the gorillas, protecting them against human diseases.

Lecture on ozone set

Sites targeted for demonstration

By The Collegian Staff

Jeremy Rifkin, author, environmental activist and president of the National Foundation on Economic Trends, will deliver a public lecture on "The Global Greenhouse Crisis" at 3:30 p.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

Rifkin is expected to announce that he has organized a worldwide citizens' mobilization against the continued production of chlorofluorocarbons, said Rachel Greenwood, spokesperson for Kansas' Save the Earth Campaign. Some scientists believe CFCs are destroying the earth's ozone layer and contributing to a global warming trend.

"Rifkin comes at this problem from the angle of the impact of biotechnology on society," Greenwood said.

Kansas' Save the Earth Campaign is part of a coalition formed by Rifkin. The members of the coalition will meet at seven sites throughout the world April 22 and simultaneously conduct a peaceful demonstration against the continued production of CFCs, Greenwood said.

One of the sites targeted for this demonstration is Racon Inc., in Wichita, which is one of five chemical companies responsible for the production of CFCs in the United States, she said. Racon's sole business is the manufacturing of refrigerants including CFC-11 and CFC-12, two chemicals that harm the ozone, according to the coalition.

A Kansas Save the Earth Campaign publication states that the organization's members want to prohibit retailers from packaging products in Styrofoam; CFC producers to cease production within a one-year period; users to replace CFC with a safe alternative chemical and establish a fund for workers displaced by the phase-out of CFC production.

"There has been no scientific evidence produced that indicates CFCs are destroying the ozone."

—Maurice Knopf
Racon Inc. President

Maurice Knopf, president of Racon Inc., said: "We're doing everything we can to come up with a substitute (for CFCs).

"There has been no scientific evidence produced that indicates CFCs are destroying the ozone."

Greenwood said: "Up until about five years ago, (CFC producers) used to tell everybody that there was no evidence to support the public's concern that CFCs were eating up the ozone, but now we have evidence.

"NASA has been doing research on the environmental effects of CFCs for the past 10 years, and it says there's no doubt that CFCs are breaking down the ozone layer."

Knopf said: "I don't think the general public understands how many things these CFCs are put to use in. How many people are going to want to give up their refrigerators?

"We're trying to come up with safe alternatives, but we don't want to jump from the frying pan into the fire."

Steve Schurr, meteorologist for the National Weather Service, said: "To the best of my knowledge, there has not been any scientific evidence produced that absolutely proves CFCs are depleting the ozone or contributing to the global warming trend, but it's important to understand that tests used to gather this kind of information may take several years to show results."

Schurr said although scientists may not be able to link CFCs to the deterioration of the ozone layer, people should still be concerned because CFCs do pollute the air.

"If CFCs pollute the air, they can't be good, so why use them?" he said.

City Elections

School Board Candidates

Adjustment affects voting precincts in local elections

By Nancy Hill
City Editor

Area voters may be a bit confused when they vote today due to changes in some precinct boundaries. These boundary changes have reassigned or eliminated various voting places.

"We had to change the boundaries due to House Bill 2039," said Trisha Champlin, election coordinator. "This bill requires us to make the boundaries comform or follow something physical, like a street or a creek bed."

Champlin said those individuals affected by the precinct changes were notified by mail in December. If voters are still uncertain of where their polling place is located, Champlin said they can call the county clerk's office or refer to the new precinct map.

Polls will be open for voting today from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. To vote in this election, voters must have registered by March 14.

According to Marilyn Oertle, election clerk, the registered voter count for the USD 383 school board is 17,283. For the election of city commissioners, the count is 13,477 registered voters.

"Probably 30 to 35 percent voter turnout is expected," said Champlin. "School and city elections really don't get too many people out."

Electors will vote for up to three of the five Board of Education candidates. On the ballot are three incumbents: Beverly Eversmeyer, Martha Miller and Roger Reitz. Graham Rose and Meryl Wilson are the challengers for these positions.

The new Board of Education members will take office July 1.

In the City Commission race, two incumbents, Nancy Denning and Eugene Klingler, and four other candidates, Stanley Crowder, Dennis Marten, Roger Maughmer and Richard Seidler, are vying for three positions.

Dave Fiser, currently serving as mayor, is not seeking re-election this year.

The two candidates receiving the most votes in the City Commission election will serve four-year terms. The candidate receiving the third highest number of votes will serve a two-year term.

Vote totals have traditionally determined the selection of mayor.

Linda Spielman, executive secretary to the city manager, said the highest vote-getter will most likely be appointed mayor at the beginning of the third year of service.

"Nothing is written in concrete," Spielman said. "This year, since Kent Glasscock received the most votes two years ago, he will probably become mayor. The second highest vote-getter, Dick Hayter, will be mayor after Glasscock. Then whoever gets the highest votes this year will be mayor."

The newly elected commissioners will take office April 18.

Martha Miller

Occupation: Operations Manager for the Garment District
Manhattan resident: 29 years
Husband: Michael
Children: Clay, 27; Kyle 22

By Nancy Hill
City Editor

Incumbent Martha Miller is seeking her fourth four-year term as a Manhattan/Ogden Board of Education member.

"I continue to have an interest in every child having a good education in every school," Miller said. "(Twelve years) is not a particularly long term in this district.

"The future of community is sitting in the classroom," she said. "It's our responsibility to provide an appropriate education."

Miller is serving on the National School Board Association board of directors representing the western region which includes Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, Colorado and New Mexico.

"(Through this position) I have access to people and meetings at no cost to the local district," Miller said. "I am able to bring knowledge back to give to the local district.

Miller said she has had experience working with bond issues in her previous terms and believes this would be an advantage to the school board in the upcoming term.

"Funding is an issue that drives our entire school system," Miller said.

"I absolutely see a bond issue (this year). We must provide space (in the schools)," she said.

Space needs are present in all grade levels, Miller said. There is an overcrowding problem and the problem of teacher/student ratios.

"I don't think we've come to a point of solution," Miller said. "We haven't heard from the Core Committee or the community-based proposals.

"I'm not committed to any configuration. I don't have any preconceived notions, I'm open to considering everything. I believe we would be ill-advised to make a determination without real knowledge."

Miller said she is also concerned with the "social issues" and the "at-risk" student.

"We are going to need to address the pre-school and after-school needs of children," she said. "At-risk problems or social programs have an impact on education. We need to evaluate the programs in place and see if they are meeting the needs of these children."

Roger Reitz

Occupation: Doctor of Internal Medicine
Manhattan resident: 33 years
Wife: Virginia
Children: Russell, 26; Jennie, 24; Randy, 20; Sharon, 17; Laura, 15

By Nancy Hill
City Editor

Although the urgency of the "space issue" makes it the most prevalent issue the upcoming Board of Education must confront, an emphasis on logic and ethics is needed to help students make better personal judgements, said incumbent school board member Roger Reitz.

"Somehow someone needs to come up with a way for the kids to come to a logical conclusion when dealing with social issues such as drugs and alcohol," Reitz said.

Many people are relying on the school instead of the church or the family to teach values and ethics, he said.

Reitz, who has served 12 consecutive years as a school board member, said he "feels a definite need to be a good steward to the community."

"It's exciting to be part of the educational process," he said. "It's something I can work hard at and receive fulfillment from my work. I think I'm capable of making a good decision. I enjoy the work and am willing to do it."

On the lack of space available in district schools, Reitz said the Board of Education must wait for recommendations from the core committee researching the problem before any decision can be made.

"(The committee) will make suggestions, but the board still may make its own decision," Reitz said.

If he were to make the decision on his own, he would move all sixth graders to one school, alleviating the growth pressure from the grade schools.

Reitz said he favors a strong mandated curriculum for graduation requirements.

"We have no level to look at except a level of excellence. Many folks running for this job want to water that down," Reitz said. "A strong curriculum and one based on long term benefits as the board sees it should be set as requirements for graduation."

He believed individuals were elected to the Board of Education because they are honest, intelligent and able to make a judgement call.

"We don't want a toad in there who's going to be casual about the business," he said.

The problem with space and overcrowding in the district is an issue for many parents and people without children in school, said Graham Rose, candidate for USD 383 Board of Education.

The last bond issue was passed in 1979, Rose said. At the time, it was thought that this would solve the space problem for many years. Four years after the Amanda Arnold Elementary School opened, the district is full again.

"It is important to find solutions (to the overcrowding situation), not only long term solutions but we have to look at some temporary solutions very quickly," he said.

"The teacher-student ratio should be kept at a point that teachers can adequately teach," Rose said.

A long term solution to the overcrowding problem would be to implement a grade configuration grouping kindergarten through fifth grades, sixth and seventh grades, eighth and ninth grades and tenth through twelfth grades, he said.

This would eliminate crowding in the high school and grade schools, Rose said. Space would need to be developed to house sixth and seventh grades.

Rose said one of the most important issues facing the county and Manhattan is drug and alcohol abuse. Drug and alcohol abuse programs need to be in the curriculum, he said.

"The (drug and alcohol abuse) problem is alive and well in Manhattan," Rose said. "There are not going to be any short term solutions. The only way we are going to succeed is through a really intense educational program on this issue."

The program should be started at the kindergarten through sixth grade level, he said.

Rose said being a parent of three children gives him information on what is going on in the school system.

"Those parents who now have children in the school system have a very good idea what the students are dealing with, some of the issues (students) face and some of the issues we as parents face," Rose said.

As a pediatrician, Rose said he has the opportunity to be involved with parents and children on a daily basis.

"Many times we see kids who are having trouble with school or are in the office for what is apparently a physical reason but may be some stress and some things that interact with school."

By Nancy Hill
City Editor

At the conclusion of a two-year term as a USD 383 Board of Education member, Beverly Eversmeyer is seeking reelection. Eversmeyer was elected to fill the final two years of the late Donald Hill's school board term.

"The first year or so in a position you learn the ropes," Eversmeyer said. "I knew a lot about education but I've since learned a lot about the school board, budget, etc."

Eversmeyer said she is concerned about the issue of evaluation. Particularly, the evaluation of programs enacted by the administration or school board.

"If a teachers' group wanted to propose a program it would need an evaluation," she said. "The school board and administration projects need the same evaluation."

Eversmeyer cited the Core Committee, formed to deal with space problems in Manhattan schools, as an example.

"I want to see if we got our money's worth or whether they provided us with information we could have got ourselves," Eversmeyer said.

The extra 15 minutes added to the school day and the elimination of the practical English classes also need evaluation, she said.

"I want some objective data," Eversmeyer said.

In reference to the space problem, Eversmeyer said "There is some philosophical discussion the board has to deal with."

"Smaller class sizes, particularly in the lower class levels, are imperative," she said. "I know it's expensive, but when you creep above 30 (students) you have the overwhelming problem of grading (work)."

Other issues of concern are curriculum and increasing the number of required classes, Eversmeyer said.

"We're waiting to see what is mandated by the state," she said.

"I'm not a proponent of adding more time or required hours. The net result won't result in more learning."

Eversmeyer, a Manhattan High School counselor, said she believes her "insider point of view" is an advantage to the school board.

"I can tell what it's really like on the firing line," she said.

"Because I come in contact with every kind of kid, I know what it's like — I can defend their point of view," Eversmeyer said.

Developing an atmosphere in which teachers enjoy teaching and students enjoy learning is one issue Meryl Wilson, Board of Education candidate for USD 383, advocates.

"Teachers are asked to do more and more all the time and they get burned out," Wilson said. "We expect students to learn too much too soon."

To create this atmosphere, he said the overcrowding situation experienced in the Manhattan schools must be dealt with.

At Manhattan High School, core courses have a student/teacher ratio of 30-to-1. "Teachers wish they had more time to teach," Wilson said.

He said he is upset that the former and present boards have not done anything to alleviate the overcrowding problem. The problem "did not happen overnight," Wilson said. A lack of long-range planning contributed to the problem.

To eliminate overcrowding, he said the high school should consist of grades 10 through 12. The grade schools should have a kindergarten through fifth grade configuration while sixth and seventh grades should be combined and eighth and ninth grades combined.

By taking sixth grade out of the grade schools, two or three rooms would be available without construction, Wilson said. One new facility and an addition would have to be acquired for either sixth and seventh grades or eighth and ninth grades.

"Academically and socially it's a good breakdown. There's a large difference in maturity level between a 14-year-old and an 18-year-old," Wilson said.

A solid, well-rounded, "back-to-the-basics" curriculum needs to be developed, he said. Foreign language, fine arts and other specialized courses should be available, but not required for graduation.

"Those students who are marginal now are never going to complete the foreign language requirement," Wilson said. "We need practical courses for those who aren't going to go (to college)."

Wilson said school board members should be in touch with students in the community. He and his wife Nancy have six children.

"It is very important that whoever serves on a school board either has daily contact with school-age children or has children of their own in school," he said.

City Commission Candidates

Stanley Crowder

Occupation: Maintenance Engineer at University Inn
Manhattan resident: 13 years
Wife: Vickie
Children: Joseph, 17; Angela, 9; Anthony, 6
Main issue of concern: Manhattan Municipal Airport

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

City Commission candidate Stanley Crowder says he would make a good commissioner because he cannot be "bought off."

"I figure it's about time for a change in the system," Crowder said. "I can't be bought off. I'm not for sale. I don't believe in this 'I'll scratch your back if you scratch mine' way of looking at things."

Crowder said many local issues are of concern to him, but education and the condition of Manhattan's streets take a high priority.

"We need to take care of the roads we've got before we build any more," he said. "I think the contractors who do work on our streets should have to give a warranty. If the road tears up in a certain amount of time they should have to come back and fix it."

Crowder said he does not have a strong opinion about the annexation of K-State; however, perhaps the city of Manhattan should "keep its nose out of" University affairs.

"The city of Manhattan ought to back off and let K-State run its own business," he said. "Too many cooks spoil the stew."

He said he feels the state of the Manhattan Municipal Airport needs to be discussed.

"There are people in this town who have never even been in a plane," he said. "Why should the average taxpayer have to pay for it? I think there should be a user fee."

Crowder said he realizes the local jail has problems with overcrowding, but if harsher punishments were to be implemented, there would be fewer repeat offenders, and thus more space.

The candidate said he has no previous political experience but he travels extensively in the Manhattan area and knows how people feel about the issues.

"I travel all over the place and keep my ears open," he said. "I might not have all the answers, but I talk to people."

Nancy Denning

Occupation: Denning and Associates
Manhattan resident: 13 years
Husband: John
Children: Susan, 15; David, 13
Main issue of concern: Manhattan Municipal Airport and infrastructure

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

Nancy Denning, incumbent City Commissioner, said it is very important for the Commission to continue working in the same positive manner it has been for the last several years.

"What you have seen (in the last several years) is a very logical, almost meticulous, way we have been solving problems," Denning said. "And I think there is a real push to continue so that all sides are looked at and not just one issue or one special group."

There will always be problems for the Manhattan City Commission to tackle, she said, so it is important to prioritize the problems and then figure out how to proceed in solving them.

One problem facing the commissioners is the proposed improvements to the Manhattan Municipal Airport, said Denning.

She believes an improved airport could be beneficial to the city because it could act as a gateway to the Manhattan community and help with economic development in the area, she said.

It would also benefit the city if Fort Riley were to help with funding and help re-establish services such as Medivac, Denning said.

Although previously opposed to airport improvements, Denning said that after seeing a detailed report by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce on the issue, she changed her mind on the subject. However, Denning said it was still important to "weigh all sides of the issue."

The annexation of the K-State campus is another issue Denning feels the city commission needs to work on.

"I think we should consider (the decision to annex K-State)," she said. "However, it is further down the road than just right now."

Denning has not looked into the issue enough to form an opinion as to whether K-State should be annexed into the city, she said.

Eugene Klingler

Occupation: Surgeon
Manhattan resident: 21 years
Wife: Sue
Children: Becky, 24; Leah, 22; Heidi, 19; Doug, 17
Main issue of concern: Tax increases

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

With reappraisal raising state taxes and the possibility of new county taxes, incumbent City Commissioner Eugene Klingler said he hoped the Manhattan City Commission could avoid any tax increases in the near future.

Klingler does not foresee the city sponsoring any major projects that could cause a tax increase.

Klingler was unopposed to improvements to the Manhattan Municipal Airport "as long as we can fund them without dipping into the general fund of the taxpayers."

He is proposing an increase in the transient guest tax that would pay for improvements to the airport.

The annexation of K-State into the city is a topic Klingler sees the City Commission addressing in the near future.

"If we do it, we will look at it from every angle possible, and certainly we would do it with full discussion with the Board of Regents and the representatives here at Kansas State University," he said.

Points that could be mutually beneficial and problems with zoning, fire codes and street maintenance could be worked out, Klingler said.

City planning, especially concerning economic development and updating the city's land-use plan, is of major importance to Klingler.

"I think we are going to have to look at what we can afford to promote in the way of development," he said.

"We should probably turn our attention toward retail development rather than manufacturing, at least in part, but not in whole. We have got a lot of retail space around the city and we are trying to establish Manhattan as a retail hub."

The city's land-use plan, which is about 20 years old, is a matter the city will have to face no matter who is on the commission, he said.

Dennis Marten

Occupation: Store Owner of Ben Franklin Crafts
Manhattan resident: 5 years
Wife: Beth Ann
Children: Robert, 5; David, 5 months
Main issue of concern: Roads and city service

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

Dennis Marten said he belives the voice of the local retailer is important and hopes to make that voice heard by being elected a Manhattan city commissioner.

Marten, like the people he is hoping to represent, is a Manhattan retail shop owner. He has owned and operated the Ben Franklin craft store since moving to Manhattan five years ago.

"I strongly feel that retailers need to be heard," Marten said. "I've been urged to run by a number of people who operate their own retail businesses."

Despite lacking any city government experience, Marten said he possesses sound educational and community service backgrounds.

Marten said he lists the strengthening of communication channels as a priority he will face if chosen to the commission.

"I feel we must improve communication with other government bodies," he said. "There must also be continued cooperation with Kansas State University and Fort Riley, because some of the issues concerning those areas are bigger. I think the current commission has been really concerned with public input."

Concerning the issue of annexing K-State into the city, Marten said he sees it as a "definite advantage to the city."

"I'm for looking into the possibility of annexation, but not a unilateral annex," he said. "I'd hate to do it without discussion with the University."

Attention must also be given to Riley County transportation facilities, particularly Manhattan Municipal Airport, Marten said. Commissioners have recently taken steps to alleviate air traffic control problems and discussions have taken place regarding the possibility of regionalizing the facility.

"I see the Manhattan area and issues concerning it growing more and more as a region," Marten said. "A lot of things concerning Manhattan also concern people in Geary, Clay, Pottawatomie and other surrounding counties. I think this is something that must be recognized."

Roger Maughmer

Occupation: Manager of Southwestern Bell
Manhattan resident: 14 years
Wife: Barbara
Children: Glen, 23; Bob, 21
Main issue of concern: Finances and budget

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

City commission candidate Roger Maughmer said the greatest challenge facing the Manhattan City Commission will be the transition from the 1980s to the 1990s, and he wants to be part of the changes.

"Manhattan has been a progressive city with many improvements and it will be important for us to maintain that level of commitment," Maughmer said. "We need to evaluate things based on what we need to do and what we can afford to do."

He said he believed the commission should have the goal of maintaining Manhattan's progressive stance.

Maughmer has been interested in city goverment for many years.

"I've paid a lot of attention to the issues," he said. "I ran unsuccessfully for city commission two years ago and just decided to run again this year."

Maughmer said the most important issues facing the city are the improvement of the Manhattan Municipal Airport and the condition of local streets and roads. He said a number of things need to be done at the airport.

"The top item on the agenda has to be not only to make the airport safe but to restore the image that it is safe," Maughmer said. "We also need to be able to increase the number of (people using the airport), perhaps by striking a partnership with the airlines so that they have a concern in getting more boardings there."

With reappraisal and reclassification affecting many Manhattan residents, Maughmer is aware of the increased concern these citizens will have regarding city expenditures of tax dollars. For this reason, he said city spending will be a very important issue for the Commission to confront.

He said he has not studied the potential annexation of K-State in great detail.

"I would have to look at it in some detail to see what the positive and negative aspects for both the city and the University would be."

Richard Seidler

Occupation: Owner and Manager of Furniture Center
Manhattan resident: 20 years
Wife: Donna
Children: Brian, 16; Brad, 13
Main issue of concern: Manhattan Municipal Airport

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

Richard Seidler said a strong social service background and the desire to make a contribution to the city of Manhattan are two assets he possesses in his candidacy for the Manhattan City commission.

"I've been in social services a long time," Seidler said. "I basically feel that they are an investment in the community."

Seidler lists the current issues regarding Manhattan Municipal Airport as a top concern he will face if elected to the commission.

The current commission recently decided to work with Midwest Air Traffic Control Service Inc. to establish a permanent 17-foot control tower at the airport, and discussions have taken place to regionalize the facility. The regionalization would create more services to Fort Riley and Junction City.

Seidler said another main concern of his is the local economy. He cited K-State and Fort Riley as two hotbeds for economic stability.

"They are the two most important economy items we have," Seidler said. "I think we need to be sensitive toward the needs of these two areas."

On the issue of the possible annexation of K-State into the city of Manhattan, Seidler said it is "kind of a good news, bad news thing."

"On the surface it sounds like an attractive idea, but I would have to know more of our responsibilities to the University before I could take a firm stand on it," he said.

Seidler praised the current commission for taking what he called "some key steps on various issues."

"For the last four years, I think the commission has done a really good job," Seidler said. "There are some things on the horizon that I feel are important, and although some of them may not be viewed by the public as burning issues, I feel they need to be addressed."

"I'd like to make a contribution to Manhattan. I think Manhattan is a really neat place to live and raise a family. I'd like to make sure it stays that way."

McCain director hopes programs appeal to students, area residents

By The Collegian Staff

Booking shows for McCain Auditorium requires being able to get out-of-the-ordinary acts that attract audiences composed of students and area residents.

"We can't run a popularity contest, but it's no good to have an empty house," said Richard Martin, director of McCain. "I've been known to walk up to people and ask them, 'We have been thinking of bringing X here, what do think?'"

Martin schedules about 15 major programs a year for McCain and about 250 additional shows.

"You have to find out what students want," he said. "Many students come from small communities and have never had the opportunity to see events like we're able to present."

Promoters send him information or videotapes about the performances.

"I try to work ahead one to two years," he said.

After determining possible dates and times, Martin discusses the choices with the McCain Development Board. The board is composed of seven advisers who help with the voting process and 28 members who are students, faculty or Manhattan residents.

"We try to schedule events around major University events, so there won't be any conflict," he said.

"We rely on his expertise. He is an excellent negotiator," said Mary Lee Graham, president of the McCain Development Board. "He is very good about taking input."

Martin said the programs are supported through ticket sales and donations. The University provides funds for salaries and building upkeep.

"There are a lot of performers that we just can't afford. I was quoted a price on a symphony as being $75,000," he said. "We obviously can't afford that."

Getting performers to do shows in Manhattan doesn't present many problems, he said. Transportation, however, is another story.

"Getting people from Kansas City to Manhattan is the biggest problem," he said. "Many of the performers have large instruments or sets that won't fit on a small airplane."

The Vienna Choir Boys, who performed Oct. 23, have been the largest attraction to ticket buyers this season. The Tulsa Ballet Theatre's presentation of "The Nutcracker" on Dec. 10 was the second largest attraction.

Future events include performances by the New York City Opera National Company, Black Light Theatre and Houston's Alley Theatre.

Gorbachev, Castro begin meetings

By The Associated Press

HAVANA — Presidents Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Fidel Castro went behind closed doors Monday for talks expected to air their ideological differences and highlight the problems of Third World nations.

Gennady I. Gerasimov, a Soviet spokesman, was asked if Gorbachev would offer to forgive Cuba's massive debt to the Soviet Union and he said that subject was not discussed specifically.

At a reception after the day's talks, Castro told reporters: "Not one word was said about debt because for us it is not a problem."

He refused to say what was discussed but promised there would be "glasnost manana" when Gorbachev addresses the Cuban National Assembly.

Glasnost is Gorbachev's policy of greater openness and the Soviet leader is to address the assembly today.

Gerasimov said Gorbachev's initial discussions with Castro and the Cuban Communist Party's Central Committee were held in a "friendly atmosphere" and the two leaders did talk about the "enormous debt plundering the economies" of Latin American countries.

"Not one word was said about debt because for us it is not a problem."
—Fidel Castro

He also said Gorbachev reported on the Soviet Union's recent multi-candidate parliamentary elections, which were seen as a victory for the party's reformers. Castro, who has never allowed competitive elections in his 30-year rule, has openly criticized Gorbachev's reforms, saying they borrowed too much from the capitalist world.

Between ceremonial wreath layings at monuments to Jose Marti, the father of Cuban independence, and Lenin, the first Communist head of the Soviet Union, Castro and Gorbachev began their discussions in the Palace of the Revolution with members of their staffs facing each other across a conference table.

Later, with the formalities completed, the two presidents went into private talks accompanied only by their interpreters.

Gorbachev's wife, Raisa, visited a day care center, a Cuban-Soviet friendship center and planned to tour the home of the late American author Ernest Hemingway, who lived for many years on an estate that is now a museum outside Havana.

Both Raisa and her husband have mentioned reading Hemingway, a writer whose works have been translated into Russian and are popular in the Soviet Union.

Gerasimov said Gorbachev and Castro, in their opening talks, exchanged views on the March 26 Soviet elections and discussed problems in Latin America, particularly those of indebtedness and the drug trade.

The spokesman observed that Latin American countries are increasingly becoming drug suppliers to North America while at the same time increasingly becoming drug consumers.

The debt is only one aspect of the economic ties between the Soviet Union and Cuba.

Soviet economic aid to Cuba is estimated by Western sources at between $4 billion and $7 billion annually, substantially more per capita than U.S. assistance to any Latin American country.

Student wins tuition in Spurs' fundraiser

By Michael Nichols
Campus Editor

The $5 Alan Proctor contributed to Farrell Library on Friday could be the wisest $5 he will ever spend as a K-Stater.

Proctor, freshman in electrical engineering, won free tuition for next semester in a drawing Saturday afternoon sponsored by Spurs sophomore honorary, said Clinton Riley, junior in chemical science and Spurs member. Students were asked to donate $5 and register their names for the drawing, which raised funds to buy new furniture and computers for Farrell.

After discounting Proctor's prize, Spurs raised about $1,300 during the weeklong fundraiser.

"I know it's not going to have a huge impact on the condition of Farrell Library, but it's nice to see students making an effort," Riley said.

"The library is delighted," said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of library development. "I feel it was a splendid idea for Spurs to do this, and we appreciate the effort and hard work they put into this."

Quiring said the fundraiser was worthwhile because it gave a student free tuition, the library received money designated for a specific purpose in the best interest of students, and Spurs received publicity for a good cause.

"I knew about (the drawing) from (Riley)," Proctor said. "I had just cashed a check and he caught me in a good mood, so I gave $5."

The money will probably be used to buy new on-line computer terminals or possibly some tables and chairs, Quiring said.

Most contributions were taken Saturday during the All-University Open House activities, Riley said.

"We did about as well Saturday as we had the rest of the week combined," he said. "Parents and incoming freshmen contributed a lot, but the majority of money was collected from students on campus."

Riley said the money raised by Spurs will be presented to Quiring at 1:30 p.m. today.

Police capture inmate 5 hours after escape

By The Associated Press

ATCHISON — An inmate from the state's medium-security prison in Oskaloosa was captured five hours after he escaped Monday.

James Lee Parker, 21, a minimum-custody inmate serving one to five years for theft in Logan County, jumped over a fence Monday morning at the plant where he worked, said Bill Lucas, spokesman for the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing.

Leavenworth County Sheriff Terry Campbell said authorities apprehended Parker shortly before 1 p.m.

Campbell said Easton resident David Zule told authorities he was feeding cattle at his home when he noticed a blue truck that appeared to be stuck. Zule later returned to his home where he was met by a man with a handgun who matched the suspect's description.

Police said Parker then took Zule's money and forced the man to make him something to eat before tying him up and fleeing.

Zule later freed himself and called authorities, who apprehended Parker after a short chase.

Atchison County authorities said Parker stole the pickup truck he was driving from a Jefferson County resident.

They said Parker was not armed when he was apprehended.

Royals drop season opener to Toronto

By The Collegian Staff

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Toronto reliever Tom Henke thwarted a late comeback attempt by the Kansas City Royals to help the Blue Jays hold onto an opening day 4-3 win Monday afternoon at Royals Stadium.

After Toronto had taken an early 4-0 lead, Kansas City scored three runs in the seventh to pull to within one and make things interesting.

"You couldn't ask for a better game on opening day than that," Royals manager John Wathan said. "I'm proud of the way our guys came back today."

The Blue Jays had to survive the Royals' comeback efforts in the bottom of the ninth before they could celebrate the win.

Bo Jackson led things off against Ward with what appeared to be a routine single to right-center. But Jackson legged it into a double and appeared to have the Royals started on the way to a comeback bid.

Bob Boone's sacrifice bunt moved Jackson to third with the tying run and only one out with Frank White at the plate. White was 1-for-3 on the day to that point, and represented the potential winning run.

With the count even at 1-1, he attempted to lay down a suicide squeeze bunt with Jackson charging down the line from third. But when the ball rolled just inches foul, White was in a 1-2 hole, and took a called third strike to leave the Blue Jays just one out away from the win.

With switch-hitting shortstop Kurt Stillwell coming to the plate, Toronto manager Jimy Williams elected to go with the big right-hander, Henke, to close out the game.

Stillwell popped out to second baseman Manny Lee, ending the rally and giving Henke the save. It also left some second guessers of Wathan as to why Bill Buckner or Jim Eisenreich did not pinch hit for Stillwell.

"Kurt has been hitting the ball well of late," Wathan said. "He is a better left-handed hitter."

The Royals didn't receive much help from the top third of the lineup, either. Willie Wilson, Kevin Seitzer, and George Brett were a combined 0-for-12. Seitzer and Brett each struck out twice.

Ward came on in relief of starter and winner, Jimmy Key, in the seventh inning with no one out. Key had breezed through the first six innings, surrendering only four hits while striking out four as the Blue Jays posted a 4-0 lead.

But Danny Tartabull started the seventh with a single, and scored on a double off the left-centerfield wall by Pat Tabler. After Key gave way to Ward, Jackson greeted him with a sharp single to center, scoring Tabler and cutting the Toronto lead in half.

Jackson then stole second, moved up to third on a groundout by Boone, and scored on a groundout by White to pull the Royals within one at 4-3.

While Key seemed to be breezing along, Royals starter Mark Gubicza was struggling to find his control. The Blue Jays put their lead-off man on base in the first two innings, and again in the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh innings.

It paid dividends as the lead-off man scored in the second, fourth and seventh innings and the second hitter also scored in the fourth.

Gubicza said he was not any more nervous than he would normally be to be pitching on opening day.

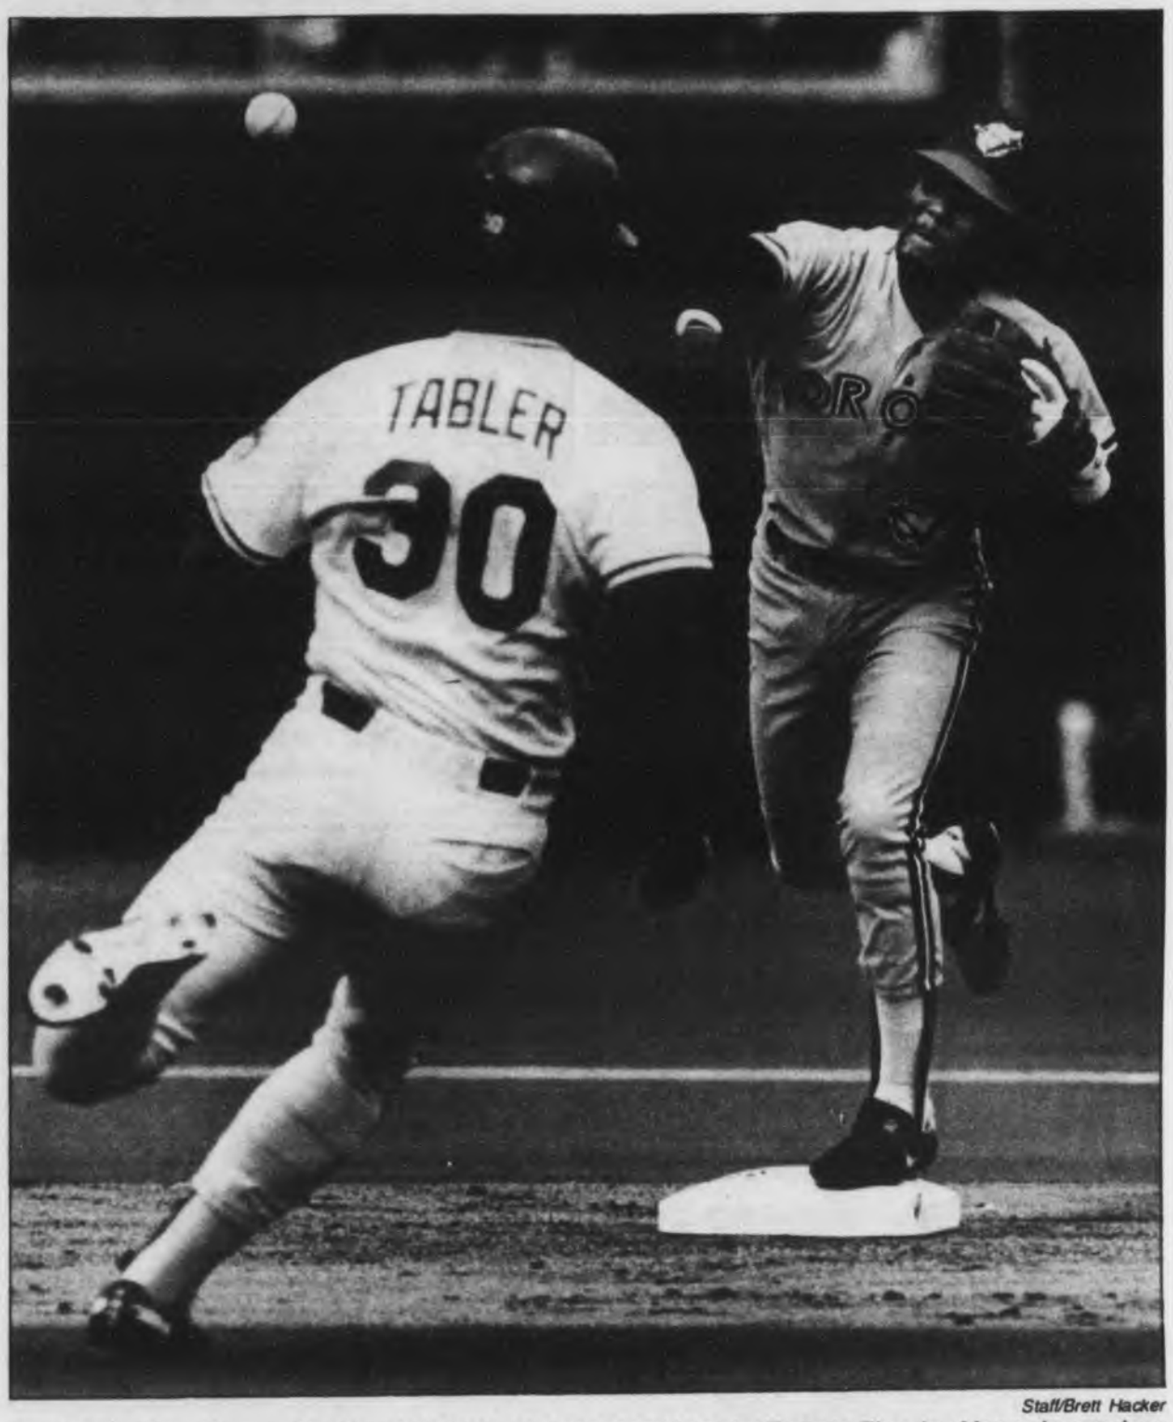
"I didn't pitch an overly good game, but I hung in there," Gubicza said.

"I don't think Goobie has anything to be disappointed about," Wathan said.

Gubicza threw in an added word for Boone, the Royals' new catcher.

"He helped me a lot. He knows the hitters better than I do. I think he did a real good job with me today."

Rookie Tom Gordon pitched the last two innings and was impressive, allowing only a single and striking out one.



"Certainly what the starters needed was to look out and see Tom in the bullpen," Wathan said. "He did a fine job today."

The series resumes Wednesday night with Charlie Leibrandt starting for the Royals and Dave Stieb for the Blue Jays.

Even when the home team loses, it's still fun at the ballpark

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — There's nothing like fun at the old ballpark — even when the home team loses, as it did Monday in Royals Stadium.

The Kansas City Royals and Toronto Blue Jays treated an Opening Day crowd of more than 38,000 to an exciting game despite the 4-3 win posted by the visitors from the north.

Toronto's victory was well earned — the Royals had an opportunity for a win with a tying run at third base and one out in the ninth inning but failed to take advantage.

Details of the game notwithstanding, Monday's activities at the park illustrate some of the things that make baseball truly unique.

Opening Day, obviously, is filled with a great deal of pomp and circumstance you don't get at a Wednesday-night game in June, but the pregame festivities were part of the total entertainment package the Royals put together for those in attendance.

Although I arrived at the park a full hour after the gates opened at 11:30 a.m., I was still there in plenty of time to see three different bands perform.

The Marching Cobras, a group of talented musicians and dancers, strutted their stuff first, and as they did a mysterious "fog" was rolling around the artificial surface.

The early rains combining with the mid-morning heat created a setting much like one on a golf course on an early-July morning. The only thing like it that I've ever seen was generated by dry ice. This was Mother Nature's work at its finest — even on fake grass.

When the Cobras were done, the Olathe North High School band took the field for its set.

It was a great performance, I'm sure, but I really didn't get to enjoy it because the fans in the left field and right field general admission areas had begun bouncing their beach balls up and down in the stands. Their noise all but made the band sound like it was performing at one of the hotels across the highway from the park.

Everything the bands did was peppered with baseball flavoring. As Olathe North's selections were announced, they were tied to significant moments in Royals history.

How wonderful it was to know that Pee Wee Herman's revitalization of the hit "Tequila" happened during the same year the Royals won the World Series — 1985.,

By the time the rosters of both teams were introduced, and a third band had taken the field for the performance of both national anthems, it was time for baseball, right?

Wrong.

In conjunction with Greater Kansas City Day, which made the day into a celebration of civic pride as well as pride in the boys in blue, the Kansas City Star and Times had a contest to select the person who would be so honored as to be allowed to throw out the first ball.

The lucky fan was from Stilwell, Kan. That's rather appropriate since the starting shortshop and No. 9 batter for Kansas City in the contest was Kurt Stillwell.

The game started promptly at 1:35 p.m. with Lloyd Moseby lining Mark Gubicza's first delivery into left for a single.

That instantly brought a mixed chorus of "Oh, no," and "Here we go again," from the crowd. The Royals hadn't won an opener since 1985, and the opening inning was providing a rather bad omen.

It got worse, and as it did more fans made their way toward the concession stands and restrooms than stayed in their seats.

Those Royals fans that stayed in their seats were finally rewarded with some offense after Toronto had taken a 4-0 lead. When Danny Tartabull, Pat Tabler and Bo Jackson strung together hits in the seventh that eventually pulled the Royals to within one, the crowd went wild.

Then Tom "Flash" Gordon, Kansas City's heralded rookie pitcher, took the mound in relief of Gubicza, and he provided several thrills with a curve ball that baffled Blue Jay hitters.

The ninth inning, however, gave all in attendance a lesson in baseball love in just three outs.

Jackson opened the inning by lining a single into center and running it into a double as the crowd stood in stunned amazement that spontaneously turned into a deafening roar.

With Jackson in scoring position, Manager John Wathan made his first controversial move of the inning, asking Bob Boone to bunt Jackson over. Boone succeeded, and with one out Jackson was on third. There were no second guessers now, but there soon would be.

With one strike to Frank White, the Royals second baseman attempted to drop a squeeze bunt, but the ball rolled foul and Jackson, who had crossed the plate standing up by the time the ball crossed the foul line, was sent back to third.

White then took strike three. Now the second guessers were out in full force. "Why not let Boone hit away? Jackson's going to score from second on a single anyway, and Boone hit over .400 in spring training." "Why bunt with White? All it takes is a fly ball and the game is tied."

And so on, and so on.

That was the tip of the iceberg as Wathan let Stillwell hit for himself against Tom Henke. Stillwell popped weakly to second to end the game. "Where were (Bill) Buckner and (Jim) Eisenreich?" "Has Wathan lost it?" "We'll never win with this bum managing!"

After yelling an expletive as Stillwell's popup moved skyward, I reached for my plastic cup and made my way for the exit. I got out of the parking lot with relative ease, and saw only one accident on the way home.

And even though the home team lost, I'll bet I'll be back soon, and so will those second guessers who were there with me. Baseball is addictive, and the junkies started getting their fixes again Monday.

Maybe that wasn't fog after all. I might just have been overcome by my love for the game. Afterall, I'm an addict too.

'Cats 2nd, 9th after 1st round

From Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State men's and women's golf teams are in second and ninth place respectively after finishing first-day rounds in their respective tournaments Monday.

The Wildcat men finished Monday's 36-hole round at the Wichita State Invitational with a score of 627 to put them in a second-place tie with Southwest Missouri State. WSU leads the tourney with a score of 608.

Individually for the Wildcats, Brad Stephans is tied for seventh place overall with a score of 155, while Troy Keller hit 156, Brett Vuillemin 157, Jeff Sedorcek 159 and John Shields 167.

Four players tied for individual honors Monday with a 152. Second-round play today will consist of 18 holes.

"I had a feeling that they would be tough to beat on their home course," K-State coach Russ Bunker said of WSU. "It's been cold and windy and that could affect our effort (today)."

Meanwhile, the K-State women's team was at the Sue Berning-Oklahoma Invitational where it shot a ninth-place score of 519 after 27 holes.

Chris Adams ended Monday's rounds with a 10th-place score of 119, while Jill Zientara shot 129, Adena Hagedorn 133, and Lonna Dale 138.

Two players, Judy Schneider of Alabama and Andra Burks of Oklahoma, are tied for the lead at 111.

Today the men will play an 18-hole round, while the women will play another 27 holes to wind down the competition.

NCAA rules committee considering changes

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The proprietors of college basketball look proudly at their product and proclaim it the best game on the sports block. That's not to say, however, that they are unwilling to alter it.

Within the last decade, they've changed it substantially, introducing the still-controversial 3-point shot and forcing teams to shoot within 45 seconds.

What will they do for the next decade? How will the face of basketball change as the game approaches the year 2000 and the 21st century?

Ed Steitz, secretary-editor of the NCAA rules committee and who is called the father of the 3-point shot, thinks it will continue to evolve.

"By then, we'll have a wider lane, from the current 12 feet to the Olympic width of 18 feet," Steitz said. "It will minimize rough low post play, open the lane for the drive and enhance the clever, low post player. We have to do something to minimize congestion. There are so many big people in such a confined area."

That confined area will be adjusted eventually, too, Steitz said.

"I see them lengthening the court by about 20 percent," he said. "It's an end line to end line game now with much less half court play."

The speed of the game and efficiency of the shooters continues to improve and Steitz thinks that trend will continue and cause the 19-foot, 9-inch distance for 3-point shots and 45-second clock to be adjusted.

"The clock will be reduced, probably to 30 seconds," he said. "The 3-point goal will be moved out in relation to shooting percentages."

A committee of coaches already has suggested changing the 3-point shot to the international distance of 20 feet, 9 inches. Steitz does not believe that change will be approved by the rules committee this week because NCAA research does not show any substantial change in the accuracy of shooters from 19-9.

Late charities end Seton Hall dream

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo had no complaints about the foul call that enabled Michigan to beat his Pirates 80-79 Monday night for the NCAA basketball championship.

The man who committed the foul, Gerald Greene, wasn't so sure.

"I'm not being smart when I say that game was well officiated," Carlesimo said. "John Clougherty to me is one of, if not the best, officials in the country.

"We couldn't ask for anybody else we'd rather have make the call when the game is on the line than John Clougherty."

Clougherty called Greene for fouling Michigan's Rumeal Robinson at the free throw line with three seconds to go in overtime and Seton Hall leading 79-78. Robinson, the worst free-throw shooter in the Michigan starting lineup this season at 64 percent, made both shots to give the Wolverines the victory.

"I think it could have gone either way," Greene said.

"I just saw him penetrating to the hole," he added. "I just tried to cut him off on an angle. But we both collided together and the ref called the foul.

"I felt that I was in good enough position to pick up the offensive foul, but the ref called a block."

Robinson, who made nine of 10 free throws, didn't think there was any doubt Greene fouled him.

"I was fouled off the dribble," he said. "He fouled me. I could have easily missed those two shots but thank God they both went in and we won the national championship."

Monday was Greene's 23rd birthday.

"You don't have to spend a lot of money to get a collection started," Woodward said. "This was one major attraction in beginning my collection."

RICH SEIDLER for CITY COMMISSION

Dear Voters,

The many people I have spoken to and met with have been consistent in the things they expect from a commissioner. They are: open-mindedness, the ability to see things from another's point of view and honesty. I feel I possess these qualities and that my past involvements in civic and city activities qualify me to represent you on our commission. I will work for all of Manhattan and all of its people, but most important of all, I will listen to your concerns and do what I can to solve your problems. Can we really expect any less from a commissioner? I would appreciate your support on April 4th.

Measures to combat terrorism increased

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States announced new measures to combat sky terrorism Monday as relatives of passengers killed in the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing mounted a campaign to complain about aviation security and the government's "lack of compassion" following the disaster.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner, who along with President Bush met with several relatives of those killed in the explosion over Scotland, told a news conference that airlines will be required to install devices to detect plastic explosives in major U.S. and foreign airports.

Relatives of victims in the Dec. 21 explosion, which has been blamed on a plastic device hidden in a radio-cassette player, praised Bush for concern shown in the meeting and said Skinner's announcement was a good first step.

But spokesman Bert Ammerman of Demarest, N.J., told a rally across the street from the White House that measures announced by Skinner were "not enough."

Ammerman, whose brother Tom was one of 270 victims of the crash, asked for a unified congressional investigation of the disaster, hand-searching of all luggage put aboard airliners, and an end to a system that allows notification only of airline, airport and government security personnel when there's a terrorist threat.

Skinner said he would recommend against a coordinated congressional inquiry, although Bush told the relatives he would consider pressing for such a probe as opposed to several separate congressional investigations.

Skinner said the FBI and Scotland Yard were best qualified to conduct the criminal investigation.

cent black, but that doesn't mean that should deter us from dealing with minorities in education," he said. "Every historical document in America that deals with education somehow gets around to mentioning the Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case (which played a major role in the desegregation of schools nationally)."

Defining who the minorities are is a difficult task, but Boyer said he places the emphasis on Hispanic Americans, African Americans, native Americans, Asian Americans, and another group which he calls the "biracial child."

"The biracial child is a brand-new declaration of a population that's been here all the time," he said.

There are more than 600,000 biracial unions in America, and as a result, there are scores of children whose parents speak a variety of different languages, Boyer said.

"We, as educators, now have to look at bilingual, bicultural education, if not multicultural, multilingual education," he said. Kansas does not have a statewide policy addressing bilingual education, and Boyer said K-State does not have a program to prepare teachers for bilingual situations.

He said these facts must all be examined because minorities — particularly Hispanics — are leaving school at a phenomenal rate.

"We see (minorities) walk away from school before graduation," Boyer said. "Historically, we say they did so because they couldn't do the work. But now we are finding that these are B average students — not dropouts."

William Moore, professor of educational administration at Ohio State University, said many of the problems facing minorities in education today result from overt racism.

"Racism, sexism and the other 'isms' affect education at all levels," Moore said. "Overt racism is low expectations, and that's about the worst possible situation you can have.

"A black student walks in and you assume he's a student at risk. That's overt racism."

The problems facing minorities in education are very serious, said Richard Hope, executive director for the Minorities Project of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"Because of the way the media treat the topic, it tends to be like Vietnam," Hope said. "We sit there at the dinner table and watch such abomination take place. We have desensitized ourselves to the issues."

However, a turning point is being reached, because moral, economic and demographic forces are pressing for changes, he said.

"The same political and educational system that fostered educational inequality is capable of conquering it," Hope said. "Only ignorance, racism and the lack of will compel the United States to continue on its present path."

Moore said the real key to retaining minority students is to listen to them.

"If (educators) listen to (the students), they can pretty well tell us how to solve our problems," Moore said.

At a panel discussion Monday morning, Kermit McMurry, member of the Nebraska governor's cabinet, said discussion of issues affecting minorities in education is needed, but a plan of action must be formed to combat the problems.

"Certainly the scholars who have presented or led discussions on the troubling issues that plague the status of minorities in education have been very noteworthy and thought provoking," McMurry said.

"But for just a moment, let us move beyond our presenters and the wealth of current information they have shared with us," he said. "... Unless, and until, that inspiration is translated into a plan of action, an agenda for change that will take us beyond this past day and a half, I raise the question, 'What have we accomplished?'"

Chief Warrant Officer Bill King, right, Fort Riley, inspects the grounds where an Air Force A-7D Corsair jet crashed Tuesday at about 3:30 p.m. The pilot ejected before the plane crashed and is in good condition at Irwin Army Hospital at Fort Riley.

Air Force jet plane crashes

Pilot ejects prior to impact

From Staff and Wire Reports

JUNCTION CITY — An Air Force A-7D Corsair jet plane crashed and burst into flames Tuesday afternoon in a field southwest of Junction City while on a training mission from Iowa.

The pilot, Maj. Thomas J. Deardorff, 40, ejected prior to the crash and was listed in good condition at Irwin Army Community Hospital in Fort Riley Tuesday night.

"In fact, he walked in (to the hospital)," said Maj. Bill Ackerly, Fort Riley public affairs officer.

Deardorff was flown from the crash site to the hospital by a medical evacuation helicopter from the 82nd Medical Detachment at the fort.

Ackerly said Deardorff had been flying with the 132nd Tactical Fighter Wing from Des Moines, Iowa, with the Iowa National Guard, to the Smoky Hill bombing range southwest of Salina.

A second plane, which had been flying with Deardorff, landed without incident in Lincoln, Neb.

Deardorff's plane was armed with five 25-pound practice bombs and 20-millimeter ammunition when it took off, he said.

"(The plane) did have some ordinance," Ackerly said. "It's not known if (the plane) had expended (the ordinance)."

He said no weapon explosions were reported at the crash site.

A crash investigation team from McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita will begin investigating the cause of the mishap, Ackerly said.

A witness said the plane seemed to "dive straight down into the ground."

Jack Welsh, who lives in the area, said he saw the plane crash.

"I was just out in the yard and heard a real loud noise like a jet flying real low," Welsh said. "And I looked up and saw it. It was just like it dived straight down into the ground. It was going full blast and it just went down.

Firefighting units from Fort Riley extinguished the blaze which resulted from the crash a quarter-mile south of Interstate 70. Sgt. 1st Class Bill Scholl, a public affairs officer at the crash site, said the fire had spread over 5 to 6 acres.

Ackerly said the crash occurred at 3:52 p.m.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

After surveying the crash site, Army soldiers climb back into a first aid helicopter. The pilot of the plane was in good condition Tuesday night.

Student Senate approves funds for 7 club sports

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate voted to allocate $2,703.90 to seven sports clubs which are members of the Sports Club Council at Senate's meeting Thursday.

The Parachute Club was allocated $340. Of that, $40 will help pay for six safety devices called FXCs, which cost $600 each.

A spokesman for the club said the device would deploy the reserve parachute when the parachutist reaches dangerous speeds due to a malfunctioning primary chute. The safety devices used are no longer manufactured and parts may be hard to find for repair.

Sally Meadows, acting president of Sports Club Council, said if the sports clubs did not receive funding, they would no longer be able to operate as a club.

"We aren't asking for anything more than safety features, and we are only asking for a fraction of (the safety features') costs," said Meadows, junior in interior design.

Senate allocated $372.40 to the Women's Soccer Club for operating costs.

Michel Cavigelli, graduate senator, protested the allocataion because he said the percent increase for allocating funds to Women's Soccer Club exceeded the increase of any academic group.

An amendment was passed which gave the club an additional $20 to help pay for telephone costs incurred when setting up matches with other schools.

The Men's Soccer Club received $823.70 following some debate about the size of the men's allocation versus the women's.

One senator said the men's club is paying for new soccer nets to be used by both clubs.

The Sailing Club was allocated $199 to help cover operating costs.

Senate also voted to allocate $635.20 to the Rodeo Club. Although senators debated the cost of professional services, such as rodeo judges, a club spokeswoman

Ueberroth expected to purchase Eastern

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Former Baseball Commissioner Peter V. Ueberroth is expected to announce today a deal to buy Eastern Airlines, The Associated Press learned.

Ueberroth, whose group unexpectedly made a $464 million offer for Eastern last week and then withdrew the bid just as suddenly, traveled from his California home to New York on Tuesday night.

Eastern, the nation's seventh-largest airline, has been virtually shut down since March 4, when the Machinists union went on strike, and pilots and flight attendants walked out in support.

The agreed-on price was not known, and sources familiar with the deal said they were worried that Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent, Texas Air Corp., might try to change the terms at the last minute.

Sources close to Ueberroth had said Monday that Ueberroth was preparing a new, lower bid because Eastern agreed Friday to sell its Northeast shuttle to New York developer Donald J. Trump for $365 million.

Committee investigates U.S. House Speaker

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Ethics committee on Tuesday interviewed two men involved in a real estate deal with House Speaker Jim Wright amid reports that Wright may have accepted $100,000 in unreported gifts from one of them.

The committee planned to resume its closed-door deliberations on a long list of possible rules violations by Wright today, and a final outcome of the case still appeared to be more than a week away.

The Wall Street Journal reported Tuesday that the committee is considering whether Wright violated rules by accepting use of a Fort Worth condominium, a 1979 Cadillac and a salary paid to his wife from Fort Worth developer George Mallick, a longtime friend and business partner of the Wrights.

House rules prohibit the acceptance of gifts of more than $100 from "any person ... having a direct interest in legislation."

Committee members met privately Tuesday with Mallick and with Richard Swann, chairman of the Pioneer Savings Bank in Orlando, Fla., to question them about an investment Mallick and Wright made in "Winderwood," a housing development undertaken by Swann and others beginning in 1985. Wright made roughly $50,000 on the deal.

"We're fine-tuning what we already knew," said committee member John T. Myers, R-Ind.

The committee apparently is exploring whether Wright or Mallick had direct financial interests in the health of the savings and loan industry at a time when Wright was lobbying federal regulators to be more lenient with ailing S&Ls.

One issue, according to the Journal, is whether a $2.2 million loan made to Mallick's sons — a loan Mallick co-signed — by a troubled savings and loan to develop a shopping center gave the developer an interest in legislation calling for "forbearance" toward S&Ls by federal regulators.

Wright on Tuesday denied any knowledge of the loan or a federal lawsuit against the Mallicks to recover $1 million lost after the loan was foreclosed.

"To say that I favored forbearance because of George Mallick is ludicrous," Wright said. He noted that other Texas lawmakers had fought for the same provision in the law "because the economy of our state was in crisis and our constituents were feeling the need for help."

The ethics committee has been investigating Wright's finances since last June and has spent some $1 million on a probe by its outside counsel in the case, Richard Phelan.

During depositions taken from Mallick last year, Phelan was highly skeptical of benefits received by the Wrights from their partnership with Mallick, known as Mallightco. That included the condominium which Mallick made available to the Wrights for a token fee, the use of the car, and his wife's $18,000-a-year salary.

Namibia's freedom may end

OMBALANTU, Namibia — South Africa said Tuesday the 4-day-old independence process in Namibia is in danger of collapsing because of fierce fighting between security forces and black nationalist guerrillas.

Foreign Affairs Minister Pik Botha wrote U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cueller on Tuesday that South Africa was considering suspending the implementation of independence in the territory.

"Unless active and effective measures are taken within the next few hours to stem the rapid deterioration of the situation, the whole peace process in Namibia is in danger of collapse," said his letter, released in South Africa.

At least 169 guerrillas, 19 police and one South African soldier have been killed since Saturday in clashes across Namibia's northern border with Angola, according to police and military officials.

South Africa accused Sam Nujoma, leader of the South-West Africa People's Organization, of sending 1,200 SWAPO guerrillas from southern Angola into northern Namibia in a deliberate attempt to sabotage the peace process.

A U.N. investigation found the guerrillas had launched a "major incursion" from Angola in violation of the peace plan, according to diplomats in New York who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Debt initiative endorsed

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration's Third World debt initiative won key endorsements Tuesday from the two international agencies expected to implement the strategy.

Both Michel Camdessus, the managing director of the 151-nation International Monetary Fund, and Barber Conable, president of the other global lending organization, the World Bank, said they recognized the need for urgency in addressing the debt crisis.

Conable said that any delay "could be devastating in view of the expectancies which have been created" about the prospect for a reduction in the $1.3 trillion level of Third World debt.

In a speech to the final session of the spring meetings of the IMF and the World Bank, Conable said that the bank had created a joint task force to work with the IMF to speed implementation of the new debt relief program.

Earlier, the top policy board of the IMF issued a communique endorsing the general principles embodied in the debt program unveiled by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady on March 10.

Woman: Tuck damaged heart

WASHINGTON — One woman told a House panel Tuesday how a tummy tuck severely damaged her heart and left her scarred for life, while another recounted the fat-removal surgery that disfigured her leg and nearly drove her to suicide.

Joyce Palso, of Santa Ana, Calif., said post-operative infections resulting from sloppy work of a cosmetic surgeon sent her into heart failure five times within a year.

"But I want to tell you this," she said. "The doctor who did the tummy tuck on me did the same procedure on a 36-year-old registered nurse two months after he did me. She died from the same complications and infections that I had. So I am the lucky one."

KKK member loses election

NORTHMOOR, Mo. — A member of the Ku Klux Klan who was running for alderman was soundly defeated Tuesday, election officials said.

Dennis Mahon of Northmoor, a national organizer for the Klan, lost the election to the Board of Aldermen by claiming only three of 28 votes, or less than 10 percent of the total votes cast.

Eugene Stephens, who also ran for the Board of Aldermen and had been identified as a member of the Ku Klux Klan, lost with only 12 votes cast in his favor out of 88.

Before the election, Mahon had mailed copies of a Ku Klux Klan newspaper to about 120 registered voters in Northmoor, a small community of about 500 located about 20 miles north of Kansas City.

Frogs relocated to new home

LAWRENCE — The Baker Wetlands south of Lawrence are providing a home to eight frogs, the first known to be living there for more than 10 years.

A team of local biologists caught the northern crawfish frogs in Anderson County on Saturday and transplanted them in the wetlands the next day, along with about 1,000 fertilized eggs which are expected to hatch in a matter of days.

"This ought to be a good infusion," said Joe Collins, a University of Kansas biologist who headed the frog-finding excursion. "We're hoping this rain continues and the males start calling so it will sound good out there."

All nine frogs caught Saturday — one is being kept at KU's Museum of Natural History — are males. Collins said the team may visit Anderson County again this weekend in hopes of finding some female frogs to bring back.

He said there are hundreds of frogs living in a prairie which has a number of small streams and ponds, but it's not that easy to catch them.

"They're very, very cautious," Collins said.

Jeremy Rifkin, author, environmental activist and president of the National Foundation on Economic Trends, gives a lecture on "The Global Greenhouse Crisis" Tuesday afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

Speaker: Gases destroying ozone, increasing earth's temperature

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

"I truly believe your generation will decide the fate of this civilization," said Jeremy Rifkin, author, environmental activist and president of the National Foundation on Economic Trends.

Rifkin presented his lecture on "The Global Greenhouse Crisis" to about 300 people Tuesday afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

Rifkin cited four "Greenhouse gases" — carbon dioxide, chloroflourocarbons, methane and nitrous oxide — that contribute to the greenhouse effect.

These gases are accumulating at an increasing rate and are forming a thick blanket which does not permit heat to escape the earth's atmosphere, he said.

"The earth's average global temperature hasn't varied more than 2 degrees centigrade since the ice age, which was 15,000 years ago. But, within the next 40 years, we could see a 4- to 9-degree temperature increase," Rifkin said.

The excess carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, he said, is largely due to agriculturists' continued removal of trees to make land available for crop production.

Rifkin said he would like to see trees planted to decrease the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. Recently, he consulted with Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, who agreed to plant 5 million trees in the Los Angeles area during the next five years.

Carbon dioxide is not the only gas contributing to the thickening of the "blanket." Chloroflourocarbons, or CFCs, are tearing a hole in the ozone, he said.

Although much controversy surrounds the issue of CFCs' production and use, Rifkin said a NASA scientist has conducted tests that indicate CFCs pollute the atmosphere. The tests also indicate a 99 percent probability that gases destroy the ozone.

The ozone filters out ultra-violet light, which can contribute to skin cancer in humans, he said.

"(The greenhouse effect) is the first crisis to impact the entire sphere," Rifkin said. "In the mid-1990s, we are going to reach a critical point where humans realize they are burning up on a planet they can't escape from."

The problem cannot be solved through "cheap grace," which he said was similar, in theory, to a person who does not participate in religion, but believes they are "saved" merely because they have a bumper sticker on their car that says "Honk if you love Jesus."

This "objective detachment" is an old-world view of thinking which equates knowledge with power and has created a society that has no concept or value of history, he said.

To survive the "Greenhouse crisis," humans are going to have to abandon "old-world views" and develop a "species politics," in which society empathizes with, rather than controls, its environment, Rifkin said.

Rifkin announced that on April 22 a worldwide demonstration against the continued use and production of chloroflourocarbons will occur.

Racon Inc., in Wichita, is one of the seven sites targeted for the demonstration. Racon is one of five chemical companies responsible for production of CFCs in the United States, he said.

"I'm here for a reason. We're asking people from all over Kansas to go to Wichita on April 22 and speak up for the farm belt," he said.

Gorbachev promises 'zone of peace'

By The Associated Press

HAVANA — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev told the Cuban legislature Tuesday that Soviet-style reforms were not a universal remedy for all communist countries.

In a 53-minute speech before the Cuban National Assembly, Gorbachev also proposed that a "zone of peace" be established in Latin America and the Caribbean and renounced any Soviet intention of establishing naval, air or missile bases in the region.

Gorbachev also reaffirmed that the Soviet Union will continue supplying weaponry to Nicaragua's leftist government as long as the United States continues to arm other Central American countries. The issue remains a major sore point in relations between Washington and Moscow.

In his speech, the Soviet leader spent considerable time justifying the need for the reforms he has introduced in his own country.

"Today, only those can count on success who are marching in step with the times, who are drawing the necessary conclusions from the changes resulting from the fact that the world has entered the era of high technology, of intellectual labor, of the decisive role of science," he said.

But Gorbachev added that "We do not regard our approaches and solutions as some universal prescription for all.

"On the contrary, problems may be similar but each party solves them in its own way, guided by its own notions and the specific features of its country," Gorbachev said.

There had been speculation that Gorbachev, in a gesture of friendship toward Cuba, might announce forgiveness of part or all of Cuba's debt to the Soviet Union.

But he barely mentioned the subject, merely restating his position that the industrialized nations of the world should try to help ease the burden of debtor nations in the developing world.

Earlier, in an interview with the Soviet news agency Tass, Gorbachev signaled that he and Cuban President Fidel Castro are prepared to work for improved East-West relations, indicating some softening in the Cuban leader's rigid anti-Americanism.

Gorbachev told Tass a central topic of his talks with Castro on Monday was the "new thinking" in Soviet foreign policy — an approach that seeks to ease world tensions by reducing military commitments abroad and negotiating settlements of regional disputes that threaten to bring the superpowers into conflict.

It is a tenet of Gorbachev's reform policies at home that the Soviet Union must demonstrate to the West it is eager to serve as a cooperative partner in world economic development and dispel the Kremlin's "enemy image" of the Cold War era.

Fort Riley expansion plan unfair to farmers

Commentary

Dwayne Lively
Collegian Columnist

Bart Bryce was sitting in the study room when I walked in to work on my Spanish. I immediately tried to backpedal, but it was too late. He had already seen me.

"D.L.," he said, gesturing to a newspaper he was holding. "Come over here. I want you to take a look at this."

Reluctantly I creeped over to the table. "What is it, Bart?"

"I just thought you might be interested in seeing a group of people who have absolutely no respect for their country or the military establishment." He held the paper up to my face.

"Bart," I said, "just tell me about it."

I plopped down into a chair, sat back and waited for the onslaught.

"It seems that Fort Riley would like to expand to nearly twice its current size so that its soldiers could have more room to train, but a group of farmers who live near the base are fighting it."

"That's their right, Bart," I said. "It is still a free country, isn't it?"

"Yeah, well, sort of ... but the founding fathers never intended for that freedom to interfere with national security."

"Sure, Bart," I said. "What are the farmers' complaints?"

"Oh, they're just whining because they grew up on the land and their fathers, grandfathers, and great-grandfathers also grew up and worked on the land. They have some big attachment to it, nothing important."

"Family pride and a sense of belonging are not important?"

"It is," Bart said. "But it's not worth it when it means you'll be having Ruskies knocking on your doorstep."

"Let me get this straight, Bart," I said. "If Geary County farmers don't give up their land to the Army, it means we're going to be invaded by the Soviets?"

"Of course it does," Bart said. "One, it shows that Americans do not stand behind their military establishment and will not support their own defense. And, two, our troops will be undertrained and won't be able to defend us anyway."

"Gee, Bart," I said. "I didn't realize Geary County was so fundamental to our national defense."

"It is. If you don't make the military establishment happy, it won't make you happy."

"I see. How much land are we talking about here, anyway?"

"Well, Fort Riley covers about 105,000 acres but it would like to expand to about 205,000 acres. I guess about 100,000 acres altogether."

"How much land would that leave in the hands of Geary County's private citizens if the government decides to take all the land out of the county?"

"A whole 10,000 acres or so," Bart said. "Maybe less. Plenty of land to raise families and crops on."

"If you just want to feed Junction City, then yes."

"Well, it's a small price to pay to have your home protected."

"Flash on reality, Bart," I said. "Doesn't having your home taken away so that you can have your home protected seem a little odd to you?"

"Not when you look at it in the way the Department of Defense does. They could get the land elsewhere, but the cost of transporting all those tanks, troops and helicopters an hour or so away would cost too much money. In this day and age of defense cuts, we need to be looking to save money, D.L., not spend it."

"How much will the government pay these farmers if the Fort Riley expansion is approved?"

Bart's voice dropped down to a whisper. "That's the beauty of the whole deal, D.L. If the farmers don't want to sell, the government can just have their land condemned and get it anyway. Isn't that great?" He began to giggle.

"Great, Bart."

"So the farmers should sell," Bart said. "If they fight it, they won't get anything. Besides, how hard is it to dig up dirt? If you can do it in one place you can just as easily do it somewhere else, can't you?"

"Somehow I've always held a higher reverence for farmers than that, Bart. I always thought they grew food, but I guess I've been wrong all these years."

"We don't need that many farmers anymore, D.L.," Bart said. "If you're hungry, just hop on down to Mickey-D's and have a cheeseburger. It's a lot better than eating beet soup served up by some commie-babooshka. Shoot, the state of Kansas oughta just give itself up as a training ground for the military. Then we'd really be safe. Maybe the whole Midwest! Wouldn't that be great?"

"Do you really believe this stuff, Bart?"

"Of course I do. Lighten up. This deal will help the good ol' U.S.A. Besides, if Fred Bramlage is for it, it will be good for K-State."

"What does Fred Bramlage have to do with this?" I asked.

"He's a civilian aide to the secretary of the Army. He's the one who says it will cost too much to send the troops more than an hour and a half away, so the army should get the land to the southeast of the base."

"I see. So along with the 'house that Fred built,' we will have the 'county that Fred bought,' or sold as the case may be."

"Maybe even the state. Wouldn't that be great?"

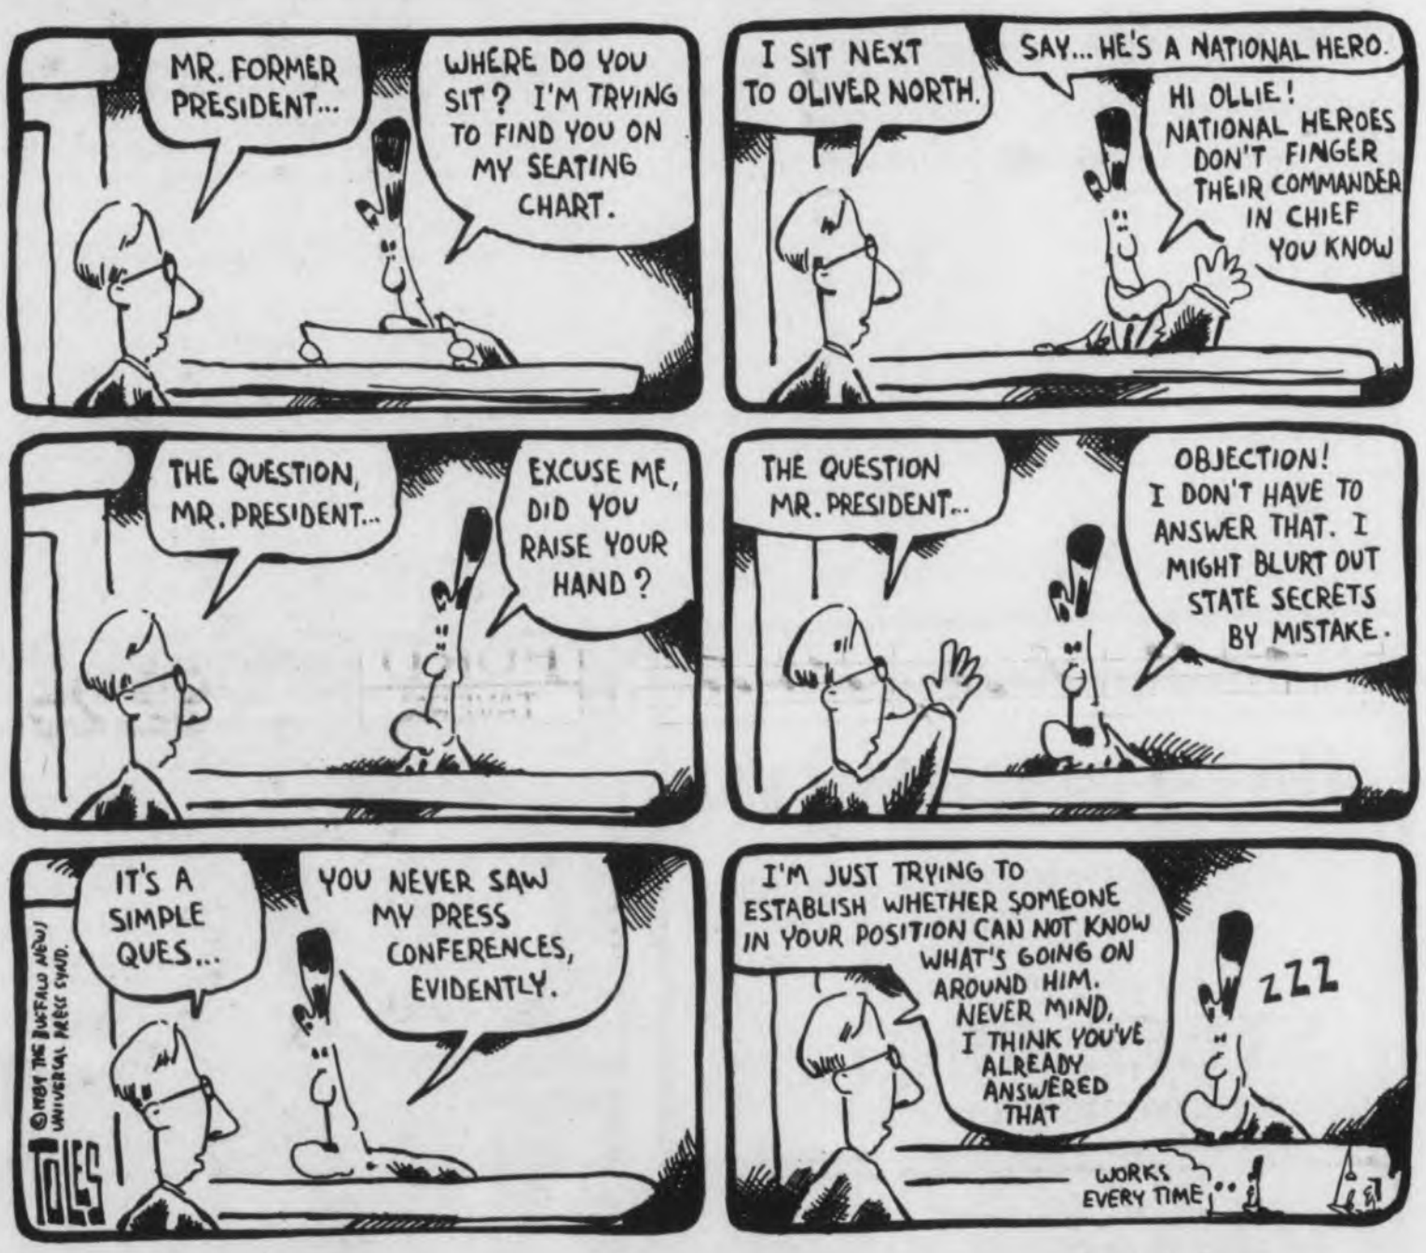
"Great, Bart. Just great."

Donations from raffle benefit Farrell Library

The Spurs Sophomore Honorary deserves a hand.

The inadequate conditions at Farrell Library have been ignored and placed very low on the priority list of the K-State administration, the Kansas Legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents. Meanwhile, Farrell continues to decline due to inadequate funding. However, the members of Spurs realized the desperate plight of the library and chose to do something about it.

The valiant efforts of this group resulted in a meager amount of money being donated. Meager, compared to what administrators, legislators and regents should have been putting toward the betterment of the "heart of our University," as administrators have referred to it.



Of the estimated $3 million needed for Farrell's improvement and maintenance, Spurs raised about $1,300 in a fund-raising raffle. Names of students who donated a "fiver for Farrell" were included in the raffle, which offered payment of fall semester tuition for one student.

The money raised through the Spurs fund-raiser will be used to purchase a computer terminal, two chairs and a study table, in addition to paying the raffle winner's tuition next fall.

This success is certainly commendable, since even the group Students Help Enhance Library Funding, which is supposed to be campaigning for library funds, has yet to act with any results.

But students should not have to campaign for funds for a campus library, a basic necessity of any university.

When students begin taking such desperate action on their own to support their university library, it is time for administrators to take notice of student priorities and make the library one of their own priorities as well. Then, maybe regents and legislators would take the situation at Farrell more seriously and act to improve its sad condition.

Other Perspectives

The U.S. Senate unanimously approved a bill this month that would penalize colleges and trade schools with high student loan default rates.

The bill is attempting to address the increasing problem of unpaid student loans, which are expected to cost the government about $2 billion in 1990. However, the Senate is placing the responsibility for defaults into the hands of those who have no power to enforce payment.

... The purpose of the Senate bill is valid. Studies show that 2,354 institutions have default rates higher than 20 percent. However, denying federal funds to institutions for former students' defaults would only hurt the present and future students who need government aid.

Senate act sets bad precedent

Commentary

Loren Sheets
Guest Columnist

Last Tuesday night, a bill concerning the institution of a $15 athletic fee was introduced for debate on the floor of Student Senate. Sound familiar? Well, it should if you're one of the 4,527 students who flocked to polling booths to voice your opinion on the athletic fee proposal.

But by the time the results of the referendum were finished being tallied, Student Senate was already in the process of reconsidering the same bill that had just been voted on.

By introducing the athletic fee bill onto the floor of Senate, student senators performed the first step required to overturn the decision made by the student body. With a wave of the hand, the decision of the entire student body could have been nullified. The precedent set by this action is, therefore, the focus of my concern.

Regardless of your opinion of the proposal's eventual outcome, you must question the limits under which the legislative branch of our governing system should operate. How far should Senate be allowed to push the rights of the student?

By asserting its ability to review the student referendum, Senate has clearly crossed the line of ethical student representation.

Led by motions from Education Sen. Monica Connet, efforts were made on two separate occasions to prevent Senate from taking action on the bill. While a substantial number of senators banded together to oppose the review of the referendum, they were unable to receive the necessary two-thirds majority to prevent the issue from coming up.

It is important to note that from the beginning, sponsors of this bill stated that the bill's intent was not to alter the decision made by the student body. Instead, it hoped the outcome of the vote would indicate that Student Senate endorsed the decision of the students.

The need for Senate endorsement arose from speculation that the Kansas Board of Regents would attempt to institute the athletic fee without the approval of students. The feeling was that Senate support of the student decision would decrease the likelihood of these actions. Only after the bill's consideration was this asssumption shown to be false.

Although the intent of this bill may have been good, its implications definitely were not. A resolution stating Senate's support of the student body's decision would have been a preferable alternative.

Unlike the bill, a resolution would not have given Senate the opportunity to overturn the referendum's outcome, rather it would only have allowed Senate to voice its support or lack of support for results of the referendum.

Other senators believed that because the fee was passed by a simple majority vote of the students, exceptions should be made to the provisions of the University's constitution and bylaws which specify that in a fee increasing referendum such as this one, a two-thirds majority vote in the affirmative is necessary for the fee to pass. On that basis, those senators voted in favor of the bill to implement a student athletic fee. On that basis, those senators voted in favor of overruling the students' decision.

If Senate is granted the power to sidestep its constitution on this occasion, what is to prevent it from doing the same when dealing with other important issues? Where do we draw the line? If there are specific aspects of the constitution which should be changed for the benefit of the student body, then Senate should follow the prescribed procedure for a constitutional amendment.

The constitution exists to protect the rights of those who are governed by it. If Senate is granted the right to arbitrarily ignore some of those rights, the result is a student body subject to the whims and changing opinions of Student Senate.

As far as the average student is concerned, even though the vote supported the students' decision, it was a defeat in the sense that Senate opened the door that would grant it the option of reconsidering the results of any future student referendums.

Had Senate simply desired a poll of student opinon, then that option should have been pursued. Instead, Senate committed itself to sending the fee proposal to referendum and should have stood behind its decision.

If this issue is of as much concern to you as it is to me, then I urge you to review the results of the referendum and the bill as printed in Thursday's issue of the Collegian. If you believe this is an issue that simply should have been outside of Senate's jurisdiction, I remind you that every senator should be accountable to their college for their actions. Confront them about their decision, understand their motives and voice your concerns.

Remember, an informed and active student body is the key to the efficient operation of K-State's Student Governing Association.

Editor's note: Loren Sheets is a freshman in electrical engineering. Eleven other student senators have given their endorsement to this editorial.

Collar sexist

Editor,

As a graduating senior, I am pleased to say that I personally have encountered little sexism during my four years at K-State.

In my time here, the University even went through its literature to weed out sexist language. This is why I was appalled when I read the Academic Regalia section of the "Instructions for KSU May 1989 Commencement."

This section informed me of the differentiation in academic dress between female and male bachelor degree candidates.

What is it, exactly, that the University believes is the difference between the academic achievements of men and women? Other differences in academic dress at commencement are differences in academic achievement. There is differentiation between the academic dress for bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degree candidates. Indeed, all academic dress should be based solely on academics, not sex.

Unfortunately, the University has overlooked this discriminatory practice in its efforts to purge sexism from the system. Hopefully, the administration will recognize this error and correct it.

In the meantime, this practice offends me, and ensures that I will not wear the "collar for women" at commencement.

Letter misses point

Editor,

As a first semester Environmental Design student, I think Missy Higbie is missing the point.

The architecture and design program at K-State would seriously compromise the excellent quality of its education if a cap wasn't placed on enrollment.

One reason for the cap is a lack of available facilities and staff. Already the student to teacher ratio far exceeds that of the past. Studio space is also limited.

Another reason for the cap is the huge increase in the number of applicants. The architecture and design program is considering raising the minimum grade point average to 2.75 for entrance into the program. Of course, not all of the students who apply are accepted, but that just creates a competitive edge that presents a challenge and prompts students to work their hardest.

I also choose to spend long hours in my studio, but my extracurricular activities are not curtailed. Fortunately, Seaton Hall is open 24 hours a day, so I can plan my studio around my other activities.

As for having a never-ending cycle of working, welcome to the real world. If you can't handle the pressure, maybe this major is not for you.

Celebrate Easter

Editor,

In response to your editorial on March 25, "Meaning of holidays overlooked by many," K-State has an extremely high percentage of Christian students, as it is located in the middle of a Christian population. I would be surprised if fewer than 80 percent of K-State students came from Christian backgrounds. An observation of Easter would be appropriate under these circumstances.

I believe that the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. would be very disappointed to know that in exchange for a day of national celebration of his birthday, the celebration of the resurrection of his Lord and Savior was hindered.

King was a great man, and I am all for what K-State has done to celebrate his work for racial equality. I participated myself.

But King was not a sinless man. He was not the son of God. He lived for great things. But he did not die for the redemption of my sins. And he did not rise from his tomb.

Let's continue our remembrance of King, and let's continue to do the work he began. But let's not sacrifice the celebration of Easter. If we can have only one day off in the spring, let's choose the one King would've chosen.

Permit confusion

Editor,

Many students utilize the facilities at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, but very few know about the parking regulations at the complex or the availability of a special complex-only parking permit.

All vehicles parked at the complex must display a parking permit, including those parked in the rock lot northwest of the complex.

Any permit can be used at the complex, but many students living off campus have no need for a regular parking permit and most do not know about the special permit, which costs $10 per year or $5 per semester.

If the KSU Police Department would only make this information on parking at the complex more readily available to the students through better communication with complex administrators and the students directly, the campus police could alleviate many parking problems, especially the problem of vehicles parked without a permit.

Voters select city, school board leaders

Candidates: Votes reflect 'readiness for a change'

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

Two long-term members of Manhattan/Ogden USD #383 School Board lost their bids for re-election Tuesday.

The vote could be a reflection of what the three newly-elected candidates said was the "voters' readiness for a change" on the board.

Roger Reitz and Martha Miller, board members for 12 years, will be replaced by challengers Graham Rose and Meryl Wilson when the new members are sworn in July 1.

"I don't think it was related to personalities or attributes, but voters wanted some different people on the board. From what I've heard from the people I talked to around town the past few months, I was expecting similar results."
—Beverly Eversmeyer School Board Member

Beverly Eversmeyer, director of guidance counseling at Manhattan High School and board member for two years, was re-elected with more than 26 percent of the total vote.

"There was an overwhelming amount of support that carried over from the last election," Eversmeyer said. "I think parents recognize that I care about their sons and daughters, and want to be involved in their education."

She said the election results showed the voters "were ready for a change on the school board."

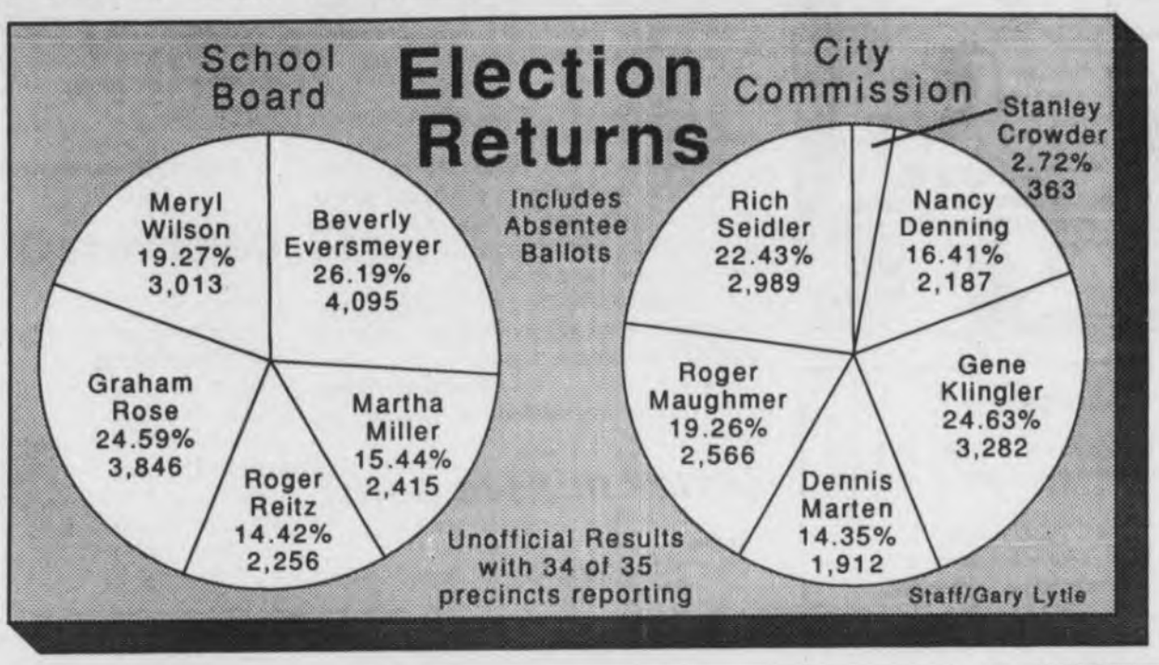
"I don't think it was related to personalities or attributes, but voters wanted some different people on the board. From what I've heard from the people I talked to around town the past few months, I was expecting similar results," Eversmeyer said.

Miller and Reitz were out of town at the National Association of School Board Members annual conference and were unavailable for comment.

Rose, a Manhattan pediatrician, trailed Eversmeyer by less than 2 percent of the vote. Rose said he was "certainly delighted about the vote of confidence the community" has given him.

"The vote shows that there is a strong mandate for change on the board, and my feelings now are to get started on the things I talked about during the campaign," he said.

Wilson, an attorney, said his involvement in Manhattan had an effect on his being elected.



"It was a combination of a lot of things. Having spent my life growing up in Manhattan and doing business here for 15 years, the voters know I'm concerned," Wilson said.

Election official Nayola Norris said 34 percent of registered voters in Riley County's 35 precincts participated in the school board election. Norris said the voter turnout was "pretty good," and slightly higher than in recent years.

Eversmeyer said she thought all five candidates were "strongly qualified" to be board members.

The candidates' shares of votes remained fairly consistent as precinct totals were tabulated. With only nine of the 35 precincts reporting, the individual percentages varied less than 1 percentage point when compared to the final results.

Overall turnout for the election, which included area school boards and local city offices, was 34 percent, or 6,600 voters in the 35 precincts.

Incumbent reclaims position

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

Two local businessmen and one incumbent claimed the three open seats on the Manhattan City Commission after Tuesday's general election.

Eugene Klingler, commissioner; Roger Maughmer, manager of Southwestern Bell; and Richard Seidler, owner of the Furniture Center, each earned seats on the commission. The newly elected commissioners will take office at the next regular commission meeting, April 18.

"I am excited," Maughmer said. "I look forward to the next two years."

Klingler, who has served 10 years on the commission, said he was happy with the support he received, but that this will be his final term on the commission. Manhattan residents have been exceptional to work with, he said.

"I've enjoyed it," Klingler said. "I think there were good candidates running for city commission ... I was overwhelmed."

The first-time commissioners will bring their own interests to the commission, he said.

"I think anytime you have new people coming on, they have their own agendas," Klingler said. "Seidler and Maughmer ... are going to be good commissioners. We are really going to miss Nancy."

Commissioner Nancy Denning lost her bid for re-election and Mayor Dave Fiser did not seek re-election.

About 40 percent of registered voters in Manhattan voted in Tuesday's election. Overall voter turnout for the election, which included area school boards and local city offices, was 34 percent. About 6,600 voted in the 35 precincts.

Voter turnout for the Manhattan commission race and U.S.D. 383 Board of Education was significantly higher than it has been for the past several years, said Ilene Colbert, election officer.

Colbert said, typically, only about 22 percent to 27 percent of registered voters cast votes for city elections.

Seidler said although the commission candidates were dealing with important issues throughout their campaigns, it was the school issues that brought out the voters.

"As much as I would like to say it was the city commission, there was a lot of interest in the school board elections as well," he said.

The "tremendous amount of interest in the school board race" was what sparked voters to go to the polls, Klingler said.

Twelve-year incumbent school board members, Martha Miller and Roger Reitz, along with Denning, lost bids for re-election.

Klingler said he was aware that some Manhattan residents were dissatisfied with decisions made by members of the commission and were going to vote against incumbents.

"I was worried," he said, adding that commissioners should be concerned with the issues, not losing votes.

"I think anytime you have new people coming on, they have their own agendas."
—Eugene Klingler City Commissioner

However, Maughmer said the outstanding support for Klingler demonstrated that voters in Manhattan were not supporting "a move toward dumping incumbents."

"I think Manhattan is looking for a change," he said.

Klingler captured slightly less than 25 percent of the total vote, while Seidler received 22.4 percent and Maughmer 19.3 percent.

Denning received 16.4 percent; Dennis Marten, owner of Ben Franklin Crafts, received 14.3 percent; and Stanley Crowder, maintenance engineer for University Inn, received 2.7 percent of the vote.

"I am sorry my stand on the commission had to end on a sour note," Denning said.

Unplanned pregnancy alternatives offer no easy solutions for mothers

Story by Kevin Kramer

Living in a two-bedroom apartment with three other young women, one of whom has a 1-year-old baby, Carol is a high school dropout. She is 18 years old, five months pregnant and is considering giving her baby up for adoption.

"I'm living day by day right now," Carol said. "It's difficult. Now, there are so many things to think about. One decision after another makes it hard to get your priorities straight."

Not knowing if she is going to keep her baby or give it up for adoption, Carol said: "I'm trying to keep myself open-minded, not leaning one way or another."

She said that when she first found out she was pregnant she was in shock. The struggle of whether to get an abortion or tell her parents was paramount.

"Abortion was out of the question for me because of my Christian background," she said. "I know everyone has their opinions about it, but I could not bring myself to kill my baby."

Carol said she had known the baby's father for six months.

"I do not care to see him anymore, because I have come to the realization that he did not care," Carol said. "He didn't want anything to do with the baby and wanted me to get an abortion."

The pregnancy has been challenging, as she tries to balance pleasing her family against doing what is best for her.

"My family has been very supportive," Carol said. "But they all have their own ideas about what I should do.

"What I really need is time to sit and think about what is the best way for me to go — for what I think and feel are often two different things. It is a hard decision to give up a child that is your own."

Kim Menard, social worker for Kansas Children's Service League, said unplanned pregnancies are difficult for everyone involved.

"There is no easy way out of an unplanned pregnancy," Menard said. "If you are not planning a pregnancy, any decision will have some hard times associated with it."

Carol said that during the first trimester of her pregnancy, she tried not to think about it, but often asked herself why it happened to her.

"You can always say, 'It's not going to happen to me,' when you're having sex," she said. "But when you get pregnant, your words change to, 'It's not happening to me.'"

Living with a single mother has made her consider adoption as an alternative, she said, although she is questioning whether adoption is the best alternative for her baby.

"If I decide to keep the baby, I have to decide where I am going to live, what I need for the baby and myself, and how I can afford it all," she said. "Sometimes, all I can see in front of me is a dollar sign."

Carol said she has considered moving home to reduce expenses.

"My parents are open to the idea," she said. "I know being a single parent is going to be hard. I was brought up in a single-parent home. My parents were divorced when I was young.

"I love kids. If I decide to keep it, I would try to be the best mother I could be. I know I'll make a few mistakes, maybe a lot, but still I'll try to do my best."

Menard said KCSL helps young women weigh the pros and cons of each alternative by using a series of questions, prompting serious thought about the options.

"Giving up a child for adoption is one of the hardest decisions a person has to make," she said.

Once an adoption release is signed, a mother relenquishes all rights to her child. However, the birth parents have rights before giving their child up for adoption, Menard said.

"This is their pregnancy, and they can decide how they want it to go," she said.

When young women discuss the alternative of adoption with the agency, basic facts are outlined, such as the father will be notified when the baby is born, and the mother has 48 hours to decide if adoption is her choice, Menard said. Following delivery, the birth mother has the option of seeing and holding the baby, looking at it through the window or not seeing it.

The birth mother may take an active part in choosing the adoptive parents, including the choice of either having an adoption which is closed or opened, which would release information about birth parents to adoptive parents and the child.

Carol said: "If I choose adoption, I would like to have a part in choosing the adoptive parents — ones that have a good, strong sense of family and who would really love the baby.

"I would want my baby to know that I loved it and wanted it to have the best in life. What more could a mother want for her child if that is all she could offer it?"

Terri Vierthaler, adoption specialist with KCSL, said that when a woman chooses adoption for her child, she may choose the adoptive parents. The birth mother reviews anonymous profiles of families, including personal appearance, background and interests of the prospective parents. If the mother chooses, she can attempt to match the adoptive parents' characteristics to her own appearance and interests.

The KCSL has about 50 agency-approved homes waiting for infant adoptions, Vierthaler said. Agency-approved, prospective parents have been evaluated to determine if they can provide a loving, stable home and a stimulating environment for the child.

"On my initial contact with a young woman with an unplanned pregnancy, I bring up the topic of adoption" as one alternative, said Dr. Ann Wigglesworth, a local physican who specializes in obstetrics and gynecology.

"I give the young woman an outline of some of the factors to consider in making a decision," Wigglesworth said. "I make sure the mother has established a relationship with a counselor and that she pursues counseling afterwards."

She said she recommends that the woman consult a lawyer to protect her legal rights and to handle the adoption process.

If the woman decides to make arrangements for adoption through an agency, she is referred to the Kansas Children's Service League or to the Catholic Social Services.

The woman also has the option of private adoption, Wigglesworth said. Although her office has a list of couples wanting to adopt, she said members of her office "don't try to recruit adoptive babies."

"A potential pitfall of both private adoption and surrogate mothering is their tendency to provide babies for those who can afford it, discriminating or exploiting poorer couples who want to adopt or fertile women who need funds," Wigglesworth said. "But I think that both private adoption and surrogate mothering have their place."

Wigglesworth said that in the past 12 years she has helped with five or six private adoptions.

"I only started doing private adoptions about three years ago," she said. "Prior to that, I cared for patients going through the agencies."

Choosing a method of adoption is premature for Carol as she struggles with making her decision.

"My entire future is on hold right now with the baby due in July. It is difficult to find a job without a high school diploma and being pregnant," she said. "Most employers do not say anything about hiring someone who is pregnant; they just don't call you back."

Although Carol plans to complete high school, the discouragement of not finding a job is in the back of her mind, she said. Unemployment adds to the frustration and difficulty of her decision of adoptions vs. keeping the baby.

"My friends are always there if I really need to talk or need money," she said. "My sister is the closest person I share my thoughts and feelings with. She's a good listener."

Carol said that to cope with frustrations and decision making, she gets away from the pressure by being alone — in her room with mellow music, for a walk or for a drive in her sister's car.

"I don't go anyplace in particular, I just go," she said.

"The frustrations are the most difficult things to deal with — frustration with myself in getting myself into this situation and the decisions I have to make."

Carol said she knows her pregnancy has not only hurt herself but her family also.

"It is also a little hard knowing the father of this baby does not want it," she said. "There is going to be heartache no matter what I decide.

Lennon tries to break mold

Album reflects feelings, experiences

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

Review

You would think Julian Lennon would have given up his obsession to create a separate identity from his father by now. Try as he might, "Mr. Jordan," his third album, still sounds like it was recorded by John Lennon's son.

"Mr. Jordan" is an album Julian spent a long time with. Nearly three years in coming, it provides an account of the feelings and experiences he has had since his last effort, "The Secret Value of Daydreaming."

Julian claims that his new album is more experimental than those in the past. Besides a newly employed falsetto, his low register is utilized in several of the songs. The name of the album was derived from a film entitled "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," about a man sent back to earth from heaven to fulfill his dreams.

Who is Julian now? From the sounds of it, he is somewhere between The Beatles and David Bowie. For someone trying to grow from beneath his father's gigantic shadow, Julian has yet to establish a style of his own.

"Now You're In Heaven," the first single from the album, sounds just like a Bowie tune. Julian, using an uncharacteristic low voice, seems to ask for such a comparison. To top it off, it is a sappy love song in the same league as his father's often-sickening odes to Yoko Ono.

What Julian needs to do, and in parts of the album does, is accept his position as heir to a fabulous musical past. "Make It Up To You" is one of his best songs ever, with strains reminiscent of "Abbey Road" heard vaguely in the background.

"Mother Mary" is a about Julian's feelings of self-doubt caused by questioning his childhood religion. Regardless of the allusion to Beatles' classic "Let It Be," this song is a serious bit of song writing for Lennon.

To record his latest album, Julian enlisted producer Patrick Leonard, who has worked with Brian Ferry and Madonna, guitarist Peter Frampton and singer Marilyn Martin. Interestingly enough, John McCurry, his childhood friend and co-writer on several songs, has a name with that (John) Lennon-McCartney ring to it — thus a possible (Julian) Lennon-McCurry duo.

With all of the generic pop-music Julian is continually heaping into his albums, it is a wonder critics compare him to his dad. "Angillette," though, is a touching acoustic piece, as good as John Lennon ever managed, with a somber subject — suicide. During the writing of the album, Julian dealt with a friend who was contemplating killing herself. The result was, besides a spared life, a pretty ballad.

In order for Julian to really establish himself as a self-made musician, he will need to relax. All his efforts so far have only led him to impersonate other styles.

In finding his own identity, Julian shouldn't rule out the hole left by his dad. Though he has made a start, eventually Julian should bloom into a talented musician.

Luncheon speaker: Social scientists may debate tasks

By The Collegian Staff

Social scientists who do research dealing with South Africa may themselves be the focus of questioning, said Clive Fullagar at the International Activities Luncheon Tuesday in the Union.

"As the crisis deepens in South Africa, I think social psychologists will be confronted with a debate in terms of their social responsibility," Fullagar said.

Fullagar's topic was "The Responsibility of Social Scientists in a Society in Crisis." He is an assistant professor of psychology and was born in Uganda, Africa, where he spent much of his life.

Fullagar gave background information of events in South Africa and his feelings of the suffering that goes on there. He recalled incidents from 1984 to the middle of 1986, when he immigrated to the U.S.

Fullagar said,"The bland figures ... don't in any way really capture the amount of suffering that occurs under an oppresive system such as that which exists in South Africa.

"The death toll over this period exceeded 1,000 — two-thirds of these deaths were attributed to the action of state forces. There was a pattern of security police repression that became sadly repetitive."

The use of of tear gas, bird-shot, buck-shot, rubber bullets, live ammunition as well as shootings, road-blocks, searches and arrests were forms of repression that occurred daily, he said.

"There is a very urgent need for more relevant ... social science theories and pyschological theories to be developed in which full consideration is given to the socio-political condition under which the majority of South Africans are propelled to function," Fullagar said.

There is a need to localize the research being done about South Africa, he said, and for the research to be relevant, researchers must ask themselves three questions.

"The first is, 'Why is the research question being framed in the way that it is?' Secondly, the big question is, 'Who benefits from the research?' The third question which I don't think many people want to ask is 'Whether the African community in South Africa can afford the luxury of research which doesn't really address or provide the solution to community problems,'" Fullagar said.

Cornelia Flora, professor of social anthropology and social work, said Fullagar's speech was important because it detailed the scholars' responsibility to a society in change.

Deadline set for reapportionment

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A final decision on proposals to redraw House members' legislative districts will not be made before the Legislature's first adjournment at the end of this week.

The full House Congressional, Judicial and Legislative Apportionment Committee has not met this week, and its chairman is not sure it will meet again before first adjournment.

And, Rep. Vince Snowbarger, R-Olathe, said that because the committee did not meet and endorse a plan Tuesday, it is technically impossible for the Legislature to finish its work on a reapportionment plan by Saturday, when first adjournment is expected.

That means at least the Senate and probably the House and Senate will not act on a reapportionment plan until a wrapup session, scheduled to begin April 26. That means the Legislature probably won't formally end its session until several weeks later than normal.

"I would have preferred that we resolve it before we went home for the first time," said House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center. "But it's not the end of the world."

The full apportionment committee met last week to consider Republican and Democratic statewide redistricting plans. Subcommittees now are meeting to come up with a compromise.

The committee's ranking minority member, Rep. Joan Adam, D-Atchison, said differences will be the most difficult to resolve on proposed maps for central, northeast and southeast Kansas. However, lawmakers have not reached final agreements on maps for most of the state, except Wyandotte County, she said.

"My own feeling is that there is a fair amount of negotiating yet to be done," Adam said. "There's still not a solid agreement anywhere, except Wyandotte."

Last year, voters approved a constitutional amendment requiring reapportionment of the House this year. The constitution also requires that the state Supreme Court approve any redistricting plan.

Traditionally, the Senate has not made significant changes in House redistricting plans and the House has not seriously altered Senate plans. However, committee endorsement of a plan will be followed by a House debate.

The progress of a reapportionment plan also will be hampered by the amount of work it takes to draft a bill and make sure every voting precinct is accounted for, Snowbarger said.

"We're at a point in time where it couldn't go through the House until the (wrapup) session anyway," Snowbarger said.

Traditionally, the Legislature adjourns at the beginning of April and takes a break, finishing its work for the year at the end of the month. Then a few members return in early June for the traditional "sine die" ceremony that formally ends the session.

Freshman playing like veteran

Shortstop making big impact

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

The Wildcats' shortstop, freshman Craig Wilson, got his first taste of Big Eight Conference baseball this past weekend. However, some fans may have thought the first-year starter was a veteran.

In a four-game series in Norman, Okla., Wilson rapped out four doubles and three RBIs to achieve an impressive .571 average (8 of 14). In K-State's lone victory of the series, a 12-1 romp, Wilson went three for four with three doubles.

Going into the Oklahoma series, Wilson was hitting .274, with nine RBIs in 62 plate appearances. Wilson is now third on the team with a .329 average.

"We should have won two and we had a chance to win three," Wilson said. "The first game we played pretty well but their pitcher threw an outstanding game. In the last two games, we made mental errors that took us out of the games and we needed to get more out of our bats.

"We felt we could beat them. It wasn't so much that we were intimidated, we just made costly mistakes."

After Wilson and the 'Cats beat Oklahoma in the second game, the freshman remained hot at the plate, but still the 'Cats dropped the next game, 6-3.

"I went three for three at the plate in the second game of our doubleheader on Saturday, but we just couldn't get it done," Wilson said. "I was happy that I was able to start off well, but I would have rather gone zero for three if we could have won that game."

As far as talent goes, Wilson believed that the Wildcats matched up pretty well with the 25th-ranked Sooners.

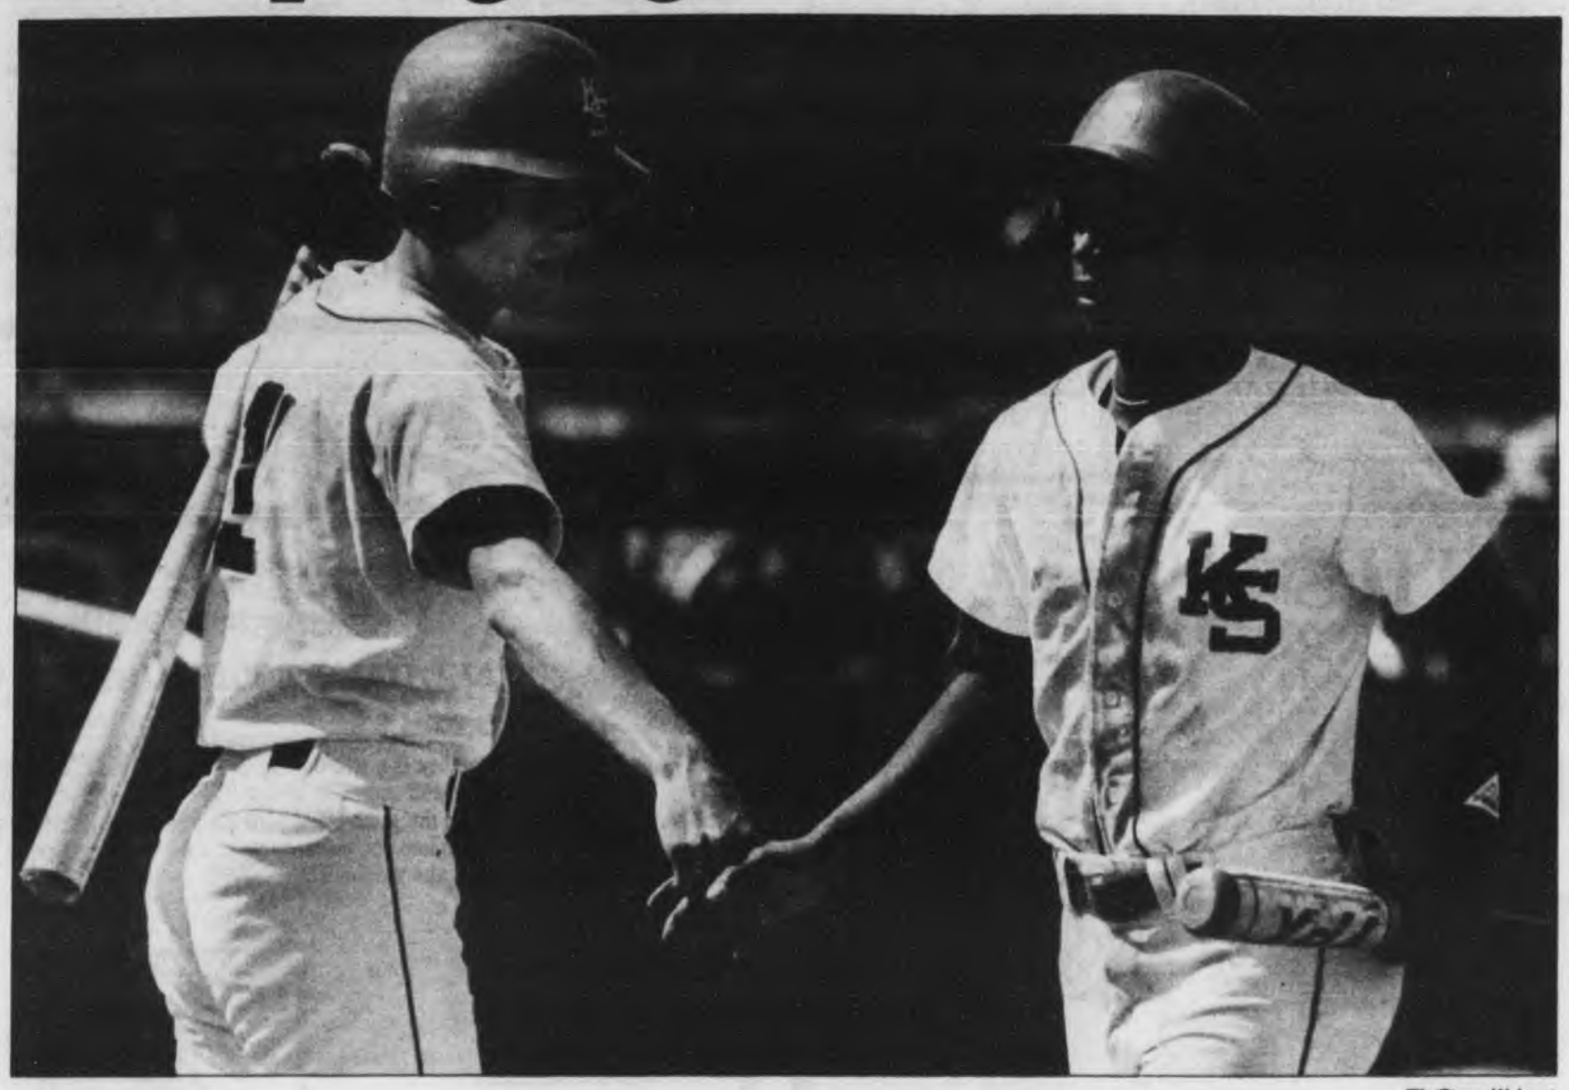
"I think we matched up with them pretty well," Wilson said. "We hit the ball hard; we just didn't seem to get some of the breaks that they got. Our defense is looking real good, we just need to get our bats going and we will be tough to beat.

"We're not the type of team that can put 10, 11 or 12 runs on the board every game. We can't afford to make many mistakes."

And with the 'Cats not being the big-inning type of team they were last year, they have had to rely on a veteran pitching staff and a tough defense to back them up. K-State's fielding percentage is up more than 30 points from last year and Wilson has had a big impact at shortstop. The Franklin Park, Ill., native has a .956 fielding percentage and has committed just four errors. He has 24 outs and 60 assists in 90 chances.

The next time the 'Cats will face conference competition will be this weekend, when archrival Kansas visits Frank Myers Field for a four-game weekend series.

"If we can sweep KU or win at least three games, we will be in pretty good shape conference-wise," Wilson said. "At the beginning of the season we were picked to finish last in the conference. We are not going to be at the bottom of the Big Eight when the season is over.



"We hit the ball hard against some of the best pitching in the Big Eight against Oklahoma. If we can continue to hit the ball hard like that, we will be successful."

The goals Wilson has set for himself are some that might be expected from a more experienced player. He hopes to hit between .300 and .320, play the infield well and play solid defense. His goals for the team are even more lofty.

"We're looking to win 40 games," Wilson said. "We will play about 59 or 60 games this season and 40 wins is a realistic figure."

If the team accomplishes this feat, it will be the most games won in a season for a K-State squad. The Wildcats finished with a 35-19 record in 1976. In Coach Mike Clark's first two seasons, he has compiled consecutive winning records of 28-24 and 34-24.

"Coach Clark wants to get the intensity level of this ball club up," Wilson said. "We are a young, well-coached ball club, and we made some errors in Oklahoma that we wouldn't usually make."

Freshman Craig Wilson, left, congratulates Sean Collins in a game earlier this season after Collins scored a run. Wilson's sure glove and sudden offensive spark have given the 'Cats a big lift this year. The Franklin Park, Ill., native is K-State's third leading hitter at .329.

Wildcats take on Marymount

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

K-State begins a nine-game homestand today with a doubleheader against NAIA opponent Marymount at Frank Myers Field. The first of two seven-inning games will start at 5 p.m.

The 'Cats will stray from their regular pitching rotation against Marymount to give two other hurlers some starting experience. Sophomore junior college transfer Mike Hedrick will throw the opening game after spending all season as K-State's most used reliever. Hedrick is 2-0 in seven appearances with an ERA of 3.26, second on the staff behind David Hierholzer (3.16). Hedrick leads the Wildcats' relievers in strikeouts with 10.

Senior Bill Schafer, who has been the 'Cats top closer this season with three saves, will toss the nightcap. Schafer is averaging nearly one strikeout per inning, and picked up the win in K-State's come-from-behind 7-6 win over Northern Iowa March 26. He has seen action in six games and has an ERA of 3.48.

The normal pitching rotation of Jim Haller, Jeff Hierholzer, Jeff Peterson and Jim McClellan are scheduled to pitch this weekend in a four-game home series with Kansas.

The Wildcats are coming off a Big Eight road series with 25th-ranked Oklahoma, in which K-State ended a 12-game losing streak at Norman by blasting the Sooners 12-1 on Saturday. Hierholzer, who improved to 4-0, limited OU to just six hits in going the distance for his second win over a nationally ranked team this season. The Sooners got their only run on a sixth inning homer by Scott Campbell.

Oklahoma's solid pitching allowed it to win the other three games of the weekend set. Sooner starter Kevin King struck out 12 Wildcats in Friday's opener as OU posted a 9-1 victory. K-State could manage only six runs on 11 hits in the final two games of the series.

"For the most part, we were pleased with how we played," Wildcat assistant coach Phil Morgan said. "We won the one game in pretty good fashion and in the other games we did things pretty well. We didn't swing the bat as well as we wanted to, but Oklahoma's pitching had something to do with that."

Netters to face Kansas

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat netters will be looking to improve their Big Eight Conference record to 2-0 when they take the L.P. Washburn courts at 2 p.m. today against archrival Kansas.

This could prove to be the toughest team yet for the 'Cats. The Jayhawks have been consistently strong this season under Coach Eric Hays, although their lineup includes only one upperclassman.

K-State coach Steve Bietau said 24th-ranked Eveline Hamers will be one of the Jayhawks' greatest threats, at No. 1 singles. He also said KU is clearly the No. 2 team in the conference.

But the Wildcats had an encouraging 9-0 win against Mizzou last weekend, and Bietau said the K-State women are ready to take on the 'Hawks.

"I think it'll be a very tough match, and we're really anxious to play it," he said. "It's always a match they look forward to, but all the Big Eight matches are."

KU has had the advantage recently and handed K-State a 7-2 loss in Lawrence last year. However, Bietau said all the matches were close situations that the 'Cats just didn't pull out. The key to this year's match for the K-State squad will be to play as well as it has been and take advantage of more opportunities.

"We need to play well, try to make some of the situations close, and try to get in the position where we have a chance to win," Bietau said. "If we can do that, we'll come out OK."

Bietau said he hopes to take the same attitude into today's match that the Wildcats have had all season, even though this could be one of their toughest competitions to date.

"There's some incentive because it's KU, but I don't think that's a big factor in this match," he said. "We've always talked about approaching each match the same way, whether it's the best team in the conference or the weakest, and we're going to try to maintain that consistency."

The 'Cats would like to take advantage of their home court situation, which has always helped KU.

The competition begins with the doubles at 2 p.m.

Athletic fee, Lady Cats leave columnist pondering

Bleeding Purple

BRIAN HUMMELL
Sports Columnist

After a nearly month-long hiatus, my fans (actually my family) have missed the humor-laced, self-indulgent, soul-searching drivel that I have a penchant for writing and sporadically have published.

There's a lot of ground to cover. Most of the things I cried and moaned about before I left, are no more. So here's what's been happening since I've been gone.

At dear old K-State the athletic fee passed but failed (in a student referendum); the Lady Cats didn't get invited to a postseason tournament; the athletic fee passed but failed (in Student Senate); the men's basketball team got knocked out in the first round of the NCAA tournament; and there's a big rumor going around that the athletic fee might get passed (by the Board of Regents).

With all of my pet projects so mercilessly gutted, their entrails all over my carpet in the room where I keep my bowling trophies and columns autographed to myself and under glass — I don't know whether to cry really hard or just pout for a long, long time. Anyway, I feel like Greenpeace without a whale to save or a Chicago Cub fan.

In my despair, I feel in order to prove to you, my faithful readers, that I'm not the hopeless, trash digger I appear to be, I must now relate to you some experiences from my trip, because incredibly, these experiences are ironically similar to true-to-life stories in the wide world of sports.

First, at a swank, little, out-of-the-way bar on the outskirts of Los Angeles, I met a guy who met Jose Canseco. But get this, Jose is not the great guy we all think we know and love; he's just the opposite. Jose is just not a very nice fella.

It seems that superstar Jose was so full of himself that he wouldn't sign autographs for the little kiddies at spring training. He even turned his back on one little leaguer as he was about to snap a photo of the great Jose.

Luckily, my friend (who was wearing a Cubs hat, so I felt the tying bond of lost causes that we shared) was an old minor leaguer — from the days when they played for fun — and had access to the field and, of course, Jose.

My friend got the photo and an autograph and then, WHAMO! He pushes Jose and tells Jose what a truly behind-like person he is. But before Jose can respond, my friend reminds Jose of the fat contract he had just signed and how my friend wouldn't mind a cut of that juicy $1.3 million for his own pockets.

I can't say for sure, but it may be that very incident that has caused Jose such a bad pain in his wrist, that he can't play ball.

Pay heed to my advice Jose, I have yet to turn down an autograph request and although my family has a history of carpal tunnel syndrome, I have yet to feel any twinges of pain in my wrists. At least not any so severe that I can't type.

I've come to the conclusion that I'm no Jose Canseco.

Then I went to the land of lights, wierdos and no sleep, Las Vegas. As a bright-eyed, first-time gambler in the big mean city, I was an easy mark.

To play the slots or not to play the slots? Why in the hell would I split playing blackjack? And just how much money I could afford to lose were a few of the decisions I made in a mere split second. So, I lost money on blackjack and a few idiotically terrible sports bets, but actually made money on the slots. Go figure.

However, the sum total of my losses and wins amounted to a double-figure loss. Yeah, yeah, a loss is a

Gretzky, LA to play Edmonton

By The Associated Press

The great Gretzky gamble is starting to pay off for the NHL — a first-round series between Wayne Gretzky and the Los Angeles Kings and his former team, the Edmonton Oilers.

After playing 80 games to eliminate five of the league's 21 teams, the NHL playoffs begin tonight with eight games, including the matchup at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., between Gretzky and the Los Angeles Kings and his former employers, the Edmonton Oilers.

While Gretzky and his mates take on the Oilers tonight and Thursday night, 14 other teams begin the rigorous schedule of four games in five nights with which each series opens.

The most intriguing of the other matchups features the first playoff appearance of Pittsburgh's Mario Lemieux, who has supplanted Gretzky as the NHL's top scorer — he had 85 goals and 199 points this season.

He and the Penguins will be at home against the New York Rangers, who lost 14 of their final 17 games after leading the Patrick Division much of the year and will be coached by general manager Phil Esposito, who fired Michel Bergeron two games before the regular season ended.

In other series, it will be Philadelphia at Washington; Hartford at Montreal; Buffalo at Boston; Chicago at Detroit; Minnesota at St. Louis and , Vancouver at Calgary.

Sanders allowed to enter draft

By The Associated Press

The NFL draft gained two blue-chip players and a touch of intrigue Tuesday when University of Miami quarterback Steve Walsh announced his intention to turn pro and the league granted admission to Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders.

Sanders, who threatened to go to court if necessary to enter the NFL, learned that he wouldn't have to. The NFL granted his request to enter the April 23 draft because his school, Oklahoma State, is on NCAA probation and because coach Pat Jones and athletic director Myron Roderick support him.

"We've always believe it best for both professional and college football that the NFL's eligibility rules not work to disrupt college programs or players' educational opportunities," said NFL spokesman Joe Browne.

"But when an underclassman whose program is under NCAA sanctions decides to turn pro with the full support of his college coach and athletic director and when he has lost any remaining college football eligibility in the process, we have no realistic choice but to accept him."

Half an hour later, Walsh announced he would give up his final year of eligibility, but he didn't specify whether he would petition for the regular draft or one of the two supplementals — either in August or September.

Walsh, considered the second or third best quarterback available, doesn't need league permission because he plans to graduate this summer.

The 5-foot-9, 183 pound Sanders, who broke or tied 24 NCAA records last year while rushing for 39 touchdowns and 2,628 yards, is far more aware of his status. As it stands now, the Detroit Lions, who choose third, are likely to take him.

Lawyer wants client committed for tests

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A lawyer representing a young man charged with participating in the beating and stabbing death of a teen-age girl says his client either has amnesia or is faking a memory loss.

"This defendant is suffering from some form of amnesia — hysterical, drug-induced (PCP and pot) or feigned," Howard Washburn said in a motion filed Monday in Wyandotte County District Court. Washburn asked that his client, Archie Owens Jr., 20, be committed to Larned State Hospital for tests.

Owens is charged with first-degree murder in the Feb. 19 slaying of 17-year-old Syndi Bierman, a Piper High School honor student and athlete.

Also charged are Conrad Joseph Hernandez, 25, who has pleaded guilty, and Shari Bierman, 20, the victim's adopted sister. Shari and Owens were ordered last week to stand trial in the slaying.

"To allow defendant to stand trial at the present time is very much like being tried in absentia," Washburn's motion said. "Hysterical or emotional amnesia may be dispelled by time and treatment. The test may find the amnesia is a sham. Memory may even be retrieved when drug-inducded."

Washburn said he did not know how he would defend Owens because his client could not or would not recall details of the night of the attack.

Commissioners agree to allow temporary advertising in parks

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan City Commissioners decided unanimously Tuesday to allow temporary advertising in city parks.

Commissioner Kent Glasscock presented minor alterations to the proposal that was tabled in the March 21 meeting. The major issue was defining temporary advertising.

It was decided that the length of time advertisements would be allowed, would be at the discretion of the director of parks and recreation and the city manager. Glasscock suggested that advertising be limited to the duration of an event, 24 hours prior to and 24 hours following the event.

"In most cases the 24-hour limit would not be a problem," said Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation. "There would be an occasional event, for example the NBC World Series, where more time could be allowed (for advertising)."

Glasscock also noted there should be a distinction between advertisements and donor recognition. Donors will be recognized by company name only and will be presented in a consistent and fair way, Glasscock said.

A grandfather clause was also included in the ordinance so present contracts will continue to be honored until their expiration date.

"In most cases the 24-hour limit would not be a problem."
—Terry DeWeese Director of Parks and Recreation

When the issue of transient guest tax was discussed, Commissioner Nancy Denning left the room.

"Although I have no conflict of interest, I am going to excuse myself from any further discussion on this issue," Denning said.

The transient guest tax, which is based on the use and the number of hotel and motel beds in Manhattan, passed with a 4-0 vote. It will increase the tax rate from 3 percent to 5 percent.

The commissioners also accepted a resolution to request funds from the state for the expansion of the Senior Service Center and the adjacent parking lot at north 4th Street and Leavenworth.

The request is for $300,000, which would be used for the demolition, relocation, expansion, design and administration of the Senior Service Center. The addition to the building would increase capacity by half, and would add 18 more parking spaces to the existing 17 spaces.

In addition, the commission conducted the following business:

- Proclaimed the month of April, Arbor Month and April 14, Arbor Day.
- Proclaimed the month of April as Fair Housing Month.
- Adopted a resolution to acquire the right-of-way purchase for the Anderson Avenue street improvements project, and to authorize the city engineer to file a survey of such right-of-ways with the city clerk.

Senate

said members have raised enough funding on their own to pay for most of the operation expenses. The allocation from Senate will only help pay for part of the additional expenses.

Gymnastics club was allocated $190 without any discussion.

Senate voted to allocate U-LearN $11,983, after passing one of eight proposed amendments. The approved amendment lowered U-LearN's budget for professional supplies from $111.50 to $98.60.

"U-Learn doesn't need two toll-free digest books or a new zip code book," said Chris Kern, architecture senator.

Another amendment suggested the allocation for professional supplies change form.

Senate voted to amend the Fone Crisis Center's advertising budget to 355.95, up 71.60 from the Finance Committee's recommendation.

The advertising budget for the group pays for the advertisements in the Welcome Back edition of the Collegian and the Campus Directory advertisements. There is also a daily classified advertisement in the Collegian that gives the group's phone number.

"This group is as important as any on campus," said Kern, senior in landscape architecture. "Fone Crisis is an important service that needs to be known by the student body. It's probably more important than Student Government."

One amendment would have eliminated U-LearN's subscription allowance for newspapers, but Senate opposed it.

"There are newspapers in the library," Kern said. "Let students buy their own papers."

The amendment failed.

Laurian Cuffy, student body president, said U-LearN is an "information piggy bank" and U-LearN employees should stay abreast of current information.

Senate also allocated $1,643.40 to the Associated Students of Kansas.

An amendment for $200 was allocated for postage so ASK can send students' letters to the Kansas Legislature.

"Ask represents all students at K-State," said John McIntyre, campus director for ASK. "The more letters that come from K-State, the more impact there is on the issue at hand."

A second amendment would have raised ASK's advertising budget from $80.40 to $160.80, but the amendment failed.

Part of the money would have paid for two ASK advertisements encouraging students to register for the vote.

loss, but I'm no Pete Rose.

Then it was off to the track and some very unsmart wagering on thoroughbred horses. I can't wait until a track in Kansas opens full-time. This will allow me to see if my strategy of betting on the horse with the trainer who has the best-looking daughter is flawed or if my losses were a fluke.

Regardless, a loss is still a loss but, you guessed it, I'm still no Pete Rose.

So, I'm at the airport panhandling money, from Hari Krishna's no less, trying to make my way back to Kansas with much lighter pockets and the remnants of a very faint tan, (hey, I'm no Hulk Hogan). When all of a sudden I meet a woman.

She says she'd like to accompany me on road trips, as a kind of a personal manager-type; all I have to do is pay her expenses and eat the broiled chicken she fixes for me. I say no.

I've come to the conclusion that I'm no Wade Boggs.

Body builder seeks distinction

Conference competition organized

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

Hanging on the wall of body builder Marc Bamman's living room is a large black-and-white poster of actress Marilyn Monroe. It is her most famous pose: In a scene from the film "The Seven Year Itch," she is standing on a subway grating holding down her skirt as it is caught by a gust of wind.

Film critics say that Monroe was, to a great extent, a self-creation. She changed her name, colored her hair and altered her body through plastic surgery to become one of the world's most enduring sex symbols.

For different reasons, Bamman, senior in exercise science, has altered his body by lifting weights. He said he admires individuality.

"I tend to like people who are ahead of their time," Bamman said, "I like people who are the most famous and established in their field, like Elvis Presley in rock 'n' roll and Arnold Schwarzenegger in body building. Marilyn Monroe was an original. She was one of a kind, and it worked for her. I like that."

Like Monroe, Presley and Schwarzenegger, Bamman is breaking new ground. For the past year, he has planned, organized and promoted the first college conference body building competition. The 1989 Coors Light Big 8 Body Building Championships will be Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Preliminary judging will be at 12:30 p.m. and the final competition will begin at 7 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door.

"Some universities throughout the United States have their own competitions, but this is the first conference competition," Bamman said. "If ours is a success, eventually I'd like to see body building championships in all the conferences."

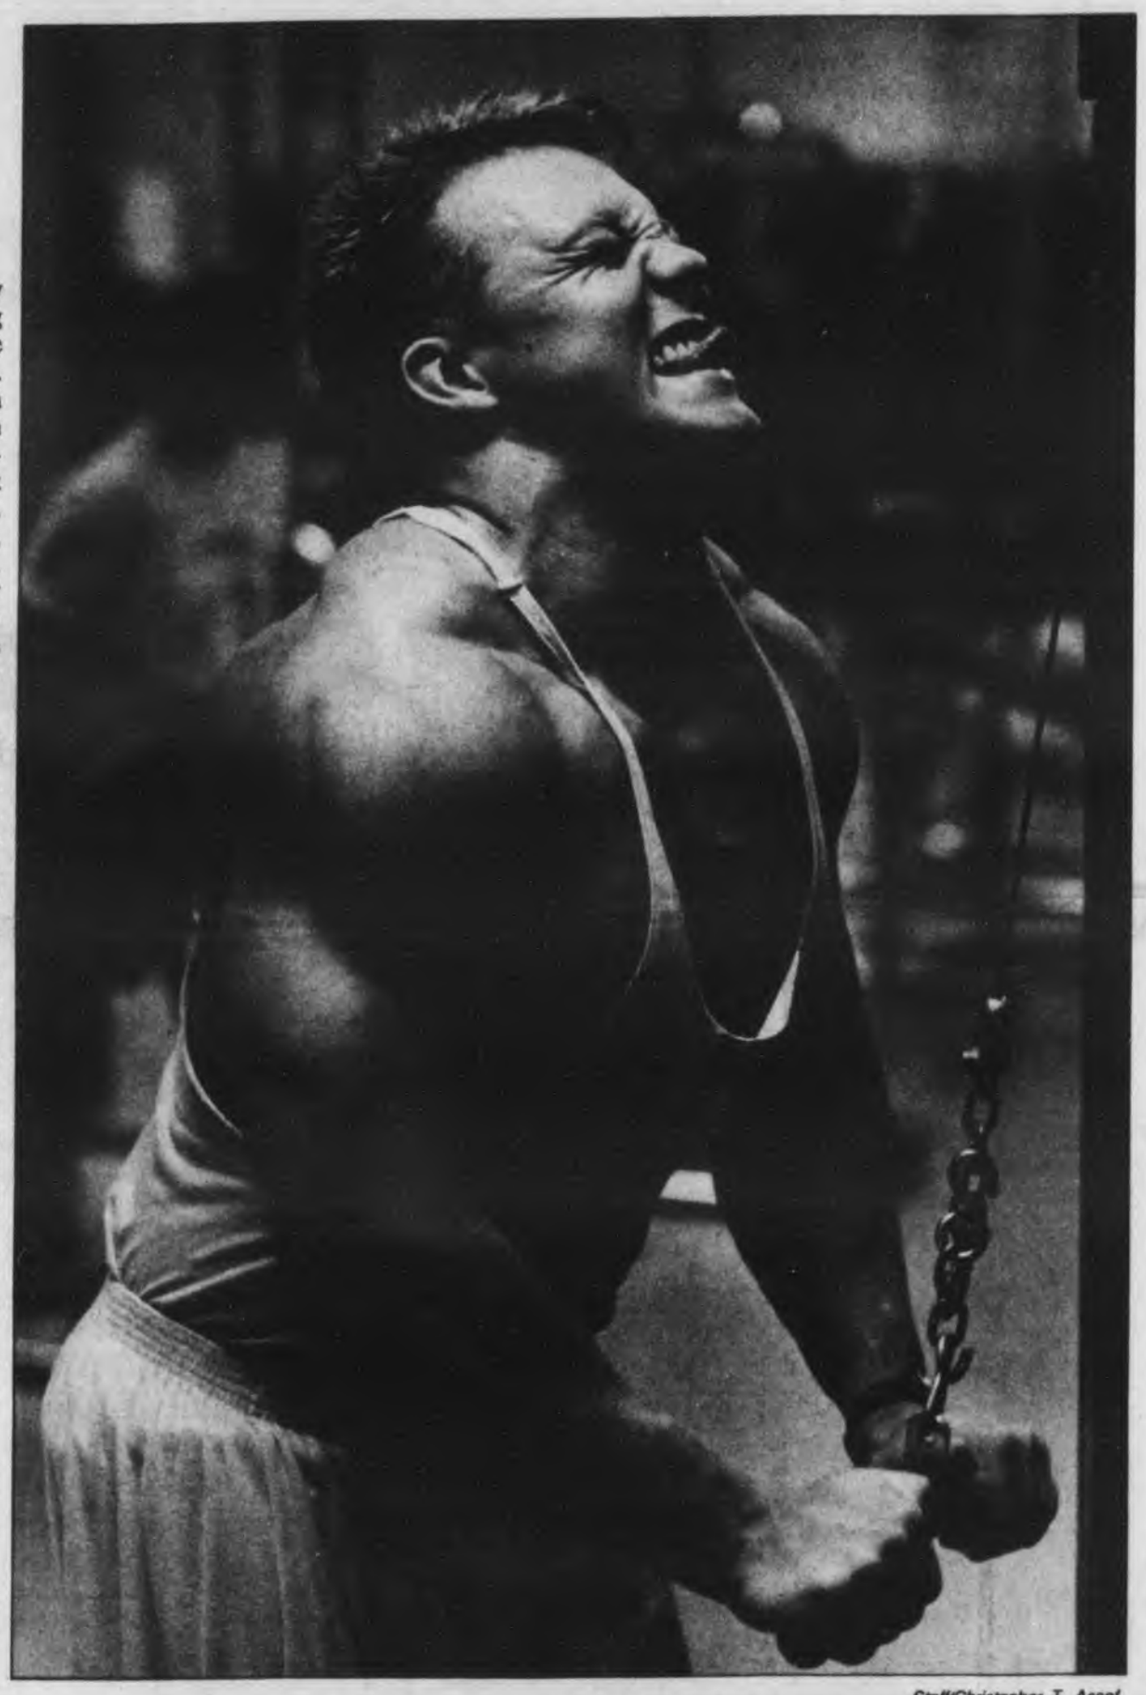
The competition began as Bamman's dream to draw attention to the sport he has participated in since high school, he said.

He originally planned a "Mr. and Miss K-State" competition, but when not enough body builders showed an interest, he expanded the scope to include all of Kansas, then eventually the entire Big Eight Conference.

Forty competitors have entered the competition, about half of whom are from Manhattan.

"We've got people coming from Iowa State, the University of Missouri and the University of Kansas," Bamman said. "They don't have to be college students, but that is the age group that we are aiming for."

Along with Matt Fairchild, senior in marketing, Bamman formed Muscledom Productions to attract sponsors, judges and guest posers for the competition and to promote it. Bamman and Fairchild will judge the competition.



"Body building is what I love," Bamman said. "Not only do I love to compete, but I like to judge and to promote the sport. I'm sure I'll continue to promote and judge beyond my competitive days."

Bamman's competitive days began when he was 17 years old and he entered the Mr. St. Louis competition in his hometown. In a field of body builders older than himself, he placed fifth.

From the local level, he rose to regional competition, winning the title of 1986 Teen Mr. Ozark and advanced to the 1986 Teen Mr. America competition, placing fourth.

"You're never satisfied unless

Capitol Air Lines trying to recover faltering business

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Although Capitol Air Lines is "actively working" on rebuilding its business after ceasing operations last Friday, nothing definite has been decided, said William S. Fogerson, president of the Manhattan company.

"We're hanging in there — we don't want to bail out yet," he said.

Fogerson told The Associated Press last Thursday the decreasing number of passengers made it economically impossible to continue service.

Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said the city is "working on squaring things away" at Capitol.

"We're going to look and see what is available — see who wants to service Manhattan," McCallum said. "But we're still committed to Capitol. Right now we have to wait and see."

Capitol operated scheduled commuter flights between Salina, Manhattan, Topeka and Kansas City, Mo., International Airport. Fogerson said the airline will still continue to charter flights.

Air Midwest is now the only company that offers daily scheduled flights out of the three airports besides KCI. Robert Priddy, president of Air Midwest, said his company is "looking at adding flights" to Manhattan.

Air Midwest has six departures and eight arrivals daily at the Manhattan airport, with the exception of Saturday and Sunday. The weekend schedule includes four arrivals and one departure each day, said a service agent with Braniff Express. She said the number of passengers has increased slightly since Capitol suspended services last Friday, with several sold-out flights.

Priddy said there is one flight that departs from Manhattan in the afternoon that is crowded, but the company must decide whether adding another flight "makes sense."

Because of a "pretty good lead time, once you make a decision (to add another flight), it takes two months," to actually incorporate that flight into the airline schedule, he said.

In general, Priddy said he didn't expect Capitol's suspension to have too big an effect on Air Midwest's business, because "There really weren't that many people flying Capitol."

Fogerson told AP that about 4,000 people a month used to fly with Capitol. That figure had dropped to 1,100 by February, he said.

In January, the airline operated 12 daily flights between the four cities it served, but that number was reduced to four by early March.

Priddy said Air Midwest doesn't release the number of its customers because of marketing reasons.

A round trip ticket to KCI costs $110 on Air Midwest, and anywhere from $176 for a single-engine plane to $341 for up to eight passengers in a twin-engine plane chartered from Spicer Aircraft Inc.

Senate to discuss divestment bill

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will consider action on the findings of the Ad Hoc Committee on Ethical Investments in South Africa at its meeting tonight.

The Ad Hoc Committee introduced a bill in Senate's last meeting that, if approved, would require divestment of all student monies in U.S. companies conducting business in South Africa.

"Debate on this issue could be fairly long, since this is such a sensitive subject," said Mary Jo Lampe, executive adviser to the student body president. "There are some feelings that the members of the Ad Hoc Committee have not been as objective as they should have been while researching this report."

Carl Damon, administrative assistant to Student Senate at the University of Kansas, said KU's Senate has not dealt with divestment of funds specifically in South Africa, but it has sponsored Racial Awareness Days.

Senate will hear second readings on a bill that would allocate $20,000 to the band for purchase of new uniforms.

"The total cost of the new uniforms is $56,000," Senate Chairman Todd Johnson said. "The money for the Senate allocation would come from the Foundation account and the remainder of the balance from fundraising efforts by the band."

Senate will also hear allocation requests from the Black Student Union, Campus Legal Services and Amnesty International.

Possible Fort Riley expansion prompts meeting, coalition

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

A coalition of Flint Hill farmers and landowners near Fort Riley will meet tonight to discuss the possibility of losing their land to a possible expansion of Fort Riley.

Preserve the Flint Hills was organized several weeks ago by Keith Ascher, a Flint Hills farmer, in response to growing concern about fort officials expressing the need to expand by about 100,000 acres.

Fort Riley now occupies 105,000 acres, with 40,000 available for mechanized training maneuvers. Mark Meseke, Fort Riley media relations officer, said the fort needs to be enlarged, but the Army hasn't specified what land may be used for the expansion.

"The only requirement we have now is that it is an hour's drive or less," Meseke said. "At this point, Fort Riley has nothing approved concerning expansion, except that we do need more land."

Beverly Bohn, secretary of Preserve the Flint Hills, said statements made by Maj. Gen. Gordon Sullivan in a Jan. 22 issue of the Manhattan Mercury alerted landowners about the possible jeopardy to their homes.

In the Mercury interview, Sullivan did not specify what land was being considered by the Army, but said he would personally prefer it to be contiguous with the fort.

The land the Flint Hills organization is concerned about extends south from Interstate 70 to Dwight, a small town with a population of 319. Bohn said about 300 families would be affected, including those who don't live on the land but own property there.

Meseke said he doesn't know "how or where the organization came up with their boundaries.

"This is still in its infancy; the requests haven't even left Fort Riley," he said. "It will be four or five years down the road before anything happens with the land."

Meseke said in several weeks or more, the Army will submit a land-

Missile silo to be sold

By Paul Branson
Science Writer

Need a place for a big party? Or how about a place to put that big missile that mom wants out of the attic? Got about $50,000 burning a hole in your pocket?

Well, the Department of Mechanical Engineering may have just the deal.

At an auction at 10:30 this morning, someone will become the owner of a vintage Atlas Missile site owned by the department and located about a half mile northwest of Wamego.

"These sites were built in the early '60s and became obsolete two or three years after they were built," said Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering

"The U.S. government deeded the sites to other government agencies that could use them. We received the site in 1968 and were obligated to maintain it for 20 years," he said.

Cogley said the Atlas, a liquid-fueled rocket, was the first intercontinental ballistic missile. The advent of solid fuels caused these rockets to become obsolete.

"There's a tremendous door that opens on top of the bunker where the missile was kept," said Herbert Ball, professor of mechanical engineering. "Then the missile was raised up, and the liquid fuel was put into it."

Ball said the site was used by the department to conduct experiments which were too loud to be done on campus.

"We had a supersonic wind tunnel at the site and a shock tube," he said. "When that wind tunnel got going, it wailed like a banshee."

A shock tube is, of course, tube shaped with caps on both ends. Inside, a destructible diaphragm divides the tube.

"A combustible gas is ignited in one end and when the diaphragm is destroyed, a shock wave travels down the tube," Ball said. "This device was used for many types of experiments."

As interests of the mechanical engineering department moved

Taiwanese defector given rank

BEIJING — An air force pilot from Taiwan who defected to mainland China has been made a ranking officer in the communist air force, the government said Wednesday.

Lt. Col. Lin Xianshun was given the same rank he held in Taiwan's air force. He was also appointed deputy chief of staff at a Chinese military institute, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

Lin, 35, flew his F-5E fighter across the 110-mile wide Taiwan Strait to southeastern China's Guangdong province on Feb. 11, the news agency said.

Lin said he defected because he wanted to visit his ancestral home in Guangdong. Although Taiwan's government in 1987 lifted a ban on visits to the mainland, military personnel and government workers are not allowed to go.

Chinese Nationalists set up a rival government on the island province of Taiwan in 1949 after losing a civil war on the mainland to the communists. They still claim to be the rightful rulers of all China. More than a dozen Nationalist air force officers have defected to the mainland since 1949.

Boots dangerous weapons

SALEM, Ore. — The Oregon Court of Appeals on Wednesday ruled that cowboy boots are dangerous weapons — at least under some circumstances.

The decision upheld the first-degree robbery conviction of Todd Bell in a case from Multnomah County.

Bell knocked a woman to the ground and kicked her in the chest while taking her purse, the court said. He was charged with first-degree robbery on grounds the cowboy boots he wore were dangerous weapons.

"Clearly, cowboy boots with pointed toes and three-inch heels are capable of causing injuries that bare feet or, say, tennis shoes are not," the appeals court said.

And the court said the circumstances of an object's use, rather than its design, make it a dangerous weapon.

"Although cowboy boots are not dangerous weapons per se, defendant converted them into dangerous weapons ... when he used them to kick a resisting robbery victim in the upper body while she was lying on the ground," the court said.

Bush asks for more visas

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration, seeking to open America's doors to all immigrants from the Soviet Union who want to enter the United States, announced Wednesday that it is asking Congress to approve an additional 30,000 immigrant visas a year over the next five years.

"We're trying to make sure we take care of everybody from the Soviet Union who wants to come in," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said.

He announced legislation has been sent to Congress to ease a steadily growing backlog of Soviet visa applicants.

Immigration and Naturalization Service officials said they were optimistic Congress would approve the legislation.

INS Commissioner Alan Nelson said that in addition to the relief which the new legislation would provide for clearing up a backlog, he was sending more inspectors to Moscow and Rome to help speed the processing.

For years, the United States has pressed the Soviet Union to ease its immigration policies, particularly for Soviet Jews.

Yuppies, town dispute clock

HATFIELD, Mass. — A century-old clock in this quintessential New England town has pitted old-timers fond of its hourly chiming against a pair of newcomers who say the clamor is taking a toll on their sleep.

The couple sued to silence the town clock at night, and that is the talk of the Main Street barbershop, just a stone's throw from the First Congregational Church steeple that holds the clock, said barber Giles Desmond.

"Any time anything happens that might undermine the town's history, people get very — how shall I say? — hostile," said Selectman George G. Zgrodnik Jr. "What do you think people in England would do if they turned off Big Ben?"

This confrontation of yuppies vs. Yankees has caused the greatest bustle in the pretty little town since an old school was demolished a decade ago to make way for a modern one, said Zgrodnik.

Feelings run deep in this 319-year-old farming community, where settlers once battled Indians and asparagus has overtaken tobacco as the chief cash crop. Zgrodnik said some of the 3,200 townspeople still aren't talking to the official they suspect of arranging the schoolhouse demolition.

Bombers to be inspected

OMAHA, Neb. — No B-1B bombers will fly until their escape hatches are inspected in the wake of two instances in which the hatches flew off, the Strategic Air Command announced Wednesday

Asked if the planes had been grounded again, Col. Larry Greer, SAC's director of public affairs at Offutt Air Force Base, Neb., said:

"That's your word. I didn't use that word.

"At the moment they are inspecting all of the airplanes. We expect that will be completed and they will be flying again late (Thursday) afternoon."

Ejection hatches on two B-1B bombers from Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene, Texas, mysteriously blew off during training flights just a day apart, a base official said Wednesday.

No one was hurt in either incident, Maj. Mary Beth Kilgore said.

Woman's death investigated

TOPEKA — The death of a woman who died Wednesday in a fire in her apartment was under investigation, officials said.

Margaret L. Harris, 57, died of smoke inhalation, said W. Mike Scamman, district coroner.

Ms. Harris was alone on the couch in her apartment when the fire started, said District Chief Ray Shy.

"There was an accelerant involved, and we don't know any more than that," Shy said.

Mayor loses, wins election

ST. JOHN — The outgoing mayor of St. John almost pulled off his 11th-hour bid for the City Council but fell short when a handful of supporters decided they'd rather have him as mayor.

Nolen G. Taton announced earlier that he would not seek reelection as mayor and would not file for a seat on the council, but he changed his mind and launched a write-in campaign for the City Council.

In balloting Tuesday, Taton finished third in a field of four candidates for two council seats. Gene Scott and Vernon Gee received the most votes — 274 and 232 respectively — while Taton was close behind with 229. Jimmy Green, the fourth candidate, also was close with 228 votes.

Taton also received 10 write-in votes for mayor.

Burn victim 'doing fine'

A sophomore in arts and sciences who was burned in a March 24 gasoline fire near Kipp, Kan., is listed in stable condition at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., a hospital spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Darren Landis, a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, was burned while pouring gasoline from a coffee can into the carburetor of an antique fire truck owned by the fraternity.

Landis sustained second- and third-degree burns over 40 percent of his body.

Diane Anderson, of the nursing services office at KU Medical Center, said Landis is "doing fine." She said no date has been set for his release from the hospital.

Staff considers funding

Athletic ticket prices discussed

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

One week after the proposed student athletic fee failed to pass by a two-thirds majority in the student referendum, KSU Athletic Department officials are considering alternative methods of funding.

Athletic Director Steve Miller said the department's administrative staff met last week to discuss increasing men's basketball and football season ticket prices, in addition to combining football and basketball tickets into one package.

But Miller said price increases will be small and guaranteed tickets would not be combined.

"Any ticket price increase will be minimal," Miller said. "Whatever is decided, football and basketball tickets will not be combined."

Although nothing is definite, Miller said increases in ticket prices will be limited to between $1 and $1.50 per game. The increase in ticket prices for chairback seats will be slightly more.

The exact amount of the increases will be announced on Friday, after another department meeting.

"Since (head basketball coach) Lon Kruger and (head football coach) Bill Snyder will be most affected by this, I will not decide without checking with them first," Miller said.

The proposed fee would have generated about $460,000 for the department over a three-year period.

"I hope somebody gives the department credit for abiding by the minority," Miller said about the athletic department's decision not to take the issue to the Board of Regents. The referendum was approved by a simple majority of students voting, but since less than one-third of the student body voted, a two-thirds majority was needed for passage of the fee.

He said the department is still concentrating on other areas for increased revenue, such as state appropriations, gate receipts and ticket sales.

"We will have to put more people in the stands next year," he said.

In addition, Miller said he plans to continue charging admission to non-revenue sports.

Miller had guaranteed students free admission to all home games in non-revenue sports, if the referendum had been approved.

Track and field coach John Capriotti said he feels confident the athletic department will find an alternative solution to the revenue problem.

"I haven't thought much about it since the referendum was over," he said. "I have just been going about my business."

He said he would like to see the department concentrate on raising more money without dwelling on the failure of the athletic fee.

"We have got to be positive and our programs have to continue to get better," Capriotti said.

He said he will support whatever decision is made by Miller and the department in regard to ticket price increases.

"No one is going to be forced to buy tickets," he said.

Capriotti said the students who did not vote have no right to question any decision made by the department.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, said the athletic department has been consistent in communicating its projected deficit.

"The need for money in the athletic department has not gone away," he said.

Bosco said increasing ticket prices had been discussed prior to the referendum as an alternative for funding if the proposed fee failed.

Crash's investigation begins

By Erwin Seba
News Editor

A team of 30 Air Force officers Wednesday began investigating the Tuesday afternoon crash of a single-engine jet attack aircraft in a field southwest of Junction City.

An Iowa Air National Guard A-7D Corsair, piloted by Maj. Thomas J. Deardorff, crashed in a field a quarter-mile south of Interstate 70.

Deardorff ejected from the plane and parachuted to a safe landing five miles southeast of the crash site, said Mark Meseke, media relations officer at Fort Riley.

Deardorff was released Wednesday from Irwin Army Community Hospital at Fort Riley, said Tech. Sgt. Dave Bryan of the Public Affairs Office at McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita.

Deardorff was uninjured in the incident "other than what is associated with bailing out of an airplane," Bryan said.

The team of 30 officers constitutes a temporary board investigating the crash, he said. That board will turn over all of its findings to a permanent investigating board appointed by the Air Force.

The permanent board is comprised of experts in aircraft safety, maintenance and design. The person appointed chairman of the board is usually a colonel, Bryan said.

When the investigation is concluded, the findings of the board will be released by the Air Force Inspection and Safety Center at Norton Air Force Base in Los Angeles.

Deardorff's plane was part of a flight of two A-7s from the 132nd Tactical Fighter Wing at Des Moines, Iowa, flying a training mission to the Smoky Hills bombing range southwest of Salina.

The A-7 accompanying Deardorff's plane landed without incident in Lincoln, Neb.

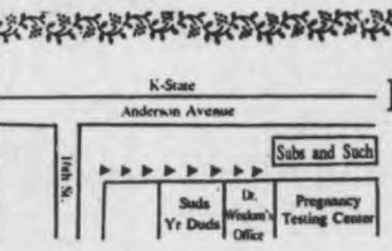
No information has been given as to why the second aircraft did not return to Des Moines, Bryan said.

Deardorff's plane was carrying five 25-pound bombs and 20-millimeter ammunition when it left Des Moines. An Army spokesman at the crash site Tuesday said no explosions were caused by ammunition in the crash.

Committee kills Washburn compromise

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A budget conference committee deadlocked Wednesday night in its effort to reach compromise on higher education funding, with the major dispute over the amount of state financing for Washburn University of Topeka.



House negotiators, led by Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, held out for a $6.3 million operating grant for Washburn that has been approved by the House.

Senate negotiators, headed by Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence, acting chairman of the Senate budget panel, offered a $5.4 million operating grant.

"I'm not going to let Washburn be beaten down, and not get its fair share of money for higher education," Bunten declared. "I'm bitterly disappointed Washburn is not in the state system. The people of this community are very unhappy over that. But we'll keep talking."

House vote on prisons shows poor foresight

By rejecting Gov. Hayden's proposal to create a new prison that would help diminish the state's prison overcrowding problem, the Kansas House of Representatives served its constituents a callous and inept display of short-term planning.

The House rejected plans to build the $47.9 million prison — plans already approved by two legislative committees. It opted instead for a renovation plan estimated at $11.7 million. Despite veiled statements made by representatives saying they would like to see existing facilities reformed, it is clear that financial considerations took precedence over the condition of life in Kansas prisons.

Perhaps the House forgot about last month's ruling by U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers, which called for the elimination of prison overcrowding in Kansas by July 1, 1991. Or perhaps the legislators decided partisanship took precedence over common sense, and could not resist handing Hayden another political defeat.

Whatever the excuse, the result of Saturday's 3½ -hour debate was not in the best interest of Kansas citizens.

Prisons in Kansas are overcrowded, and unless the Kansas Legislature knows something it isn't telling us, crime rates are not about to drop. By refusing to build a new prison today, the House is merely postponing the inevitable, with representatives shamelessly attempting to secure their political behinds by being stingy with state funds.

Earlier this year, the House discussed a bill to make the death penalty legal in Kansas. Arguments of possible human rights abuses and the exorbitant expense of sentencing someone to death were weighed against capital punishment as a deterrent to crime. Human rights and financial considerations proved more important to the Legislature than an unproved claim of crime deterrence, and the death penalty was voted down.

This time around, however, high costs and consideration for human life were not on the same side, and the House once again opted to follow the safest course in the short run by saving money. But perhaps the hideous prison conditions which will only receive a quick fix by this proposal should be considered as cruel and unusual as the death penalty.

Maybe what Kansas needs is representatives who are not afraid to jeopardize their political careers in order to do what is right for their constituents.

New solution needed for old minimum wage

Poor George Bush.

We don't doubt that he really wants a kinder, gentler nation. But his decision to veto a bill that would raise the minimum wage from $3.35 an hour to $4.55 will probably look cold-hearted and unsympathetic to the working class.

But it really isn't. Sure, George Bush could sign the minimum wage law, but given the economy's present state, such a steep hike in the minimum wage would bring about an increase in unemployment and another round of inflation.

During his term, Jimmy Carter had to deal with rising inflation and unemployment, and such "stagflation" cost him his reelection. To avoid early rumors that his administration has been "Carterized," Bush can't afford to pass the minimum wage bill.

But Bush's "Carterization" will come soon enough, as he faces a future filled with more and more no-win situations like the minimum wage dilemma.

After all, Reagan's neglect of the nation's working class during the past eight years has created a major problem for his successor.

The number of working poor — that is, people who work full time but still can't earn above the poverty level — is growing as never before. Raising the minimum wage earlier on, when the economy could have allowed for it, would have been a way to counter this trend, but Reagan refused to do so.

With Bush's promise of a kinder, gentler nation, he can't afford to callously neglect the working poor any longer. But he can't afford to "Carterize" the economy, either.

Bush has said that he wants to carry on the Reagan legacy and be a kinder president. Maybe it's time he realized that he can't do both.

International week important

Education without social action is a one-sided value because it has no true power potential.
Social action without education is a weak expression of pure energy.
—Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. from "Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos or Community?"

Regardless of the location of an institution of higher education, or its name, there is one educational mission all universities profess.

That mission is to expose students to different ethnic cultures and people, to develop tolerance and respect for those who are different, and to promote harmony and togetherness among a diversified student body.

During the month of April, K-State will fulfill this mission, offering students the opportunity to get involved and learn about different cultures. It is necessary for all students to seize this educational opportunity and start to develop the human, socially active consciousnes and behavior that King said should be a part of the educational pursuit.

This is International Week at K-State. Although only three days are left for this week's events, there is still time for students to become actively involved and culturally aware.

At noon today, the KSU Arab Student Association will perform the Dabka Dance. Latin Music and African Drum/Dance will be the themes of performances at noon Friday.

At 6:30 p.m. Saturday at the International Student Center, there will be a potluck dinner which, if everyone brings a covered dish, will offer a cross section of food from around the world. The dinner will be a chance for students, regardless of national affiliation, to come together, share cultures and be a unique yet unified group — or, to use maybe a more hopeful word, family.

If this dinner is approached with the right attitudes, this will be an excellent chance to prove that the Jewish, African, Arabian, Indian, white, Hispanic, black, Chinese and whoever else are all part of a dynamic, single human race.

Commentary

Collegian Columnist

Another exceptional event for this week will be Navajo Indian poet Luci Tapahonso. She is an assistant professor of English, American Indian studies, and women's studies at the University of New Mexico.

Her poetry includes "Seasonal Woman," "Yaadi La," "The Lighting Awoke Us," and "They Think He's Sioux.' Tapahonso has been called a strong voice among women who speak for Native Americans and for all human beings.

Her evening performance is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Flint Hills Room. An afternoon performance will take place at 2:30 at the Minorities Resource Center.

Cultural education does not end with this week. April is also Hispanic Month. Some of the tentatively scheduled activities are a Hispanic faculty presentation, Guadalupe dancers, a University luncheon with Dr. Alicia Cuaron, a Latin music performance, and cultural exhibits in the Union and Minorities Resource Center.

The language, clothes, food, theater and music of the Hispanic culture represent the strength of a people and a dynamic culture. No one should miss the chance to participate in Hispanic Month.

It will be easy for many of us to get distracted from these events because this is the peak time for classes and studying. But usually everyone takes at least an hour or two break from studying. These culturally oriented programs would be a meaningful and educational way to spend leisure time.

I also hope no one will let fear and prejudice get in the way of participating in these events. Sometime ago in a class I had, a white female student told the story of a time when she and a black female were roommates.

Apparently, both of them stayed on their own separate sides of the residence hall room and didn't interact or even try to get to know one other.

This was a safe situation, but a very sad and limiting environment. The woman's excuse was that she was from a small town. Her parents had taught her that way. The black woman was from an all-black neighborhood. Her parents had taught her that way. And the cycle of excuses continues.

These excuses do not have to be perpetuated. Too many people from small towns and all-black neighborhoods have refuted these excuses by rising above these separatist attitudes. Opportunities exist to become familiar with other cultures and races. All one has to do is make the effort to try.

It should also be remembered that by the time people get to college, they are adults who should be responsible for their own attitudes and actions. There comes a time when we all must realize that some of what our parents and cultures teach us is not true or right.

It may sound naive and impossible to some, but we must learn about each other and speak for a united world for everyone, regardless of race.

Tapahonso said it well in the last verse of her poem "I Am Singing Now."
...and i am singing now for the night
the almost empty moon and the land swimming beneath cold bright stars."

Disinvestment, sanctions immoral

"It is hard to think of any policy more perverse and self-defeating than the policy of sanctions and disinvestment aimed against South Africa," said Fortune magazine's Marshal Loeb in his article concerning the lunacy of disinvestment.

To accurately perceive the situation in South Africa, let's look at the social and economic consequences of disinvesting.

Economists agree that South Africa has the capacity to grow at a rate of 5 to 7 percent, well above the 3 percent population growth.

Nonetheless, the sanctions placed on the nation have slowed its economic growth to less than 2.5 percent.

At this rate the population is exceeding the economic growth and thus contributing to high unemployment and starvation. Chief Buthelezi, head of the six million strong Zulu tribe, said, "When you try to destroy an economy that has achieved a vibrancy that has not been achieved anywhere else in Africa, you are sentencing us to starvation."

James Ngoya, president of the 100,000-member South African Black Taxi Association, adds, "I've even heard (American proponents of sanctions) say that whether sanctions will help to bring down apartheid doesn't matter because imposing sanctions puts Americans on the right side of history. ... I ask you to listen to our voices before you decide what is good for us, before you decide that black children must go hungry so you can be on the right side of history."

Commentary

Don Rollins
Guest Columnist

It is a fact that nine black African leaders, representing 21 million of the 24 million total black South Africans, have told the media and visiting congressmen that disinvestment is hurting their people.

George Matanzima, Prime Minister of Transekei (an independent state within South Africa) raises the question, "Who is really going to suffer? Is it not the blacks? We have even ministers trying to preach wayward things. Desmond Tutu, head of the Anglican church, is preaching disinvestment although he knows only blacks will suffer."

While Tutu represents only 12 percent or less of the blacks in South Africa, he insists on misdirecting the world's view that these actions are needed and wanted by all of South Africa.

Despite these overwhelming facts discrediting disinvestment, Ad Hoc Committee Chairman Michael Cavigelli, and Student Body President Laurian Cuffy, insist that K-State pull its funds from the companies that invest in South Africa.

Evidently, neither has taken into consideration the effects these policies (disinvestment and sanctions) will have on the whole of Africa.

The rest of Africa depends very strongly on South Africa for economic, social and political support, and we will hurt not only the people we are trying to help, but the rest of Africa as a whole.

Michael Christie, general manager of the South African Foundation, points out the true consequences of disinvestment and sanctions by stating, "If you break this economuy, you're going to have a region of 100 million begging bowls held up to the United States. You will have to pay for the chaos, as you did in Bangladesh, Ethiopia and other places. They're going to come back to you and ask for free food and every member of the left will say, 'It's your duty to give it.' But they will have broken the producing machine in the first place. They were the ones who made those bellies empty. That's the immorality of disinvestment and sanctions."

Local news big

Editor,

Reading the Collegian this week has reminded me of the scene from "Absence of Malice" where the old hand tells the cub reporter not to scare the tourists. The rule is, she says, that if it's in the water, it's a fish. If it crawls up on the beach and bites somebody on the leg, it's a shark.

Monday night the NCAA Division I Men's National Basketball Championship was played in Seattle. Monday's Collegian sports section led off with 58 column inches (including pictures) on the K-State track meet.

The only mention of the national championship was a single sentence in an advertisement of Bushwacker's.

On Tuesday the Collegian sports section featured 87 column inches (with pictures) on the Kansas City Royals' opening day loss. In the bottom right-hand corner were 10 column inches, no pictures, no box scores, on the results of the national championship.

I wonder, Chris Hays, what editorial rule is in effect here? Perhaps "Big news is little news and local news is big news?"

Support bill

Editor,

Tonight is the night Student Senate will vote on Bill 89/18, "Student Funds & Ethical Responsibilities." This vote will determine, among other things, whether the "student monies" invested by the KSU Foundation will be divested from companies doing business in South Africa.

This seems an appropriate time for such a vote, as these monies are being allocated to student groups. I would like to suggest that all students who have spent the last few weeks debating about where this money should go should spend at least a few hours considering where this money has been.

A great deal of time has been spent by the Investment Ad Hoc Committee compiling its committee report, which was presented to Senate last week and is available in the SGA office, or at a Divestment Information table in the Union today from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Students supporting divestment believe, and the Senate Ad Hoc Committee report confirms, that divestment is the one way in which we may contribute to the downfall of the brutal apartheid system. As students in a society which gives much lip service to democracy, we should also note that the majority (some polls show as many as 77 percent) of black South Africans have called for an end to foreign investment — and this is despite the fact that South African law defines support for divestment as subversion (for which the penalty is up to 20 years in prison).

Students interested in letting their Senators know they support divestment are encouraged to attend Senate tonight in the Big Eight Room in the Union, speak during open period at 6 p.m. and stay for the debate and the vote. It is extremely important to show your support for this bill, as it may set a precedent for what is to be done with the rest of the Foundation's account.

Once again, I invite students to stop by the information table in the Union today to find out more about this issue. But, perhaps more importantly, I encourage students, faculty, administrators and members of the Foundation alike to continue to research and consider the implications of not only the investment of university funds in companies doing business in South Africa, but also the message we as students receive when we are taught one set of social values in the classroom while being funded by an institution which does not adopt the same values (or, supposedly, any — beyond that of a dollar) as guidelines for its investments.

Food service good

Editor,

This is my second semester at K-State, and for as long as I have been here I have worked at Derby Food Center.

Since I started there, I have heard many students complain about the food offered there. Well, I don't know if it is just popular to cut down cafeteria food, or whether they actually can't stand the food, but there are a few points to consider.

The food service at K-State is known nationwide for its excellence, ranking in the top five among universities.

This point is even better considering the cost. K-State has the lowest priced program in the Big Eight, at $1,092 per year, compared to Colorado, which charges $1,596 a year for its program.

When broken down, we pay $4.48 per day, per student. I don't know of anywhere that someone can get three good meals a day for that price.

I just want to say that the Derby staff has done an excellent job so far, and that I hope they continue the good work.

Numbers wrong

Editor,

This is in regard to Lance Schwulst's article regarding the pre-Lou Douglas Lecture panel discussion on illiteracy. Specifically, I wish to address Jonathan Kozol's statistics regarding the illiteracy rate among blacks.

Kozol was quoted as saying that there are 60 million Americans who are illiterate, 44 percent of whom are black. This amounts to 26.4 million illiterate black Americans.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, as of 1987 there are 30 million blacks in the United States. Hence Kozol claims that 88 percent of American blacks are illiterate. The illiteracy problem is bad but this number is absurd.

This indicates two things to me. That a well-educated man such as Kozol could make such an egregious statement shows that he has little credibility as a spokesman for education.

Secondly, it shows that the problem of innumeracy is probably a more severe problem than illiteracy.

Senate lacks cause in divestment debate

Commentary

Leo Reintjes
Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Leo Reintjes is a sophomore in electrical engineering.

The members of the Student Senate seeking the divestment of University monies from South Africa, as reported by the Collegian last week, are sounding like blind zealots in lack of a cause.

The Student Senate, for some reason, feels the need to play "follow the leader" with divestment, even though the economic sanctions placed upon South Africa over the last few years have only made the whites of South Africa more resistant to change.

A member of Student Senate was quoted by the Collegian as saying "blacks in South Africa are overwhelmingly (requesting) this (divestment)." I suggest that the Student Senate listen to the black elected leaders of South Africa.

Among the black leaders opposing the divestment is M. Gatsha Buthelezi, the leader of nearly six million Zulus and the chairman of INKATHA, the largest black political organization in South Africa.

The only South Africans requesting divestment are the unelected members of the African National Congress (ANC) and its sister organization, the United Democratic Front.

The ultimate goal of the ANC is not simply the end of apartheid, but a communist government in South Africa of which the first obstacle is the presently strong South African government. However, should the white-controlled South African government fail with apartheid, the only impediment to the establishment of a communist government in South Africa will be a sizable educated and prosperous body of black South Africans (i.e. those capable of governing a democracy).

This is truly an obstacle, because in spite of apartheid and ample numbers of immigrants, South Africa has the largest black middle class in all of Africa.

Economic sanctions play right into destroying this bourgeoisie because they harm the black segment of South Africa more than the whites.

For blacks who oppose the doctrine of the ANC, the solution is murder and intimidation. The favorite targets of these murders are policemen, mayors and those who hold professional jobs, so that the races will become more polarized and the black community less governable.

On videotape I have seen these murders and seen Winnie Mandela proclaim how these crimes can "liberate" her country.

More divestment will only worsen the problems in South Africa, not solve them. Even in the United States only a successful minority can move into a "white" neighborhood, so in South Africa only a prosperous black community can peacefully break through apartheid.

With governments around the world deliberately starving, gassing or otherwise killing their own people, I am confident that our busybody Student Senate can find a more appropriate country from which to divest.

School board tables vote on gymnastics program

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

The Manhattan/Ogden USD #383 Board of Education heard opposing views Wednesday night on whether to discontinue the Manhattan High School's gymnastics program. No action was taken, and the board voted to table the request until July.

James Rezac, MHS principal, said gymnastics is "one of the most expensive activities at the school on a cost per student basis, because of the small number involved."

In a letter dated March 3 to Superintendent Hal Rowe, Rezac said there are about 10 athletes in the program and operating expenses and coaches' salaries are about $6,500.

Melinda Heuertz, Manhattan parent with a daughter in the program, read a statement of support during the Citizen's Forum section of the meeting. Heuertz illustrated the sport's popularity to the board by asking the students in favor of gymnastics to stand. About 30 students responded.

Rezac had said gymnastics is being discontinued by more schools each year, and Manhattan will be the only Interstate 70 school with the sport in 1989-90. According to the Kansas State High School Activities Association, the team is permitted to attend 10 meets, but only six have been scheduled. Several of those meets are with the same teams, Rezac said.

"I know the I-70 competition isn't everything, but if we're the only I-70 team, it removes any semblance of competition that we had," he said.

Heuertz defended the sport by saying Rezac's arguments were misleading. She said anyone attending the meets "can see there is strong support and competition," noting that in six out of the last eight years, the team has qualified for the state competition. Individual team members from Manhattan competed at state events the other two years, she said.

"I'm disappointed there was no advance notice of (the effort to cancel gymnastics) from the superintendent's office," Heuertz said. "I am greatly offended by these measures to discontinue the program."

Rezac said the sport is dangerous, and the board should consider the results if a participant is injured.

"I don't have to point out to the board the liability we would have in case of injury," he said.

Several board members expressed support of the sport. Martha Miller said "it is extremely dangerous, but so is football, and we're not looking at the possibility of knocking out football."

By tabling the issue until July, the board is allowing the program to continue and to schedule meets for next fall.

The board voted to adopt a drug-free workplace policy that states " ... Any employee of the district found to be illegally manufacturing, distributing, dispensing, possessing or using controlled substances ... shall be subject to appropriate disciplinary action, up to and including termination. ... "

The board unanimously accepted the policy without revision or debate.

Author Beata Lipman hands Charles Perkins a signed copy of her book "We Make Freedom — Women in South Africa," Wednesday afternoon in front of the Union Bookstore.

Author, filmmaker signs books

By Carrie Law
Collegian Reporter

Author and filmmaker Beata Lipman signed copies of her two books Wednesday in front of the K-State Union Bookstore.

Her first book, "We Make Freedom — Women in South Africa," was published in 1984. Her most recent book, "Israel: The Embattled Land — Jewish & Palestinian Women Talk About Their Lives," was published in 1988. Lipman traveled to Israel, and in her book, records her conversations with and impressions of more than 50 women from a variety of Jewish and Palestinian backgrounds.

Lipman's profiles show a side of war that is often absent from news reports. She writes of ways in which Israeli occupation resistance is causing Palestinian women to engage in political action in a departure from the normal traditional women's roles.

Although her life in Manhattan this past year has been rather calm compared with her days reporting in South Africa, Lipman said she has enjoyed being at K-State.

"This campus atmosphere is very conducive to learning," she said. "It's quite stimulating — a good atmosphere to be working in.

"People at K-State are very encouraging and the facilities are quite good, really. I've had the opportunity to pursue both my interests (Israel and South Africa) by showing my films and talking about my books and receiving feedback about them."

Ruth Sidhom, trade book buyer for the Union Bookstore, said book signings occur fairly often at K-State.

She said book signings are not always initiated by the Union Bookstore.

Retailer buys 7,000 gallons of gas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — It gave a new meaning to "fill 'er up."

To save money — and make a point — a gasoline retailer pulled an 18-wheel tanker up to the pumps at a Hypermart store Tuesday and began the long, slow process of getting it filled.

It started about 3 p.m. and took until midnight, said Tom Platis, president of Highway Oil and executive vice president of Working Man's Friend, a Topeka-based chain of gasoline stations.

Platis said his company bought 7,000 gallons of gasoline at 84.9 cents a gallon. The best wholesale price he could have gotten Tuesday, Platis said, was 91.38 cents a gallon.

The four Working Man's Friend stations in Topeka were selling gas at 94.9 cents a gallon.

Platis said the idea was prompted by a remark last week at a legislative hearing on a bill that would prohibit retailers from selling gasoline at below cost. One lawmaker, he said, asked, "If you can buy gas from a competitor cheaper than from the terminal, why not go load up?"

"That's what we did," he said.

KU wins match with tennis team, 6-3

Marijke Nel attempts to return the ball during No. 1 singles action at L.P. Washburn tennis courts Wednesday afternoon as part of a tennis match against the University of Kansas. Kansas' player Eveline Hamers, ranked 24th in the nation, defeated Nel 2-6, 6-2, 6-1.

After defeating Helen Schildknecht in a heartbreaking tie-breaker in a crucial singles match, Susie Berglund and the Kansas Jayhawks went on to defeat K-State 6-3 Wednesday.

Even though the 'Cats took the loss, Coach Steve Bietau was happy and said that the match was indicative of the progress that the team is making. This was especially evident as K-State dominated in doubles play, winning two of three matches.

"The team and the program are moving forward. We can't always say they're moving as fast as we'd like them to, but we're pulling ahead of where we were last year at this time," Bietau said. "I also feel good about the doubles. I think the time and effort spent are beginning to show."

The matches were extremely close at several points, including Annika Emtell and Thresa Burcham's victory at No. 3 doubles and Schildknecht's eventual loss in her third set at No. 2 singles. Even so, Schildknecht was pleased with the fight she put up.

"I made a lot of stupid plays," she said, "but I'm happy that I stayed in there and fought after losing the first set."

Junior Marijke Nel also gave KU quite a scare as she wiped out the Jayhawks' No. 1 player, Eveline Hamers, in her first game. However, Hamers, the 24th-ranked player in the nation, went on to win two straight sets and the match, 2-6, 6-2, 6-1.

"Somewhere in the second set she started playing better, and I tried to change things to compensate for that," Nel explained. "That was the wrong thing to do, because it allowed her to come back and win the set."

Nel also laughingly called herself "the injury queen for the day." After putting away a smashing point in her second game, Nel balanced on her toes for a few seconds to avoid touching the net, but then ended up tumbling over the net. Looking back, she said she's thankful she didn't get hurt.

"I had quite a few crash and burns, but some of them I won points off of, and that made me feel good," she said. "I think part of it's just because I wanted to play well so badly that I was willing to sacrifice things."

Golf squads finish meets third, ninth

By Mike Rouse
Sports Writer

Windy weather conditions played a major role in the second day of the Wichita State Golf Invitational Tuesday at Willowbend Golf Club in Wichita.

K-State, which started the day off in second place, five shots ahead of third-place Wyoming and nine strokes behind the host Shockers, finished third for the tournament.

The Shockers won the tournament with a 54-hole total of 934. Wyoming picked up six strokes on K-State to finish second with a total of 952. The Wildcats finished one stroke back at 953.

"It was really windy and cold," said K-State coach Russ Bunker. "(A) 77 was the lowest score, and Willowbend is a tough course when it is windy.

"I really thought we would do better. I knew they would be tough on their home course, but I honestly thought we would play a little better," he added.

Wichita State's John Denne was medalist with a score 229. K-State freshman Brad Stephans led the Wildcats by placing third individually with a score of 232. Brett Vuillemin placed fifth at 234.

Troy Keller ended in 14th place with a score of 240. Jeff Sedorcek finished 30th with a score of 247, and John Shields placed 43rd with a score of 256.

"You saw a lot of 80's, and that is disappointing, but next week in Missouri you hopefully won't see any of those," Bunker said.

The men will see action again April 9-11 at the Missouri Intercollegiate Tournament in Osage Beach, Mo.

The K-State women finished in ninth place at the Sue Bering Invitational in Norman, Okla. on Tuesday.

Alabama won the team title with a 54-hole total of 937. Oklahoma finished a distant second at 952. K-State finished with a score of 1,055.

Julie Schneider of Alabama was a medalist with a score of 219, three over par. Freshman Chris Adams led K-State by placing 15th with a score of 248.

Jill Zientara finished with a score of 262, Adena Hagedorn finished at 269 and Lonna Dale finished at 276. Cory Harlow withdrew from the tournament.

The women will see action again on April 16-18 at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Neb.

Shocker assistant named coach

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Wiping away tears and battling a quavering voice, Mike Cohen said Wednesday it was "a dream come true" being named Wichita State's new head basketball coach.

Cohen apologized for being so emotional.

"I have always told the kids, 'If you're going to get emotional, do it over good times,'" he said.

He noted his father died exactly four years ago to the day.

"It's amazing how one day's so bad and four years later it couldn't get any better," he said.

WSU Athletic Director Tom Shupe introduced Cohen, who had been Shocker chief assistant coach, as his search committee's choice at a Wednesday news conference on campus. Shupe said there never was any other serious candidate for the job.

"Mike Cohen deserves this opportunity because he's earned it," Shupe said.

He said Cohen's base salary would be $70,000, but that never was an issue in negotiations.

"Believe me, that's a steal. It took us about two minutes to discuss that," Shupe said.

Cohen, 45, said he had "prepared for this moment for 25 years" by coaching at the college and high school level.

"I inherit a well-heeled, respected program," he said.

Eddie Fogler resigned March 29 as WSU head coach to accept the top spot at Vanderbilt. He recommended Cohen, who he brought to Wichita when he came in 1986, to succeed him.

Cohen said he fell in love with Wichita instantly three years ago. He got married to a Wichita woman two years ago. It is his first marriage.

Describing Wichita as "heaven on earth for me," Cohen said, "It's given me my wife, my life and now a career."

Among current Shocker players, Cohen was the top choice to follow Fogler. At least one recruit, 6-foot-6 swing man D.J. Boston from Cincinnati, Ohio, said in advance he would keep his pledge to attend WSU if Cohen was selected.

Cohen said he would change the Shocker on-court strategy some by pressing more and bringing the ball up court faster.

WSU went 19-11 this season. The team lost a first-round game in the Missouri Valley Conference postseason tournament and a second-round contest in the National Invitation Tournament.

Elliott wins Wooden Award

LOS ANGELES — Sean Elliott, called the "consummate team player" by his coach at Arizona, collected a distinguished individual honor Wednesday when he was named the winner of the John R. Wooden Award for 1989.

Elliott, a 6-foot-8 senior forward, had finished third in the national balloting by sports writers and sportscasters last year, behind winner Danny Manning and Hersey Hawkins.

This year, Elliott edged out such stars as Danny Ferry of Duke, who also was among the five finalists for the 1988 Wooden Award. The other finalists this year were guards Sherman Douglas of Syracuse and Charles Smith of Georgetown and center Stacey King of Oklahoma.

Elliott received 1,871 points in the voting, with Ferry second at 1,721, followed by King with 895, Smith with 486 and Douglas with 356.

The winner was announced — by Wooden himself — during a luncheon at the sponsoring Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Tartabull leads Royals to win

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Tartabull doubled with two outs in the ninth inning and scored on Pat Tabler's single Wednesday night, giving the Kansas City Royals a 2-1 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Tartabull, who drove in the Royals' first run, doubled down the right field line and Tabler followed with a single to center off Todd Stottlemyre, who relieved Dave Stieb to start the inning.

Stieb, who lost no-hitters with two outs in the ninth in his last two starts of 1988, gave up four hits, struck out four and walked two. He did not allow a hit until Willie Wilson's leadoff single in the fourth.

Tom Gordon, in relief of Charlie Leibrandt, pitched 1⅓ innings of hitless relief for his first major league victory.

Triple play in nightcap ends doubleheader sweep

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

If K-State's baseball team was looking for a momentum builder heading into this weekend's Big Eight series with the Kansas Jayhawks, they may well have found it on the final play of Wednesday's doubleheader with NAIA foe Marymount.

Leading 5-3 in the top of the seventh of the nightcap, Wildcat pitcher Bill Schafer allowed the Spartans' first two batters to reach base on a single and a walk. With nobody out, Marymount first baseman Mike Bauer hit a ground ball to 'Cat second baseman Jeff Troll. Troll flipped the ball to shortstop Craig Wilson at second for the first out. Wilson threw to Mike Rosenboom at first to complete the double play on Bauer.

The first baseman alertly fired the ball across the diamond to Brad Rippelmeyer, who tagged a leaning Brian Mucciaccio out at third for a game-ending triple play and sweep of the twin bill.

The triple play, K-State's first since the 1986 season, offset a relatively poor fielding night by the Wildcats, who won the doubleheader by scores of 11-4 and 5-3. K-State's defense committed six errors, including five in the first game.

Troll, who started the triple play, committed his first error of the season in the opening inning of the first game. The miscue ended a streak of 90 successful fielding attempts by the junior second baseman.

K-State's top two relievers, Mike Hedrick and Bill Schafer, picked up victories in their first starting duties of the year. Hedrick tossed four innings in the opener, yielding just one unearned run on four hits. Chris Hmielewski survived a shaky fifth inning to record the save.

The Wildcats built a 3-0 lead in the first on a two-out homer by Rosenboom. Rosenboom finished the game 2-for-3 and scored twice.

Marymount answered in the second with a run on back-to-back singles by Gary Chambers and Marty McElroy. But K-State retaliated in the bottom half of the inning with three more on an RBI single by Troll and a two-out base hit by Russ Ringgenberg. Sean Collins and Troll scored to give K-State a 6-1 lead.

The Spartans threatened in the fifth when Hmielewski replaced Hedrick on the mound. Marymount cut the lead to 7-3 when the first five batters reached base. The freshman reliever responded by striking out the next three batters to end the rally.

K-State put the game out of reach in the bottom of the fifth, tallying four runs on four hits.

Bill Marion went five innings in taking the loss, dropping his mark to 4-2.

In the second game, Marymount jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the top of the first on a pair of fielder's choice RBIs. The Spartans' first three batters reached base on an error and two walks, setting up the early rally. Schafer then found his control, retir-

Trade provides competition, benefits nations, speaker says

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

The proverb "Good fences make good neighbors" is also true about neighboring nations and good treaties, said Canadian Consul General Carl Rufelds.

Rufelds spoke to about 25 people on the benefits of good trade relations between the United States and Canada Wednesday morning.

"The Free Trade Agreement is a good treaty," he said. "It is also a confirmation that competition is in everyone's interest and protection is in no one's. It marks a new phase in relations between our two countries."

The benefits of the FTA, which became effective Jan. 1, include improved relations in trade, security and environment, Rufelds said.

Rufelds said the FTA is a recognition that, now more than ever, progress in trade relations on defense, environment and other public policy issues will be a product of cooperation rather than concentration.

"The state of Kansas is well positioned to benefit from the stimulus of the Free Trade Agreement," Rufelds said. "Combined trade between Canada and Kansas was valued at over $800 million in 1987."

Robert Kruh, associate provost, said free trade is a movement in the right direction.

"(The) United States and Canada are each other's largest trade partners and I think free trade is in the best interest of both," Kruh said. "Once we select independent actions, we create difficult consequences."

Trade needs good rules and the FTA goes a long way to satisfy this need, Rufelds said.

"The coordination of our trade relationship, the cooperation of our enviromental relationship and the cohesion of our security relationship are possible because of the enlightening value shared by Canadians and Americans," he said.

"In essence, the FTA will make Kansas companies more competitive in the Canadian market and Canadian companies more competitive here," Rufelds said.

Rufelds represents the Canadian government in a six-state region, and is a 27-year veteran of Canada's diplomatic service. He has also served as a specialist in Beirut, Bangkok, Thailand, San Francisco, Guatemala and Beijing, China.

Loan guarantees sought

Banker: Rural areas need help

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A western Kansas banker called Wednesday for Congress to make more federal loan guarantees available to rural communities to help them rebuild and diversify their economies.

In testimony to the Senate Agriculture Committee, Murray D. Lull, president of the Smith County State Bank and Trust Co., appealed to lawmakers to make rural development a priority, saying, "Rural communities ... are going through a period of wrenching change."

"As employment opportunities disappear, skilled workers and the young are migrating from rural to urban areas in search of jobs. Local governments in agricultural areas are faced with reduced tax bases and deteriorating infrastructures," Lull said.

Lull, speaking on behalf of the American Bankers Association, suggested that a greater use of loan guarantees could help finance needed improvements in the infrastructure of communities, including better roads, sewer and water systems and health care facilities.

The Senate panel expects to hold a series of hearings this year on the subject of rural development. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the committee chairman, said Senate Democratic and GOP leaders have agreed to form a special task force on rural development to help coordinate development of a legislative package.

Overall, Lull stressed that rural communities must diversify their economies if they are to cope with the ups and downs that have traditionally plagued agriculture.

"Economic diversification will not be easy to achieve," he said. "Policies which encourage public and private investment in rural America are a vital ingredient in rebuilding the economic base of farm communities."

Lull said the bankers association opposed the use of direct federal loans but supported loan guarantees, in which the government backs loans made by local lenders, because they offer a "flexible" source of credit, yet protect the "financial integrity of the banks."

For example, Lull said federal loan guarantees would allow banks to even off a line of credit to "new business ventures which might otherwise not have the necessary collateral to secure the loan to the satisfaction of bank regulators."

UFM lecturer cancels due to illness

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

The lecture scheduled for tonight by author Jonathan Kozol in conjunction with the Kansas Literacy Conference has been cancelled. Kozol is ill with flu. Other conference activities remain unchanged.

University for Man, with the assistance of a grant from the Association for Community-Based Education, is conducting the conference today and Friday in Manhattan.

The conference will feature a variety of workshops, including "Recruitment and Retention of Students," "Literacy Programs for Social Welfare Clients," "Coping with Learning Disabilities," "Identifying and Coping with Rural Literacy," "Program Financing," "Recruitment of Volunteers," "Technology and Literacy," "Literacy and the Homeless," and "Tutor Training Insights."

Registration for the workshops begins at noon today, with the first session scheduled for 1 p.m.

Two sessions will be presented both today and Friday. The last workshop on Friday, "Building a State Literacy Coalition," is a working session for those interested in taking additional steps toward building a statewide literacy coalition.

Ron Kolenbrander, research assistant for the rural clearinghouse for education and development, said the coalition would be an initial step in confronting the literacy problems in Kansas.

"The coalition would be an attempt to build a grassroots effort to do something more about literacy in the state of Kansas," Kolenbrander said. "There is a problem with literacy and we need to ask ourselves what we are doing about it."

Richard Friesen, executive director of UFM, said there is hope for the development of a statewide coalition.

"The coalition would pull some of the different (literacy) providers together with some of the people who could help direct more research," Friesen said. "I don't think anything full-blown will come out of the session, but hopefully there will be some beginning steps to developing a coalition."

Friesen said this is the first conference of its kind to be conducted in Kansas.

"We had the opportunity to apply for a grant from the (ACBE) and we did," said Friesen. "I don't think it will be an annual event."

Although the workshops are aimed primarily toward providers of literacy services, Friesen said literacy is an issue which should concern everyone.

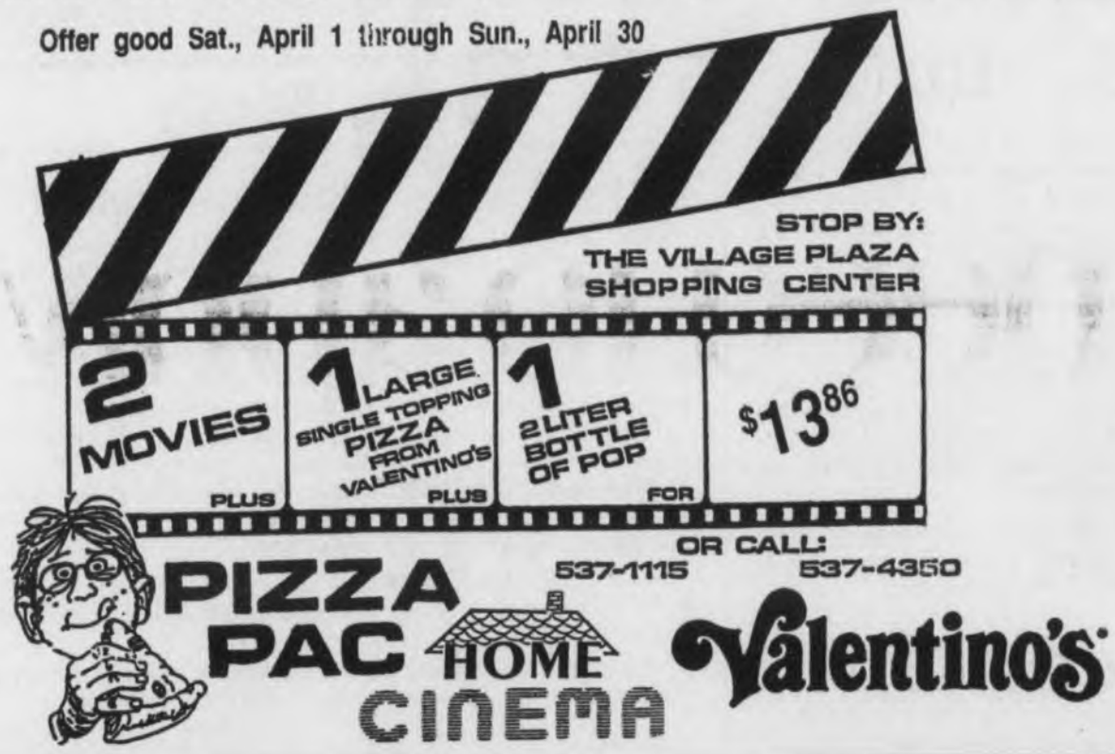
"Literacy is gaining more attention nationally and will probably be part of the national agenda for the next few years," he said. "One of the most valuable aspects of the conference is that people from their own communities will be able to share their experiences and ideas with others and provide a networking of resources."

All of the workshops will be at the First Presbyterian Church, 801 Leavenworth St.

Resolution aimed at property values

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Senate committee today endorsed a resolution that would direct counties to reexamine new valuations they have placed on property, particularly commercial property, because of widespread dissatisfaction with statewide reappraisal.



The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee's endorsment of the resolution sends the measure to the full Senate.

Sen. Eric Yost, R-Wichita, who proposed the resolution, said it would send a message to county officials that the Legislature is unhappy about the quality of the reappraisal work that was done.

He said it would put the Legislature on record as saying property values should be at fair market value, which Yost said wasn't done in many cases.

The resolution says that despite the efforts of the Legislature, reappraisal has not resulted in "equity and fairness in many instances but, rather, has resulted in considerable inequity and inaccuracies, especially in valuation of commercial property."

Baker encouraged by Israeli meeting

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Wednesday he was encouraged by suggestions by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir for settling the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Baker commented after a two-hour meeting with Shamir that the secretary said was "very productive, useful and very friendly."

For his part, Shamir said he had offered "some ways to solve" problems in the Mideast and remarked: "I feel we have started a very serious discussion. Our conversation was very friendly."

Details were not disclosed.

Shamir said last week he would propose elections among the 1.7 million Palestinian Arabs who live under Israeli control on the West Bank and in Gaza, with the aim of picking leaders to negotiate with Israel over the Palestinians' future.

Shamir said after the session with Baker that he would pursue bringing peace to the Mideast with President Bush on Thursday at the White House.

Israel has controlled the West Bank and Gaza since its lightning victory over Egypt, Jordan and Syria in the 1967 Six-Day War. On Monday, Bush called on Israel to end what he said was its "occupation" as part of an overall settlement with the Arabs.

Since December 1987, when the Palestinians launched a concerted campaign to challenge Israel, the territories have been shrouded by violence in which 419 Palestinians and 18 Israelis have died.

Shamir has ruled out negotiating with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which he holds responsible for that violence and for an unceasing campaign of terrorism against Israel.

He told a conference of Jewish-American organization leaders that sitting with the PLO would "bring disaster."

Instead, he has sought to revive the 1978 Camp David agreements' promise of a transitional period of autonomy for the Palestinians and then negotiations for an overall settlement.

"The prime minister has made some suggestions," Baker said. "We are going to continue our discussion with the objective of moving the peace process forward, if it's possible to do so. They were very encouraging. Hopefully they will form the basis under which we can move the peace process forward."

Shamir follows Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak to Washington. Mubarak said toward the end of his visit Tuesday that he saw no way to stop the violence in the territories.

"If anybody could stop it, we would be very pleased," Mubarak said, asking, "But how?"

Baker and other U.S. officials have called the situation untenable and evidently are not focusing their search for a solution on the Camp David agreements.

you win," Bamman said. "But at that level the competition was so stiff that I couldn't complain."

After Bamman could no longer compete at the teen-age level, he began again at the regional level to qualify for national competition. In August, he took second place at the 1988 Midwestern U.S.A. contest.

He will represent K-State at the Collegiate U.S.A. Championship in May.

As part of his training, Bamman works out twice a day at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, once in the morning and once in the evening. He eats six small meals a day, consisting mainly of fish, turkey and chicken. He takes multi-vitamins and calcium tablets, but no other vitamins.

"I used to spend a lot of money on protein powders and amino acids, but I've learned that doesn't really do that much for you," he said. "You're better off just spending your money on the right kind of food and eating it. You'll get the same nutrients, and it's a lot less expensive."

Bamman said training for the national competition, as well as promoting the conference championship, has limited his free time, but it is a pace he enjoys.

"Spare time is definitely something I lack, but it keeps me sane," he said. "During the off-season, if I take a day off from training, I feel lazy and unmotivated. I sit around watching TV and end up not getting any more done than if I'd gone to the gym. Working out and paying close attention to my meals helps me keep a good daily routine."

At body building contests, competitors are judged in groups in preliminary rounds. During the finals, they pose individually to music of their choice. Bamman said that while most competitors chose hard rock music as background music, he uses classical music for a change of pace.

"The individual posing routine is the artistic part of body building," he said. "I like to choose music that flows nicely. For example, I've posed to the theme from the movie 'The Natural.'"

Bamman said the size of his muscles is not as important as their proportion and symmetry.

"You see a lot of guys who really get into the numbers," he said. "They worry about what the tape measure says, and how much weight they lift and how many calories they eat. I just go by the mirror. If I see that I need to build up a certain area, I go into the gym and try to sculpt it."

To be a competitive body builder, Bamman has kept his body shaved and tanned, which drew curiosity from fellow students during high school, he said.

"In high school, body building was the furthest thing from anybody's mind," he said. "They were like, 'Body building, what's that?' and 'Why are you shaved; what are you doing?' It didn't bother me because all it took was one explanation and people liked it."

He said his fellow students saw for themselves what his sport entailed. He and a friend had just competed at a regional show, when the talent show organizer at their high school asked them to perform, Bamman said.

"It went over really well. That was kind of the last thing I did in high school, so I left high school with that behind me," he said. "Now, I'll be leaving college with having put together the conference championship behind me. I'm definitely satisfied."

Next semester Bamman plans to attend the University of Alabama for graduate school.

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf

Competing in body building competitions since he was 17, Bamman took second place at the 1988 Midwestern U.S.A. contest in August and will represent K-State at the Collegiate U.S.A. Championship in May.

McCain to present Arthur Miller work

By Nancy Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

Arthur Miller's play "A View from the Bridge" will be presented by the Alley Theatre Company of Houston, Texas, at 8 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Founded in 1947, the company is both nationally and internationally known.

"The Alley toured with the 'Miracle Worker' and received great reviews," said Richard Martin, director of McCain. "During this season, they plan to take 'A View From the Bridge' to the Soviet Union."

In May of last year, the Alley sponsored the State Theatre of Vilnius, Lithuania, in the first time a Soviet theater company performed in the United States under Gorbachev's glasnost policy.

"A View from the Bridge," like most of Miller's plays, focuses on a tragic hero. In this case, that hero is Eddie Carbone, a Brooklyn longshoreman who lives with his wife, Beatrice, and his 17-year-old niece, Catherine.

When Beatrice's Sicilian cousins arrive as illegal aliens, Catherine falls in love with one of them. It is then that Eddie realizes that he has an "unnatural" affection for Catherine.

The Alley, Martin said, is doing something most touring companies cannot do successfully: it is touring straight plays.

"It is coming to the point where it is hard to make money touring quality theater that is not musical," Martin said. "I know the people touring with the company are consciously trying to find a high quality of touring theater."

In addition to "A View from the Bridge," in previous seasons the Alley has performed other Miller plays such as "Death of a Salesman," "The Crucible," "An Enemy of the People" and "All My Sons."

Tickets, available at the McCain Box Office, are $5, $8 and $10 for students and $10, $14 and $16 for the general public.

Non-traditional students aided

OWLS assists readjustment to college life

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

For some students attending college, their worries may not be adjusting to living away from home or gaining the freshman 15 pounds, but who is going to babysit their children while they are in class.

"Non-traditional students are coming back in increasing numbers," said Suzanne Knorr, director of FENIX, a program designed to help adult students beginning college or returning to the classroom after a length of time.

More than 3,400 students 25 years and older are attending classes and "at least 1,000 of those are married," she said.

Non-traditional students include individuals who are married and/or have children, who have not attended a university for five years or longer, who are graduate students, or just anyone who believes they should be included, Knorr said.

To assist the non-traditional students in adjusting to the college life, the campus organization Older Wiser Learning Students has been established, she said.

Crystal Sapp, treasurer of OWLS and junior in accounting, said the organization, formerly named the Association of Adults Returning to School, was established in 1972 and the name was changed in January to OWLS.

"Because of the abbreviation, AARTS, many people mistook us for an art organization," Sapp said.

Non-traditional students are at a disadvantage because many of the activities on campus are geared to traditional students, such as Parents Weekend and Homecoming, she said.

In addition to providing references of local services, OWLS sponsors events such as bowling parties, dances, and picnics which can include spouses or families, Sapp said.

The group has doubled its membership since January, with a total of 45 paid members. Membership fee is $3 per semester.

Knorr said some of the non-traditional students are scared they won't fit into the University setting.

"One of the problems with some of the non-traditional students is that they fail to realize that humans are always growing," Knorr said. "Once they get situated, they can many times do even better in college" than when they were traditional students.

"Some of the non-traditional students return to school with their kids," Knorr said. "They have found it better not to room together, but they have a lot of fun attending the same school at the same time."

Karen Tinkler, senior in radio-television, has yet to see her 20-year-old son, Kory, on campus but teases him and said, for his sake, she won't acknowledge him if she does see him. Tinkler returned to college after 27 years.

"I thought everyone would stare at me and wonder why I was on campus, but it was all in my head," Tinkler said. As a traditonal student, "I used to put off studying, but now I'm there to learn," she said.

Tinkler said her age, mid-40's, is to her advantage when it comes to completing class assignments.

"When I go to write a paper, commercial, speech or whatever, I can pull assets of my life and things that I have done, whereas traditional students don't have that (background)," she said.

Sapp is married and has two children. She said some non-traditional students are more determined than traditional students.

"I see some (traditional) students who will do just about anything to get out of going to class," Sapp said. "I'll do almost anything just to go to class.

"It's a real struggle to balance priorities. For instance, a parent must decide just how sick his or her child must be before he or she will stay home from class."

Lenin's body not rotting

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — After 65 years of lying in state, the body of Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin is in no immediate danger of rotting away, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda reported Wednesday.

"The preservation of Lenin's body is guaranteed for an extended period of time," said Sergei S. Debov, head of the laboratory overseeing the body.

The body lies beneath glass in a special marble-and-granite mausoleum on Red Square. Five days a week, visitors are hustled past the body in a dimly lighted room where no photographs are allowed.

KSU Foundation receives donations for journalism

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

Since March 1, the KSU Foundation has received a total of $1.4 million in donations which will benefit the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity and the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications.

The Foundation received two gifts totaling $750,000 to fund the Ross Beach Chair for Mass Communications and the Marianna K. and Ross Beach Endowment for Journalism and Mass Communications.

The Beach Chair for Mass Communications provides $500,000 to endow a faculty position to serve as a leader in the development of teaching and research activities in the area of electronic media, Dowell said.

Supported by their gift of $250,000, the Marianna K. and Ross Beach Endowment for Journalism and Mass Communications will provide discretionary funds from its annual earnings to support the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"It means the world to us to receive gifts of this kind," said Carol Oukrop, director of the School.

"It's difficult to keep up with this good program when you don't have the funding to do what you know you should be doing," Oukrop said. "The endowment is another wonderful way to allow us to continue to grow."

A 1940 graduate of K-State and a professional engineer, Ross Beach's business career in Hays includes interests in oil, gas, radio and television, Dowell said. Beach is president of Kansas Natural Gas Equities Inc. and chairman of the Douglas County Bank of Lawrence.

Marianna K. Beach graduated with high honors in 1941 with a degree in industrial journalism and was named "Kansan of the Year" by the Native Sons and Daughters on Jan. 27, Dowell said. She also received K-State's top alumni honor, the Alumni Medallion Award, in 1983 for humanitarian work throughout the world.

A 1921 graduate donated more than $557,000 to the Foundation to establish two scholarship funds, Dowell said.

The Elmer D. McCollum Scholarship and the Elmer D. McCollum Alpha Tau Omega Scholarship will be permanently endowed with more than $278,000 each. McCollum, a native of Garden City, died in November. The gift was made through a Charitable Remainder Unitrust.

McCollum earned a bachelor's degree in agriculture at K-State and was a member of ATO. He farmed, served as a county Extension agent, and was an appraiser for Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, Dowell said.

The Department of Animal Sciences and Industry also received a grant totaling $100,000 from IBP Inc., the nation's leading processor of beef and pork, Dowell said. The five-year commitment, arranged in cooperation with the Livestock and Meat Industry Council, was announced March 3, during K-State's Cattlemen's Day.

Each $20,000 annual gift will include $15,000 to fund equipment acquisition for Weber Hall.

Tanker freed from sound's reef; captain surrenders to police

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — The tanker Exxon Valdez was freed Wednesday from the reef that ripped its hull and spilled more than 10 million gallons of crude oil, and Alaska's governor said the Coast Guard would take over the cleanup from Exxon.

Elsewhere, the captain of the Exxon Valdez surrendered to police and was ordered held on $1 million bond.

Cleanup crews continued to skim mayonnaise-thick oil from Prince William Sound, but progress was slow and the oil had spread over an area larger than Delaware. The animal death toll rose and salmon hatcheries remained endangered.

In Juneau, Alaska, Gov. Steve Cowper said he asked the Coast Guard to take over the much-maligned and slowly progressing cleanup effort from Exxon, and that the federal agency had agreed.

Cowper said the Coast Guard should be better able to handle coordination and management of the cleanup than Exxon, which he said was too bureaucratic.

"Maybe that's been the problem all along. You need a military system to get things done," the governor said.

"We appreciate the efforts of Exxon — we think they were done in good faith. But we think there has to be a much more disciplined management structure," Cowper said at a Capitol news conference.

President Bush earlier had sent a team of high-level officials to Valdez and determined that federal management of the cleanup wasn't necessary.

Although Cowper said he didn't want to be "extremely critical" of Exxon, a letter sent to the Coast Guard by a state environmental official said Exxon had been unresponsive.

"Exxon has failed to provide ... the information necessary to make sound planning recommendations regarding the cleanup of oil and the protection of resources," wrote Lynn Kent, chief of the state Oil and Hazardous Substance Spill Response Section.

Exxon spokesman Henry Beathard said the company disagreed with charges it wasn't handling the cleanup properly and thought Exxon was the best organization to manage the effort.

"We gathered all the resources and organized the cleanup. We think the most effective and efficient way to carry out this project is (for Exxon) to continue," Beathard said.

Fired tanker captain Joseph Hazelwood, 42, surrendered to police on New York's Long Island.

"These misdemeanors are of such a magnitude that has never been equaled, at least in this country," Judge Kenneth Rohl said as Hazelwood was arraigned. "He's got to think about that. We have a manmade destruction that has not been equaled, probably, since Hiroshima."

Salvage crews pumped compressed air into the $125 million ship and floated it off Bligh Reef, 25 miles from the port of Valdez. From there, it began a 30-mile journey under the control of six tugs to a remote cove off Naked Island for temporary repairs, picking its way through scattered icebergs.

Exxon Shipping Co. President Frank Iarossi said the company has talked with dry docks in South Korea, Japan and Singapore about accepting the vessel after the temporary repairs are made.

First choice is a Portland, Ore., dry dock, Iarossi said, but Oregon officials have raised concerns about accepting the ship. Iarossi said the ship won't trail any pollution while it is towed.

Oil has floated over 2,600 square miles, soiled 800 miles of beach and killed thousands of animals.

Children with autism detectable by poor speech development

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

Unresponsive to their environment, children with autism are often suspected of being deaf. However, they're really just alone in their own little world, said Mark Barnett, professor of psychology.

"(Children with autism) have very serious behavioral, emotional and cognitive deficits — they don't interact normally," he said. "These children can be self-injurious and their behavior is usually characterized by a number of bizarre mannerisms, such as playing with their fingers."

Generally, the parents of a child with autism initially become concerned when their child doesn't display signs of speech development at a time when other children do, Barnett said.

Jan Bedrosian, associate professor of speech, said children with autism often have few, if any, communication skills.

Some of the children display echolalic behavior — involuntarily repeating phrases spoken by others, she said.

"They may repeat what they've heard immediately or it may be at a much later time," Bedrosian said.

Because children with autism have difficulty communicating and interacting with others, it is often difficult for doctors to assess their language skills level, she said.

"There was a question of whether or not (children with autism) could comprehend what was being said to them, and doctors have found that some do," Bedrosian said.

Some children with autism can comprehend words that are spoken so doctors have tried traditional speech training, which is often unsuccessful, and sign langauge as a means of making them initiate speech, she said.

Doctors have learned that children who display echolalic behavior may do so as a means of participating in conversation, Bedrosian said.

"There was a question of whether or not (children with autism) could comprehend what was being said to them, and doctors have found that some do."

— Jan Bedrosian associate professor of speech

"Success (in speech training) depends on the child," she said. "There is a wide variation of characteristics associated with autism which makes it extremely important that each child be assessed individually.

"Special education has placed a big emphasis on individualism," Bedrosian said. "We focus on the individual, not the handicap. We warn people against the use of labels. For example, we use the phrase 'children with autism' or 'children who are autistic' rather than 'autistic children.'"

Adults with autism display the same characteristic variations as children; however, special educators use chronological, or age-appropriate training to help adults with autism become functional in society, she said.

Adults with autism may be able to read, or at least recognize different words or letters, but they can't interpret the meaning of words or sentences, Bedrosian said.

Gloria Olson, director of the Topeka-Lawrence chapter of the Autism Society of America, said the movie "Rain Man" was responsible for the recent increase in public concern about autism. However, Raymond, who was the character portrayed by actor Dustin Hoffman, had a type of autism that perhaps as few as 15 people in the United States have.

Olson, whose 18-year-old son is autistic, said when her son was a child, no one knew much about autism. Now organizations like the ASA are designed to promote public awareness and help the parents and families with information, referrals and parent support groups, she said.

Doctors have developed theories as to possible causes of autism, but no one is certain of its cause, Barnett said.

Some doctors suggest autistic behavior is learned, while others think autism is related to a genetic neurological disorder, he said.

Capitol

Rick Underwood, general manager of Spicer, said he didn't think his company would see more business as a result of Capitol's suspension.

"Maybe we'll see a small increase," Underwood said. But he didn't think it would be significant because "their basic operation and our operation" serve different passengers' needs.

Although it varies depending on the time of the year, he said the four airplanes chartered by Spicer make a total of about eight to 12 trips to KCI each week.

Plains Express, Inc., a Topeka-based company, will begin a van shuttle service Monday that will run from Manhattan to KCI four times daily with a stopover in Lawrence.

Deborah Schmidt, vice president of Plains Express, said the company had planned on extending its service farther west and the suspension of Capitol's services had nothing to do with the extension.

"We have wanted to (move west) for some time. We needed to get established in Topeka first," she said.

The shuttle will depart from the Manhattan Holiday Inn and Holidome and the University Inn twice in the morning and again in the afternoon. It will depart KCI at 9 a.m., noon, 4 p.m. and 8 p.m. A round-trip adult fare is $48, and students and senior citizens receive a $2 discount.

Nancy Howse, office manager at International Tours of Manhattan, said because Capitol had been gradually cutting back its number of flights, she didn't expect the suspension of service to have much effect on her business.

"We haven't had the Capitol boardings since they started whittling down their schedule," Howse said. "They cut it down twice before — after the first time, they (began to) lose their reliability."

Howse said it was "too early" to speculate on what kind of future impact, if any, the suspension will have on International Tours.

At No. 2 doubles, Nel paired up with Valerie Rive to soundly defeat the Kansas duo 6-3, 6-1. Nel said they were confident going into the match, and felt some extra motivation to take a win from Berglund, who had just beaten Schildknecht. The win brought Nel and Rive's record at No. 2 to 14-3.

Sara Hancock gave K-State their only singles win at No. 3, defeating KU's Stacy Stotts, 6-1, 4-6, 7-5.

Bietau gave Kansas credit for the win, and said the loss was due more to KU playing well than the 'Cats playing poorly.

The loss brings the Wildcats' record to 11-4, and 1-1 in the Big Eight.

ing the next 11 batters and pitching 4⅓ innings of no-hit ball. McElroy broke up the no-hitter with a single up the middle in the fifth, scoring Andrew Schmidt to give Marymount a 3-2 lead.

The 'Cats eliminated the upset bid in the bottom half of the fifth, using an error by Spartan centerfielder Patrick Edison to fuel the rally. Edison's miscue on a routine fly ball by Rosenboom allowed Troll and Ringgenberg to score the go-ahead runs. K-State added an insurance run later in the inning on a single by Kevin Kaufman.

Schafer threw a complete game, allowing three runs on three hits to up his record to 2-0 with three saves. The righthander struck out 10 and walked six. Dave Carter went the distance for Marymount, yielding eight hits while striking out five.

The sweep sets up a four-game series with the Jayhawks, with action beginning at 7 p.m. Friday at Frank Myers Field. The Wildcats, 18-6 overall and 1-3 in conference play, will continue the series on Saturday with a 5 p.m. doubleheader. A single game is slated for 12:30 p.m. Sunday. Kansas is ahead of the Wildcats in the Big Eight race with a 2-2 mark, having split with Nebraska last weekend.

into other areas, the site has been used less often.

Cogley said that because the site is 14 miles from campus and maintenance costs are larger than the value of the site to the department, a decision was made to sell it.

"We've had quite a few salvage companies look at it since there is a large amount of stainless steel," Cogley said. "There is also 22 acres of developable land that goes with the site."

"I'd like to get at least $50,000 out of it, but where it goes from there is anybody's guess," he said.

Ball said the money received from the auction will go into a fund to buy equipment for the department.

use requirement study to Forces Command in Georgia, which is the headquarters in charge of forts with combat troops. The study doesn't project a preference of one land area over another, but details how much extra training land is needed.

The study is then transferred to the Army Corps of Engineers, and later the Department of Defense, Meseke said. The request may go as high as the U.S. Congress.

Preserve the Flint Hills was formed to combat the government's possible efforts to acquire land owned by its members, but that effort may be futile. If they don't accept the government's offer for the land, the government can condemn it and gain ownership.

Bohn said up to 500 people are expected to attend tonight's meeting.

"This is to let everyone know about the expansion and to join us together," she said. "It will unite us and let them know there is a large number of people opposed to it."

Ueberroth's Eastern purchase falls through at last minute

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — For the second time in a week, former baseball commissioner Peter V. Ueberroth thought he had a deal to purchase Eastern Airlines only to see the agreement with Texas Air Corp. Chairman Frank Lorenzo fall through at the last minute.

A source familiar with the negotiations said the two sides reached an accord Tuesday night and were set to make the announcement Wednesday. The source said the deal began to unravel on Wednesday morning, as Ueberroth believed Lorenzo was again changing the terms of the agreement.

"Both sides thought they had a deal but there were some sticking points that kept negotiations continuing instead of concluding," the source said.

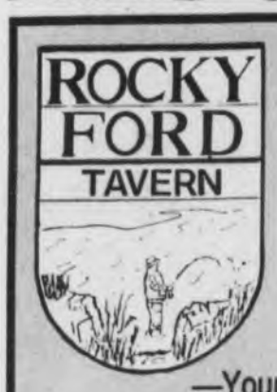
Ueberroth, who returned to New York late Tuesday night from his California home, began negotiations with Lorenzo at 7:30 a.m. EST Wednesday and continued them until around 8 p.m. The source told The Associated Press that negotiations would resume this morning.

"They don't have a deal," the source said. "There's still negotiations and sticking points. It's not done."

The deal had appeared to be completed Wednesday afternoon, when a New York public relations firm that works with Lorenzo was told to rent a hotel room for a 7 p.m. news conference to announce it. At 6:35 p.m., the public relations firm was told there would be no announcement.

Separately, the U.S. bankruptcy court appointed Washington attorney David Shapiro as examiner in the Eastern bankruptcy reorganization case.

Shapiro, 60, a partner in the firm Dickstein Shapiro & Morin, was recommended by U.S. Trustee Harry Jones and appointed by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Burton Lifland.



Lifland recently ordered the appointment of an examiner.

Union and airline sources had indicated late Tuesday night and throughout Wednesday that a sale to the Ueberroth group was virtually certain. Eastern booked a meeting room for 7 p.m. Wednesday at a Manhattan hotel in anticipation of a possible deal, but later told arriving reporters there was no announcement.

"Germ" is another name for many different kinds of viruses and bacteria. They can be passed through the air by breathing or picked up through casual contact. To avoid the spread of germs always cover your mouth when coughing or sneezing, throw away used tissues and wash hands before and after eating. Stay home if you're not feeling well and avoid contact with those who are sick. Germs can make you ill for a week to ten days. Seek medical attention if your illness lasts for a longer period.

Missile site sold to Wichita company

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

What's the going rate for the average local missile site? $168,000 is the price a Wichita man paid for one.

A vintage Atlas missile site owned by the Department of Mechanical Engineering was sold to Richard Dawson, of Dawson Sales in Wichita, at a Thursday morning auction conducted at the site.

Dawson said his company plans to salvage the on-site materials during the next four to five months and sell the land and facilities.

"I was really interested in the underground tanks and the stainless steel," he said. "Our company specializes in salvaging Titan II missile sites. We have bought, dismantled, disposed of salvagable materials from 36 other missile sites around Wichita and Little Rock, Ark."

The site was sold in a "what you see is what you get" condition, said Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering and auctioneer for the sale.

"The only guarantee to the site is that there are no back taxes on it," Cogley said. "The state doesn't pay taxes to itself."

Prior to the sale, onlookers and 28 prospective bidders were allowed to tour the site and inspect the contents of the silo and outlying building. Faculty and staff members from the Department of Mechanical Engineering were available to answer questions about the site and its use.

The only questions asked by some of the 100 people attending the auction were about hazardous material located on the missile site.

"The site contains three 16,000-gallon tanks, two of which are connected, that may have an unknown amount of oil and jet fuel in them," Cogley said. "Asbestos may also be found on the site, since it was commonly used in construction when the site was build in the 1960s.

"But the site is to be sold as is."

Six to eight different individuals took part in the bidding, which began at $10,000. Dawson and Frank Manz, Manhattan resident, were the last two bidders on the site.

"I was surprised at the price," said Manz, who owns a plumbing and supply company. "It went for $50,000 more than I expected."

Actions defended by North

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oliver North firmly defended his Iran-Contra role Thursday from the witness stand at his criminal trial, declaring he was merely a Marine following White House orders. "I was not stepping in, I was brought in," he said.

North was stopped before he could respond to his lawyer's suggestion that then-President Reagan had designated him for the role. Asked directly who told him to secretly help the Nicaraguan rebels, North named former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, McFarlane's then-deputy, John Poindexter, and the late CIA Director William Casey.

North's testimony came shortly after his lawyers read the jury a lengthy statement — agreed to by prosecutors — that said George Bush had played a role as intermediary in Reagan's secret effort to aid the Nicaraguan rebels after Congress banned official U.S. help.

As rapid-fire developments replaced the sometimes-languid pace of the trial, now in in its seventh week, the jury heard that Bush personally told the president of Honduras in 1985 that extra aid was being funneled to his country. In earlier testimony, McFarlane had said that the aid was part of a secret agreement calling for Honduras to help the Contras.

At the White House, press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said, "We can't say anything. It would become a part of the case."

Senate approves divestment

By Kendra Gensemer
Government Editor
and Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

In an emotional, racially tense atmosphere Thursday night, Student Senate voted 27-19-4 in favor of the divestment of student monies invested in companies doing business in South Africa.

Applause followed the decision based on a report by the Ad Hoc Committee on Investment of Student Funds, which found $10,000 of K-State student monies invested in 60 companies which conduct business in South Africa.

The vote came after three hours of intense debate on the question of ethical investments vs. "financial prudence."

"Ten thousand dollars is not a lot of money, but we're making a statement about how we feel about what is going on," said Ajit Maan, graduate senator.

Some senators believed the issue was not an ethical one and divestment would not be financially wise.

"The issue is investment ... the University must be operated as a business," said Barry Beck, business senator. "If the returns on investment were not high, money would not be invested in (American companies in) South Africa."

But some others disagreed.

"It is a moral issue. You are talking about racism — it is alive in America," said Ira Bolden, chief of staff to the student body president.

"This is a moral issue. It has been stated. Do something about it," he said.

After the meeting, Student Body President Laurian Cuffy said he believed Senate had reached "a very higher level of decision making."

"They have been able to look at a moral issue for what it's worth," he said. "Student Senate has sent a message throughout our University that a body has a right to make decisions on a moral issue."

Cuffy said the vote will affect "the University in that it will raise (the) consciousness of both majority and minority students."

In other business, Senate voted to allocate a maximum of $20,000 to the K-State marching band to purchase 225 new uniforms Thursday.

The total cost of the new uniforms is $55,800. The bill that Senate approved would make up the difference between the cost of the uniforms and the amount of money the band raises.

The band has not had new uniforms in 20 years and the predicted life of the present uniforms was 10 years at the time of purchase.

"The University marching band represents the University to alumni, students and visitors to K-State," Jim Gewecke, senior im marketing, and a representative from the band said. "The band was seen by 29,000 people last year, and we expect the same next year."

"The band represents K-State. The old uniforms are old and out of style," Engineering Senator David McIntyre said. "It is the reponsibility of students to be supportive of the band."

The athletic department funds the band's operating budget.

"The athletic department's contribution to our budget is currently outstanding," Gewecke said. "To go to them, we feel it would be like asking Santa Claus for seconds."

Band representatives said the band would need the uniforms by Sept. 9

Ex-lover testifies at murder hearing

By The Associated Press

JUNCTION CITY — Lorna Anderson Eldridge, testifying at a hearing in the 1983 murder of her husband, said Thursday former Emporia minister Thomas Bird was the man who shot him.

Eldridge, whose love affair with Bird and the deaths of both their spouses formed the basis for a CBS-TV mini-series aired in 1987, was one of eight people who testified at the preliminary hearing in Geary County District Court.

The 38-year-old Bird, already serving life in prison for the murder of his wife earlier in 1983, was bound over for trial on the first-degree murder charge in the death of Martin K. Anderson.

He pleaded innocent to the charge, and Judge Melvin Gradert scheduled the trial for July 5.

Eldridge, 36, pleaded guilty in November to a reduced charge of second-degree murder in Anderson's death. Her assertion then that Bird was the masked gunman who shot Anderson in a field along a highway in southern Geary County led to the new murder charge against him.

When Steve Opat, former Geary County attorney and special prosecutor for the case, asked her Thursday who shot her husband, she replied, "Tom Bird."

Eldridge, who was Bird's secretary at Faith Lutheran Church in Emporia, testified that she gave him the gun which she said he used to kill Anderson.

Eldridge, who remarried in 1985 shortly before being sent to prison on her guilty pleas to criminal solicitation charges in an earlier unsuccessful plot against Anderson, is serving an additional 15 years to life for second-degree murder.

According to her account of the killing, she was driving along Kansas 177 in a van with her husband and their four daughters on Nov. 4, 1983 and she pulled over, claiming to be sick. She then pretended to lose her keys and when her husband got out to help her look for them, he was shot by the masked man she identified as Bird, she said.

Eldridge said she did not know how many shots were fired.

"There were shots fired," she said. "I don't know which ones hit him, which ones didn't"

Dr. William Eckert, a Wichita pathologist who performed the autopsy, testified that he found three bullets in Anderson's head, and that the body also had three broken ribs.

After the shooting, she said, she waited in the van for about 15 minutes to give Bird time to get away before she flagged down a car.

Eldridge said a .22-caliber Colt Woodsman pistol shown to her in court was like one that her husband owned. She said she had given her husband's gun to Bird for use in the shooting.

Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish testified that eventually Eldridge told authorities a gun had been thrown into into a pond not far from the shooting scene. Gary Burgess of the sheriff's department said he found the gun in the pond, using a metal detector, on Nov. 1, 1985.

Ueberroth-led group to buy Eastern

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A group led by former baseball commissioner Peter V. Ueberroth agreed Thursday to buy strike-crippled Eastern Airlines, and a union spokesman said he was cautiously optimistic the deal could end the month-old walkout.

The $464 million agreement would give employees a 30 percent share in the company in exchange for wage concessions.

The sale by Eastern's parent, Texas Air Corp., is subject to approval by U.S. Bankruptcy Court and Eastern's creditors. Eastern also must reach new work agreements with its striking unions by midnight Tuesday, under terms of the sale.

"Under this agreement, Eastern can be back flying in very short order," said Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo, who has been the target of bitter personal attacks from union members.

About 500 striking Machinists jammed a union hall in Miami, where Eastern is based, cheering and chanting, "Take me out to the ball game!" and "Hey, hey! Ho, ho! Lorenzo's got to go!" after hearing of the sale.

Eastern has been virtually paralyzed since March 4 by the Machinists' strike, which has drawn the support of pilots and flight attendants. Eastern filed March 9 for protection from creditors in bankruptcy court as its cash dried up.

"It's a mammoth challenge," said Ueberroth. "I'm convinced that there is a spirit amongst the people in the company that I can help bring together to help this airline."

The sale includes Eastern's highly profitable Northeast shuttle, but Ueberroth will follow through on an earlier agreement to sell the service to developer Donald Trump for $365 million.

Ueberroth, who stepped down as baseball commissioner Saturday, was vice president of Trans International Airlines for two years and founded a travel agency in Southern California in 1963. First Travel Corp. eventually grew into the second-largest agency in North America.

He was organizer of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, which turned a profit of $230 million and put him on the cover of Time magazine as Man of the Year. As baseball commissioner, he turned the game from a $67 million-a-year money-loser to one that made $100 million last year.

Frank Ortis, vice president of Machinists Local 702 and Miami strike coordinator, said it was impossible to tell whether unions would fare better "until we get into dealings with Commissioner Ueberroth."

"However, we're willing to give it a shot," he said.

The Air Line Pilots Association issued a statement saying that the union was encouraged but that strike issues had yet to be resolved.

Lorenzo will remain in charge of Eastern until the deal is approved, but Ueberroth will help formulate the reorganization plan.

Texas Air would get $200 million cash, Eastern notes worth about $185 million, plus Eastern assets valued at about $79 million, including Eastern's New York-Montreal routes plus eight landing slots and one gate at New York's LaGuardia Airport.

Solidarity to be legalized

WARSAW, Poland — A government minister said Thursday the seven-year ban on Solidarity would be lifted immediately, and Lech Walesa urged supporters to put their "political victory" into action by organizing nationwide.

"The process of legalization of Solidarity should be completed between April 15 and April 20," said Sports Minister Aleksander Kwasniewski, a chief negotiator for the communist government in two months of talks with the opposition that concluded Wednesday in a broad accord.

Kwasniewski said the Sejm, or parliament, would meet Friday to enact the agreements on trade union freedoms, economic reforms and political changes, including creation of the first freely elected legislative body in the East bloc.

Walesa, looking relaxed at a news conference after a grueling week of negotiations, outlined the tasks his independent trade union faces. But he warned that the agreement could lead to disaster if Poland failed to take advantage of the changes.

Islamic holy month begins

MANAMA, Bahrain — Moslems in several countries began a dawn to dusk fast Thursday, a daily religious ritual that will last for the entire Islamic month of Ramadan.

The fasting in Islam's holiest month is one of the major sacraments of the faith for the world's 1 billion Moslems. The month marks the time when the Angel Gabriel inspired the Prophet Mohammed to write the Koran, or Moslem holy book, according to Islam.

Saudi Arabian King Fahd, custodian of Islam's holiest shrines at Mecca and Medina, and Crown Prince Abdullah appealed for peace in Lebanon in their annual Ramadan message.

Travelers, soldiers at war and pregnant women are exempt from the fast, which traditionally starts when the crescent moon marking a new month in the Islamic lunar calendar is sighted by the naked eye.

Saudi Arabia announced late Wednesday that sightings had been reported to a special religious council, and therefore the holy month would start Thursday.

Marcos too ill for trial

NEW YORK — Federal prosecutors agreed Thursday to temporarily sever former Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos from a racketeering case because he is too ill to stand trial for the forseeable future.

In a letter to the judge presiding over the case against the deposed ruler, his wife and several co-defendants, prosecutors acknowledged that Marcos' health has deteriorated since a medical examination by a government doctor last fall.

"Based upon Mr. Marcos' repeated bouts of pneumonia and his susceptibility to other infection since January 1989, the government is no longer able to represent to the court that Mr. Marcos is now able to stand trial," Assistant U.S. Attorney Debra Livingston wrote U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan.

Marcos, 71, is in guarded condition in Hawaii at St. Francis Medical Center, where he has been confined since Jan. 15 for treatment of heart and respiratory problems.

Boy finds meteorite

WHEAT RIDGE, Colo. — Nine-year-old Bobby Rupp was playing with some friends on the school playground when he caught a falling star.

The find substantiates numerous reports Monday of a rare daytime meteorite spotted from Denver to Salida in south-central Colorado to Garden City and Salina in Kansas.

About 12:15 p.m. Monday Bobby and some buddies at the Prospect Valley Elementary School in Wheat Ridge caught a glimpse of a meteor above them.

"It was red, blue, yellow, orange.... And it was on fire," Bobby said.

"I was by the fence and looked up ... and I saw a black piece coming down toward the school."

Bobby raced about 50 feet to the southwest corner of the playground where he thought he saw the object fall. There he found a small, fiery hot, lavalike rock.

Phone traps hamster

LAWRENCE — Going in, telephone repairman Charlie Transue knew only that he had an "unusual case of trouble."

He found out how unusual when he got to a local convenience store to encounter a "very distraught lady" and her young granddaughter — concerned about a baby hamster they said was trapped inside a pay telephone.

The granddaughter, about 8, had just acquired the tiny hamster, only a few days old, and she had placed it in the phone's coin-return "bucket."

When she closed the device, the little hamster fell or crawled into a small space just behind it.

Transue, who works for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., took the phone apart and found the tiny creature, seemingly unhurt, in the space behind the bucket.

Not surprisingly, the repairman said he'd never peformed such a rescue before.

"This takes the cake," agreed Cecilia Anguiano, the Topeka repair clerk who took the grandmother's call and dispatched Transue to the scene.

Sister to plead not guilty

KANSAS CITY — The lawyer for a young woman charged with killing her sister says she will not plead guilty, but the lawyer for a codefendant said he is negotiating a plea bargain.

Albert Grauberger, appointed to defend Shari Bierman, 20, answered "no" when Wyandotte County District Judge Dean Smith asked at a pretrial conference Wednesday about possible guilty pleas to the Feb. 19 slaying of 17-year-old Syndi Bierman at the family's home in Piper. Shari Bierman was adopted as an infant by the victim's parents.

Howard Washburn, who represents codefendant Archie Owens, 20, said: "Mr. (Nick) Tomasic and I have been negotiating, so there is a maybe on that."

Tomasic, the Wyandotte County district attorney, and Washburn argued later Wednesday about whether the county should pay for further psychological tests of Owens. The judge said he would study cases cited by Tomasic and Washburn before ruling.

Washburn said tests to determine whether his client has amnesia might cost no more than $300 compared to thousands of dollars being spent by the prosecution.

Chariot relays begin today

The 26th annual Lambda Chi Alpha chariot relays will get underway at 4 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium.

Fifteen fraternities and eight sororities will compete for the title. The chariot relays is the oldest greek philanthropy at K-State. The Lambda Chi's hope to raise $1,000 for the Manhattan area Special Olympics.

The relays consist of six-member teams that pull chariots fashioned from bicycle parts around the track in men's and women's divisions. In the men's division, two men pull a woman on the chariot around the track, then pass the chariot to two other team members. In the women's division, women pull a chariot with a male rider around the track.

Navajo poet to present work

Luci Tapahonso, assistant professor of English at the University of New Mexico, and author of "Seasonal Woman," and "A Breeze Swept Through," will read her works today at 2:30 p.m. in the Minority Resource Center Reading Room in Farrell Library. The reading will be followed by a reception hosted by Ruth Ann Wefald.

Her poetry is sprinkled with humor and amusing incidents about white men misinterpreting indian rituals, said Antonia Pigno, chair of specialized collections.

Proposed Fort Riley expansion debated

Staff Writer

About 750 farmers, ranchers and landowners packed the Junction City 4-H and Senior Citizens' Building Thursday night to discuss what would happen if Fort Riley acquired their land for training maneuvers.

The first public meeting of Preserve the Flint Hills was attended by many who would be directly affected if the Army chose to purcahse 100,000 acres for expansion.

Keith Ascher, chairman of the organization, said although the group isn't sure what the exact boundaries are for the expansion, comments from military officials in the newspapers have alerted them to the possibility of their land being considered.

An advertisement purchased by the Preserve the Flint Hills group in the Sunday Junction City Daily Union outlined the area in possible jeopardy: south of Interstate 70 to the town of Dwight, and west of Kansas Highway 177 to U.S. Highway 77. Although no towns are within the boundaries, 320 families and eight cemeteries are, said Gary Johnson, a member of the executive committee.

"This is not a vast wasteland; there are people that live here and make a living," Johnson said.

Ascher said the group is not anti-military. "Some people think we're trying to shut Fort Riley down, but we realize it is vital to the area and community," he said. "We are not selfish; all we want to do is keep the land that has been in our families for years, and for most of us, this land has been handed-down from our ancestors.

"They rattled our cages; we didn't rattle theirs," he said. "We've been good neighbors."

Ascher farms on land once owned by his great-grandfather, and said the loss of the 100,000 acres would have far-reaching ramifications.

Johnson explained how the expansion would deal a blow to the economic and agricultural community of the area.

"We may see an awful lot of businesses displaced, and schools that are already without a surplus of students may have to close," he said. "In farming, we help each other by doing business with each other, and the money turns over several times."

Even though the expansion plan isn't definite yet, Johnson said effects are already being felt.

"There were negotiations on a (grain) elevator in Dwight that has been out of use for two or three years, but when the story came out about the expansion, negotions stopped," he said. "Who wants an elevator that won't do business?"

Ascher said he was troubled by the fort's requests for more training ground, while the National Training Center in the Mojave Desert at Fort Irwin, Calif., exists to be used by soldiers across the nation.

"You and I paid for the NTC with tax money, and although they already have a big 'playground', they want more room here," Ascher said.

Fort Riley officials still plan to send soldiers to the NTC even if the 100,000 acres are acquired, he said. "It doesn't make sense — I don't have an answer."

The last Fort Riley expansion doubled the fort's size to 100,000 acres in 1965, and group member John Kramer said it may double again in 2015.

"The technology has made weapons go farther and faster, and it's reasonable to say that technology isn't going to stop," Kramer said. "The weaponry systems are not going to stay static, and as their capability increases, they'll be looking for more land in the future.

"Where does it end?" he said.

Members of the Preserve the Flint Hills executive committee stressed the importance of the group.

"If anyone questions me about my actions and tells me I can't make a difference, I tell them to look back two months ago when the Congress wanted pay raises," Ascher said. "The voice of the people is heard, and we can make a difference."

Jan Lyons, executive committee member, urged the audience to write letters to legislators in Kansas and Washington, D.C.

"It's not going to happen here tonight — it's going to happen in Washington, and we need to get this thing stopped before it gets steamrolling," Lyons said. "Some say we're jumping the gun, and this won't happen for three or four years, but that's tomorrow for us — we're already looking ahead in terms of livestock and crops."

Lyons said a similar effort by the fort to acquire 30,000 acres of land in 1981 had been stopped by similar reactions.

"This is the stage where we have to be active, because we can make a difference," she said.

Ascher said it was important for the group to work with the city to work out the problem.

Academic freedom battle still being fought

It was 64 years ago this week that some prominent citizens of the small town of Dayton, Tenn. met to discuss the implications of the Butler Act, a recently passed state law which prohibited the teaching of evolution in public schools.

Those town elders could not have known then, but Dayton was to be the scene of one of the century's most significant battles for academic freedom when a high school biology teacher named John T. Scopes was tried for teaching evolution.

At the time it was passed, few people were sure how seriously to take the bill. Of course, its supporters, a loose coalition of Biblical fundamentalists, members of the Ku Klux Klan, professional patriotic societies and other God-fearing, Bible-thumping, paranoid super-patriots, were very serious about it.

John Washington Butler, a second-term representative and the author of the bill explained, "(Evolutionism) goes hand in hand with Modernism, makes Jesus Christ a fakir, robs the Christian of his hope and undermines the foundation of our government."

In fact, the bill was not unique to Tennessee. In other states fundamentalists had successfully lobbied for laws to prohibit the teaching of evolution, require compulsory reading of the Bible and forbid the employment of radical and pacifist teachers.

T.T. Martin, the author of "Hell in the High Schools" and other tracts against evolution, challenged the Mississippi Legislature to pass a similar bill. "Go back to the fathers and mothers of Mississippi and tell them because you could not face the scorn and abuse of Bolsheviks and Anarchists and Athiests and agnostics and their co-workers, you turned over their children to a teaching that God's Word is a tissue of lies."

Surprisingly, few people spoke against the bill. Some thought it would never be enforced or for other reasons kept silent. Because the Legislature was considering a new appropriation for the University of Tennessee, faculty and administrators, including the university president who privately opposed the law, held their tongues. For similar reasons, the Tennessee Department of Education failed to denounce the bill as a severe attack on academic freedom.

Although Vanderbilt University students showed up during debate on the bill to heckle its proponents, the legislators paid little attention to them — or by some accounts, even voted for the bill to spite them.

As is so typical of American politics, the issue was distorted and oversimplified until

Commentary

Scott Miller

voting against the bill was tantamount to voting against the Christian faith. During debate, only two senators spoke against it.

Once passed, the American Civil Liberties Union decided to challenge the law. On April 4, an article in the Daily Times of Chattanooga announced the ACLU was looking for a teacher willing to test the law. The chairman of the ACLU's committee on academic freedom, Professor Clarence R. Skinner, said, "Our lawyers think a friendly test case can be arranged without costing a teacher his or her job."

But the ACLU grossly underestimated the level of ignorance and dogmatism in Tennessee. The trial was by no means "friendly," and Scopes not only lost his job but was fined $100.

He received letters from all over the world — some supportive, but most saying he would surely rot in hell. One California man wrote, "I don't doubt that in your personal case you are descended from some low order of apes, but I am thankful that you are not allowed to teach innocent children that they are no more than you are."

Although the decision was later reversed, the struggle against psuedoscientific dogmatism continued. Today, as in 1925, no evidence exists to suggest the validity of creationism as a scientific theory.

Nevertheless, a recent study by two sociologists found that about one-third of the high school life science and biology teachers surveyed supported psuedoscientific beliefs associated with a literal interpretation of the Bible. Such beliefs include special creationism, a relatively young earth, and the coexistence of humans and dinosaurs.

Of the teachers surveyed, 20 percent said "definitely true" to the statement: "The Bible is an authoritative and reliable source of information with respect to such scientific issues as the age of the earth and the origin of life." Another 7 percent said this was probably true.

Then, 22 percent responded with "definitely true" to the statement: "The Bible's account of creation should be taught in public schools as an explanation of origins."

Perhaps most strikingly, especially when one considers the lack of opposition from the academic community to the Butler Act in 1925, the study found that high school teachers were more likely to teach creationism instead of evolution if pressured from school administrators or school board members.

If Biblical adherants want to teach the Bible in public schools, they are certainly welcome to do so in courses on literature, theology, philosophy or any other academic discipline they can stretch to fit their agenda. But to expound Biblical literalism as scientific theory is nothing short of outrageous.

Academic freedom does not cover positions that are patently false. Proponents of Biblical literalism as a science should be no more protected by academic freedom than would be, say, a history professor who teaches that the Holocaust never happened.

In 1960, Scopes told the Washington Post that battles for academic freedom were still being fought because "people don't change that quickly." Unfortunately, he seems to have been right.

Bush education plan not very effective

George Bush announced Wednesday a plan for education he obviously believes will fulfill his desire to be remembered as the "education president."

Hardly.

As plans go, it is an extremely modest one. Bush proposed $422 million for new programs and a $20 million increase for existing programs. But at the same time, his proposal calls for cutting money from some student aid programs and from grants to schools with children of federal employees.

Putting all of these increases in context, the education budget totals about $20 billion.

The increases would go toward creating grants for merit schools, magnet schools, endowments at historically black universities and (surprise!) for fighting drugs in schools. The plan would also provide funds for awards to outstanding teachers and college scholarships for outstanding students interested in math, science and engineering.

The only thing that makes Bush's education plan outstanding is that it constitutes an increase over the increase the Reagan administration gave to education, which was almost nothing at all.

And very few changes are proposed that will address the worst problems of the system.

Very few funds will be provided to hire the better teachers; very few funds will be earmarked for programs that help "at-risk" students.

The only serious help these programs are likely to get is patronizing admonishments to "Just Say No."

Other Perspectives

The situation at Haskell Indian Junior College is getting out of hand. But the students cannot comment on it in their newspaper.

In fact, they have not been able to comment on anything because the newspaper, the Indian Leader, hasn't published since Oct. 28. Originally it was shut down because the faculty adviser quit, and the students were not allowed to publish without an adviser.

But now they have an acting adviser — and legal counsel. A temporary restraining order has been issued to prevent the publication or distribution of the newspaper. The order will be in effect at least until an April 7 preliminary injunction hearing.

The newspaper was supposed to resume twice-monthly publication Wednesday, but the version that was prepared for print did not include stories that had been assigned by the student managing editor and covered alleged rights violations on the campus.

A student newspaper is not a public relations sheet for a college. It is a forum for students, by students.

Expansion plan concerns many

When I opened the Collegian Wednesday morning, Dwayne Lively's column on Fort Riley's proposed expansion was the last thing I expected to read about. He literally 'hit home' in his column. I haven't yet decided whether it restored my faith in society or destroyed it.

I greatly compliment Lively for his obvious interest and awareness of the problem with Fort Riley's expansion, and the way he approached it. He capably addressed the problem and created an effective scenario that showed how many people look at the situation.

I am a Geary County resident. I am also a fifth-generation family member from homesteaders in Geary County. I'm just like many residents in the area and like many K-State students. I am sure plenty of students are part of fourth- and fifth-generation farm families. Those who are will understand my arguments.

You are probably now asking, "Who cares if they expand?" But look at my perspective for a moment and become educated on a situation that could eventually have an impact on this community and the University.

Fort Riley apparently feels the need to expand training operations. What they have is no longer sufficient to meet their needs.

Officials have said it is not economically feasible to clean up the fields they currently use. They need land that is not more than an hour from the base. It would make more sense, from their point of view, to obtain more land.

Rumors are circulating that the Fort is interested in land on either side of Interstate 70. No one is positive which way they may turn, but either direction will have the same impact.

Anyone who has passed by Marshall Field on I-70 has surely noticed the recent immense growth of facilities. Military helicopters have been flying south of I-70 on training exercises, low enough to scare cattle and blow snow off rooftops.

As Lively's article points out, many may think taking over 100,000 acres is a small price to pay to protect our country. But, if you

Commentary

Janette Poole

Guest Columnist

were a Geary County taxpayer, would you be willing to also donate your home and job to provide room for military's playground exercises?

It seems ironic the Department of Defense has chosen to close many military bases throughout the nation. Granted, some communities will suffer from the loss. The home of the Big Red One did not make the list.

Please don't misunderstand me; I recognize the need for our nation's defense. We need Fort Riley for many reasons. I think, however, they could make better use of their resources.

Consider the effects of an expansion, either to the north or the south.

All landowners in the proposed takeover area would be bought out. The land and buildings would be appraised and the owners would get whatever price the government deemed appropriate.

Further, all residents of the area would be left to find new housing. All cemeteries would most likely be moved. How would you feel about your friends and loved ones being exumed and moved wherever space is available? Morbid doesn't quite cut it.

The Flint Hills provide some of the nation's best grassland for beef cattle production. It is one of two places in the world where the grass is still native. While it may be easy to hop on down to Mickey-D's for a burger, anticipate that its cost will go up.

Not only will beef prices rise, but so will those of all other commodities produced in the area. All the grass and cropland is being taken out of production. That means an increase in the amount of your hard-earned money spent at the grocery store or fast-food joint. How many of you who are 'real beef eaters' are willing to become vegetarians?

Another problem is the increase in job competition. Displaced farmers will either join the ranks of job hunters or join the unemployment line. That may mean at least one more person could be in competition for your job. Are you concerned yet?

If that doesn't make you think, look at it this way. I suppose it's OK to invade and consume someone else's property and livelihood. That is, until they come knocking on your door and ask the same of you.

How would you feel if your family was to be moved from your lifelong home? Would you willingly take them into your home? Could you afford to support them indefinitely?

Sure, the landowners will get paid for their land. But, will it be enough to pay off their loans, find adequate housing and still put food on the table? And who will pay for these people to move?

If I learned my government lessons, your money goes to Uncle Sam, which is part of the budget and defense spending. So, how much money do you want to pay to move my family and the others in Geary County?

As for the 'house that Fred built,' how much of your tuition went to partially fund the Coliseum? Fred would feel funny if part of the expansion enveloped areas that he built. But, I suppose it's all right because it's only money, the government's money that is.

By now, you may feel yourself far removed from this situation. But, a handful of people at K-State will be directly affected. The long-term effects will be felt not only in Geary County, but in Riley County, in Manhattan and here at K-State. Just think about it the next time you eat. Do you really want to support a plan that could affect what you put on the dinner table, while you hear the sound of Fort Riley at your back door?

Editor's note: Janette Poole is a senior in agricultural journalism.

K-State Players perform 'swashbuckling adventure'

By Mark Schreiner
Collegian Reviewer

Review

With a brandishing of swords and a quick kick in the crotch, the Restoration comedy "The Rover" was presented Thursday night to about 120 people in Nichols Theatre.

Although "The Rover" was written by Aphra Behn around 1677 and constantly uses words such as "prithee," "thou" and "fie," the audience laughed out loud throughout the performance. Even the actors on stage couldn't help but grin.

The story involves Florinda, Valeria and Hellena, three Italian sisters played by Stephanie Hug, freshman in theater; Mary Hale, junior in history; and Camille Diamond, freshman in theater.

The three shed their Jane Austin manners in favor of the lusty pursuit of men, feeling, as Valeria says, "If you would have a man, you must win a man, but be a bit wanton before you be won."

The sisters are matched with Belvile, Frederick and Willmore, three swashbuckling, rope-swinging English mercenaries played by Jeff Cowgill, undecided freshman; Timothy Thompson, freshman in architecture; and Dwight Tolar, senior in applied music.

While Belvile has come to Italy to steal away his true love Florinda, the other two come for the carnival wenches. Here Frederick and Willmore fall for Valeria and Hellena, who have disguised themselves as gypsies.

From here it gets complicated. Characters lie with and to each other. The sisters are sometimes disguised; the men sometimes masquerade; friends fight friends; lovers champion their rivals' causes ... identity is, in general, mistaken.

The several well-executed sword fights in "The Rover" are exciting and funny at the same time, as real swords flash very close to real body parts. The actors put professional wrestlers to shame.

The play's costumes were also well-done, with everyone's hair long and curly, and everyone as busty or bulgy as Richard Chamberlain movies have led modern audiences to expect from the 17th century.

A large part of the play's humor comes from the cast members making fun of themselves and some of the corniness of doing a play more than 300 years old. Men in make-up, tights and hairspray talked about how "gay" they feel. A masked ensemble does a corny dance across the stage between scenes and serve as props during other scenes.

While most of the jokes were sexual puns or sight gags, touches unique to this production included a 17th-century prostitute wearing neon Converse high-tops, a picture of a prostitute that closely resembled the Mona Lisa, and one cavalier promising to "do dinner" with another adventurer.

Except for a few minor flubs, the cast members handled the archaic language of the play so well they sounded as if they normally talked that way.

Behn, author of "The Rover," wrote 17 plays during the Restora-

Greek assimilation program eases transition

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

Although each fraternity has a different way of orienting its first-year members, most fraternities have the same goal for pledges and associates: to better those individuals in school and help prepare them for the real world. The differences in the first-year programs depend on the methods each fraternity thinks is best for achieving this goal.

According to a survey compiled by Charles W. Loring, former National Interfraternity Conference president, two types of first-year programs exist in the fraternity system: assimilation (membership development) and rites of passage (traditional pledge program).

The assimilation program emphasizes the individual, stresses chapter unity and includes the pledge or associate into "whole chapter" activities. Each fraternity member is responsible for the first year member's success in the program, according to Loring.

The rites of passage program emphasizes the group, stresses pledge class unity and has pledges participate mainly in pledge activities, instead of chapter activities. The pledge trainer is responsible for the pledges' success.

Acacia, Alpha Gamma Rho, FarmHouse, Kappa Sigma, Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Chi are some K-State fraternities that have first year programs resembling the rites of passage.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said although most fraternities at K-State have the traditional pledge program, three fraternities incorporate Loring's assimilation program: Lambda Chi Alpha, Theta Xi and Delta Upsilon fraternities.

Joe Karlin, Theta Xi president and senior in accounting, said Theta Xi incorporated the associate program in 1971 upon reinstatement of the fraternity's charter, which had been revoked in the 1960s.

"We wanted to lessen the burdens of transition from high school or junior college to K-State," he said. "Everyone who is a member is equal. There is no seniority and no distinctions in house bills, house duties and offices."

Pledgeship at DU is designed to teach the pledges about fraternities and how the DUs are unique, said Mark Miller, pledge educator for DU and sophomore in industrial engineering.

"DU started as a protest towards secret fraternities," he said. "We are a non-secretive fraternity. We have nothing to hide."

Kurt Heimerman, freshman in business, said he pledged DU partly because of its open, anti-secret policy.

"They didn't judge me for my material items and they got to know me for what I am," he said.

Most fraternities have secret rituals, said Doug Skaggs, president of Beta Theta Pi fraternity and senior in marketing.

"Fraternity secrets makes us unique from other fraternities and living groups," he said. "They provide a common bond within the members of the house."

Sean Eickhoff, president of Kappa Sigma and sophomore in architectural engineering, "We have a ritual in our active meeting that pledges learn after they're activated, and they aren't activated until they've proven their worthiness."

Kappa Sig pledges can have an office in the pledge class but not in the active chapter, he said.

David McDonald, fraternity educator for Lambda Chi and sophomore in pre-optometry, said Lambda Chi was the first fraternity at K-State to switch from the traditional pledge program to an associate program. The fraternity made the switch to incorporate equality and respect among members and lessen the division between the first year members and the actives in the fraternity.

"As associates, the first-year members have the same voting rights as the active members," McDonald said.

"Everyone in the house has work duties, seniors as well as freshmen," said Tim Burnett, member of Lambda Chi and sophomore in fisheries and wildlife biology.

To prevent associates from thinking they are inferior to the actives,

Planning important to severe weather safety

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

With the return of spring comes the likelihood that severe thunderstorms will occur in Kansas, some of which may spawn tornadoes and threaten human safety, said Bill Barlow, warning and preparedness meteorologist for the National Weather Service.

"April, May and June are the months when most tornadoes occur, and people really have to pay attention when weather conditions are favorable for tornadoes," he said.

Tornadoes can occur when warm air from an upper-level jet stream intersects with cool air from a lower-level jet stream, and lower-level moisture with turbulent, unstable air are present, Barlow said.

These conditions often exist in Kansas during the spring months because air from the north and the south travels into the state, mixing easily because the air flow is uninterrupted by obstacles such as mountains, he said.

According to a National Weather Service newsletter, tornadoes have caused 176 deaths in Kansas since 1950; however, the last tornado-related fatality occured nearly five years ago.

Some tornado-related fatalities are unavoidable, particularly when a densely-populated area suffers a "direct hit," but many deaths occur because people do not follow instructions when the National Weather Service issues severe weather warnings, Barlow said.

"It's very important to have a plan of action ahead of time," he said.

Barlow said tornado warnings are issued as a result of "sightings" made by individuals in tornado-spotter networks. The National Weather Service relies on spotters because meteorologists can't positively verify the existence of a tornado from radar signals alone, Barlow said.

Del Petty, director of Riley County emergency preparedness, said he's been in the business of watching severe weather for 22 years.

He said the Riley County spotter network consists primarily of area law enforcement officers and volunteers trained to recognize characteristics of thunderstorms which might endanger public safety.

"We have a complete total communications network," Petty said. "Our police radios will penetrate any storm system."

He said when the National Weather Service issues a severe thunderstorm or tornado watch, he notifies area schools, fire departments, ambulance services, law enforcement agencies, hospitals and others who urgently "need to know."

From that point, the information is passed by a method that Petty referred to as the "fan effect."

"We would notify campus authorities because they know what activities were taking place on campus and would be prepared to take appropriate action," Petty said.

When individuals who are not members of the spotter network report a tornado, the report is not ignored, but it is rare for a private citizen to report severe weather or a tornado before a spotter does, he said.

"If a tornado is sighted, we have a direct (phone) line to local radio stations and a cable TV audio override which is quite an asset," Petty said.

The audio override is provided by Manhattan Cable TV Services Inc. and, in the event of a tornado, the audio signal on every channel could be overridden and weather warnings could be broadcast immediately, he said.

John Lambert, associate professor of public safety, said every year tornado safety bulletins are sent to administrators, key personnel and are posted in residence halls as well as several other buildings on campus.

If a tornado threatened the Manhattan area, Petty would contact the campus power plant, which would sound the siren to warn people of the impending danger, he said.

The safety precautions for individuals include:

- If outdoors with no available shelter, lie flat in a ditch or low place.
- If in a vehicle, don't try to outrun or drive away from a tornado.
- In a home, go to the basement — if there is no basement, put as many walls as possible between yourself and the outside of the house; stay away from windows.
- If in a mobile home, get out of the home and lie in a ditch or low flat area.

Pageant contest set for Saturday

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

"The Sport of Pageantry" is in the air and will set the theme of the 33rd Annual Miss Manhattan—K-State Pageant at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the Manhattan High School Auditorium.

"This year's pageant semifinalists will be introduced as if they were competing in the opening of a sporting event," said Nancy O'Kane, director of the local pageant. "We will have sport commentators, cheerleaders, and a pep band setting the atmosphere of the pageant competition."

The reigning Miss Manhattan—K-State, Kerry Tarrant, junior in journalism and mass communications, will assist Manhattan Mayor Dave Fiser in crowning her successor from 12 semifinalists who were selected in January.

"It is different to be on this side of the pageant — not competing," Tarrant said. "The pageant is exciting in a different way by watching the young women competing improve over the past two months. But it's also sad to know and see the end of my year coming."

O'Kane said, "Since February, the semifinalists have been participating in weekly rehearsals which place emphasis on talent preparation, interview techniques, poise, and appearance."

The competition is judged and scored in four areas, including talent, which contributes 50 percent of the total score. Poise and appearance, in an evening gown and in swimsuit, each count toward 16.6 percent of the score, as does the private interview with the judges.

The 1989 semifinalists include eight students from K-State — Katrina Custer, junior in music theater; Shannon Easterly, junior in English and secondary education; Ericka Foley, senior in mechanical engineering; Melinda Loughman, freshman in human development and family studies; Teresa Mumma, senior in graphic design; Teri Stiverson, freshman in marketing and advertising; Katrina West, senior in animal science and industry; and Shelli Wineland, senior in business administration.

Other semifinalists include Melinda Arnold, freshman in music and photojournalism at Manhattan Christian College, and three Manhattan High School seniors — Chevella Satchell, Amy Urban and Carla Van Nostran.

Custer, who was last year's first runner-up, said competing in the pageant is a stepping stone toward her career goal of being an entertainer.

"It gives you self-confidence," she said.

"This is not a sport," Mumma said. "You are only judged on who you are and not compared against the others. You are competing against yourself. It's always harder to compete against yourself."

The pageant's 12 semifinalists are competing for $2,275 in scholarships to help offset post-high school training and education.

The winner will receive $1,000, first runner-up $400, second runner-up $200, third runner-up $150, fourth runner-up $100, and each of the remaining contestants $50.

"The remaining amount, $75, will be presented as a special scholarship award from the Miss Manhattan—K-State Pageant Board," O'Kane said.

'The Rover' mixes Restoration theater and feminism

The Christian Science Monitor once described "The Rover" as a "steely, pioneering play — a Restoration romp with decidedly feminist overtones ... a jaunty 'Pirates of the Caribbean.'"

Aphra Behn's play "The Rover" opened Thursday night at Nichols Theatre. The K-State Players have been rehearsing for six weeks to present the "swashbuckling adventure story, highlighted by cases of mistaken identity, foiled rendezvous, and duels aplenty," said Marci Mauller, public relations director.

The play, written in 1677 during the Restoration period of the theater, differs in behavior from other plays of its time.

"This is perhaps because it was written by England's first published female playwright, Aphra Behn, who throughout her career pioneered the cause of women's rights denouncing the sexual and social subservience of women," Mauller said.

The play centers around three high society women who decide to roam the streets as gypsy wenches, she said.

"The three women are seeking out men who they wish to marry for love and defy parental authority, which arranges marriages for economic reasons," said Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech.

Shelton is the head of the theater program at K-State and has been preparing the play since last summer.

"We decided that we didn't want to do the play in the style of the period," Shelton said. "We chose to ignore the period and create one of our own. We have mixed a little of today with the 1600s. It's an exaggeration of the period."

The costuming is very similar to the period, he said, but the wigs resemble both time periods. The actors will be wearing contemporary tights and underwear for the undressing scenes.

The script was based on an original text written by Thomas Killigrew, Shelton said. Text was added from the original to Behn's rendition to build up the opening scene.

"My biggest challenge was to coordinate the swashbuckling, farcical and comedy into a whole," he said.

Professional fight master J.R. Beardsley, who choreographed The Players' production of "Romeo and Juliet" last year, returned from San Francisco this semester to serve as fight director for "The Rover," Mauller said.

There are five fights in the play.

"They are really quite sharp and well done," Mauller said. "The fights are also a bit more difficult than last year's duels in 'Romeo and Juliet.'

"Although the leading male characters in the play are true swashbucklers and all which that implies, it is the women in this play who have the last word and everyone, especially the audience, is in for a rolling good time."

Dwight Tolar, senior in applied music, will play the role of the Rover. Tolar will be following in the footsteps of Christopher Reeves and Jeremy Irons, who have played the part in other theatrical reditions.

Brian Linin and Jason Harris, both Maskers, hold a frame of a mirror for Hellena, played by Camille Diamond, in act one of "The Rover."

Angellica Bianca, played by Annette Blanke, graduate student in speech, is a courtesan who is betrayed by the Rover and can be sympathetic and bitter at the same time, Shelton said.

"The initials of this character are also the same as the playwright's," he said. "Behn herself was not a success in choice of men. At one time she loved a lawyer, but he turned out to be bisexual and was later killed in a tavern."

Marta Gilberd, assistant professor of speech, is the costume designer for the production.

"I started designing the costumes in December, but just started constructing them eight weeks ago," she said.

The costumes are made of brocade and silk.

Her staff consisted of one graduate teaching assistant and six part-time students.

"This has been our biggest endeavor so far. The cost was $2,300, and we utilized a lot of stock fabrics and trims," Gilberd said. "If we hadn't had the stock, we would have needed $3,500."

Stock fabric is material that has been left over from past productions.

"Fabric costs have doubled recently and we haven't had a budget increase in seven years, so we have to make do with what we've got," Gilberd said.

The play will run at 8 tonight and Saturday and again April 12-15. Tickets are $4 for students and $6 for the general public and are available at Nichols Box Office.

Arab students demonstrate traditional Mideastern dance

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

The sounds of stomping feet, clapping hands and traditional Arabic music filled the Union Courtyard at noon Thursday when a group of Arab Student Association members performed the traditional Dabbke dance.

The dance is performed mainly in Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and Palestinian areas in the Middle East, said Anwar Dabbas, graduate student in regional and community planning and president of International Coordinating Council.

In his introduction of the dancers, Dabbas said the performance was dedicated to the Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"The dance is done at happy occasions such as weddings and parties," said Haitham Arafat, senior in industrial engineering and one of the nine dancers.

"Most of the people back home (in the West Bank) are farmers, and after they get done harvesting the olive crop they celebrate by dancing."

Each town or region performs the dance in a slightly different way and has its own variation of the traditional dress worn for the dance, Arafat said.

"The dance is always called Dabbke, but each town or each county may perform it in a little bit different way," he said. "It is not much of a difference, but you can look at a (Dabbke) dance and tell that it is from Nazareth or from Gaza or from some other region."

Gombaz is the Arabic name for the traditional shirt worn by the male dancers, he said. The men

Debate team ranked third

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State debate team has argued its way to a nationwide third place ranking by the Cross-Examination Debate Association.

"This was the best year in the history of the program," said Edward Schiappa, debate team coach. "We have gone from 80th to 41st to fifth last year to third this year. We are pleased both in terms of national ranking and the number of awards received."

The ranking by CEDA is based on team performances throughout the year. The third place award was presented this past weekend at the national tournament held in Columbia, South Carolina.

"For the past eight or nine years, Southern Illinois University and UCLA have dominated the rankings," he said. "Most people expect us to challenge them for one of the top two spots next year. We certainly have the talent."

Schiappa said UCLA always does well because the competition they face in the West region is always tough.

"If we want a crack at (UCLA) we have to travel out west," he said. "The only possible constraint is budgetary. We are still waiting on the budget."

Awards were also presented for the top ten individual speakers of the 450 competing debaters. Three K-State members placed in the top ten — Richard McCollum, sophomore in philosophy, placed third; William Boggs, junior in sociology, placed sixth; and David Filippi, sophomore in economics, placed eighth.

The teams of Filippi and McCollum and Wendy Tatro, senior in business and Boggs placed in the "Sweet Sixteen" in the tournament's elimination rounds. Tatro and Boggs also placed in the top sixteen of the 225 competing two-person teams.

Filippi stated he was very pleased with the overall performance. "We've been working hard since September. Every weekend we've had a tournament. We've only had about three weekends off," said Filippi. "I want to emphasize it was a squad effort and even those teams that didn't place really contributed," he said.

"We've been picking up good transfer students and assistant coaches. If we can maintain the level of support from the administration and the president's office, we should be able to do as good next year," said Filippi.

"K-State should clearly be the team to beat," Filippi said.

This year's topic asked if an increase in restrictions on the civilian possesion of handguns in the United States would be justified.

Schiappa said the topic was timely due to a murder-suicide involving a handgun that occurred in the bar of the hotel where the tournament was being held. It happened the evening before the tournament began, and some of the competing debaters witnessed the incident.

"It was a frightening reminder of the issues we face," Schiappa said.

Adams learns quickly

By Mike Rouse
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Chris Adams had never played golf until her freshman year in high school, and now she is the No. 1 player for the Wildcats.

Basketball had always been first for the sophomore from Beaver, Okla., but now golf is the main sport in her life.

"Basketball was my first love, then golf," Adams said. "I started playing golf when I was a freshman in high school."

Since picking up her golf clubs, Adams has received several honors. In high school, she went to the Oklahoma State Championship all four years and was runner-up her senior year.

Since coming to K-State she has made an immediate impact on a team that has struggled for the last couple of years. She averaged a team low 86.3 strokes per round last year as a freshman.

"I came to K-State because I knew that I would be able to play right off the bat," Adams said. "I didn't know I was going to play No. 1 though."

Adams was recruited out of high school by former K-State coach Rob Sedorcek. Since then however, Sedorcek has left K-State to pursue a professional career. But Adams doesn't feel that the hiring of current Coach Russ Bunker in the middle of the fall season has affected the team's play.

"I came to K-State because I knew that I would be able to play right off the bat."
—Chris Adams, K-State golfer

"I don't think it made a difference with him being hired during the middle of the season."

She has improved her stroke average almost five strokes this year. Adams has a 81.4 stroke average through two tournaments. She placed sixth at the Northern Illinois Snowbird Classic March 15 and finished 15th at the Sue Berning Invitational Tuesday.

The thought of transferring to another four-year school has entered her mind. The lack of competition has been a big concern for Adams since arriving at K-State.

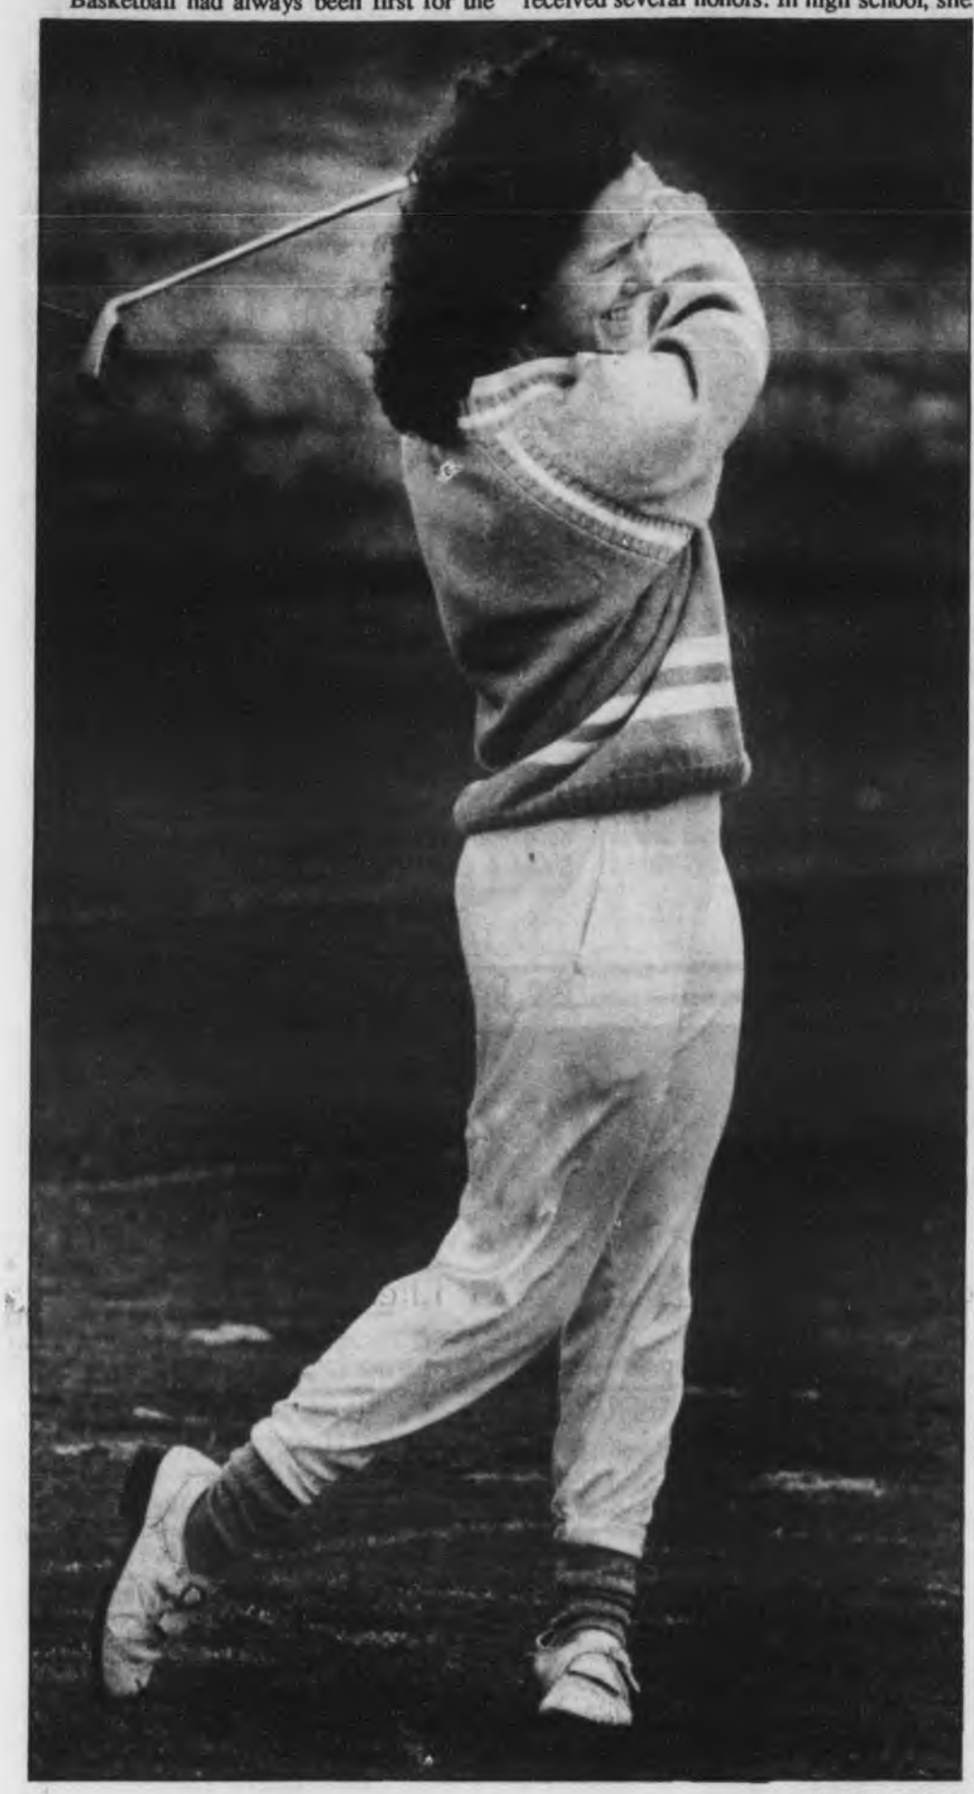
"I had considered it, but I don't want to sit out a year," she said. "But I want competition, and I know I can get it somewhere else.

"I believe that Coach can get some more players in here that can change the program," she said.

Bunker knows that Adams is a versatile part of his program and understands how she feels about the program right now.

"She knows what we are trying to do for the team and she knows she can make a big impact on this team, " Bunker said. "She can go out right now and shoot a score that is the best on the team and that isn't any competition and that doesn't make her work at it."

Even though the team has finished eight and ninth respectively in the last two tournaments, Adams still has confidence that the Wildcat women can play better.



Adams attributes most of her golfing success to her high school golf coach.

"I was the only girl's player on the team for all but one year in high school, so he had a major impact on me," she said.

Adams has played the top position on the team all year and has felt the pressure of her role.

"There is pressure knowing I have to go out every day and put up the best score, but it doesn't bother me at nights if I don't," she said.

An immediate goal Adams has set for herself is to finish in the top five at the Big Eight tournament April 23-25 in Ames, Iowa. After college, Adams hopes she can play on the ladies professional tour.

Kansas visits 'Cats for 4-game series

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

The K-State baseball team will try this weekend to continue its domination over the Kansas Jayhawks in a four-game series at Frank Myers Field beginning at 7 tonight.

The Wildcats swept the Jayhawks last year in a four-game series in Lawrence. It was the first league sweep for K-State since the Big Eight went to the four-game series format.

K-State has won five straight and seven of eight from KU under Coach Mike Clark.

"They're a competitive ballclub," Clark said. "They have a lot of experience back from last year."

Kansas split a four-game series with Nebraska last weekend in Lawrence. KU won by 7-0 and 13-12 scores and dropped contests by 10-7 and 10-0 scores.

"We have to be ready for a dogfight," Clark said. "We've got to eliminate our mistakes and do a good job."

K-State had an 11-4 and 5-3 doubleheader sweep of Marymount on Wednesday. Mike Hedrick and Bill Schafer, K-State's top relievers, got the wins in their first starting opportunites of the year.

"I didn't think we played particularly well," Clark said. "Our defense didn't play well in the first game, but I thought they improved in the second game."

Hedrick went four innings in the opener, allowing four hits and one unearned run, and ran his record to 3-0. The K-State defense committed five errors behind him.

"Mike struggled with his control a little bit," Clark said. "I wanted him to get ready for this weekend."

Freshman Chris Hmielewski recorded his first save with three innings of work.

"We haven't gotten him a lot of innings," Clark said. "He's got to come in and get the ball in the mitt a little better. He's got a good future."

Schafer allowed three runs on just three hits with his second win and first complete game of the season in the nightcap.

"Billy threw real well for us," Clark said. "It was a good outing for him.

"The main thing I wanted out of them was to throw 80 to 85 pitches," Clark said. "They will start more. I'm pleased with what they did."

K-State dropped three of four games to the Oklahoma Sooners last weekend. But the Wildcats snapped a 12-game losing streak in Norman with a 12-1 win behind David Hierholzer's complete game in the doubleheader opener last Saturday.

The wins over Marymount ran K-State's record to 18-6 overall and 1-3 in the Big Eight entering the KU series. After tonight the series continues with a doubleheader at 5 p.m. Saturday and concludes with a single game at 12:30 p.m. Sunday.

Jim Haller, 2-2, will get the nod Friday night for the 'Cats. David Hierholzer, 4-0, and Jeff Peterson, 4-2, will start the doubleheader Saturday, and Jim McClellan, 2-2, will be on the mound Sunday for the Wildcats.

KU stands at 15-16 after sweeping Benedictine, 8-7 and 8-2, Wednesday. The 'Hawks were also in action Tuesday, losing at Southwest Missouri State, 7-2.

Track squad travels to Washington State

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Limited funds will allow track coach John Capriotti to take only 23 members of his squad to a triangular meet with Washington State and Idaho in Pullman, Wash., Saturday. Therefore, K-State will not be looking to win the event, but mainly to improve in all areas.

"It's going to be hard," Capriotti said. "We're not going to have the numbers there to win it. We're just looking to improve and take another step forward."

K-State will regain the services of two key performers for this meet. Markeya Jones, who pulled a hamstring at the Big Eight Indoor, will be back in action, as will Ray Hill, who suffered a similar injury at the NCAA Indoor. Jones will compete in the 4x100-meter relay and maybe the open 400 meters, while Hill will be in the 4x100 and the 4x400 relays.

The K-State women will be led by Kim Kilpatrick, the Big Eight leader in the 100-meter hurdles with a season-best time of 13.68 seconds. Discus thrower Angie Miller is also atop the Big Eight honor roll in her event with a toss of 163-1 feet. K-State's lone national qualifier so far this season is freshman Greta Semsroth. Her throw of 172-11 broke the K-State javelin record at last Saturday's KSU Invitational and qualified her for the NCAA Outdoor Championships, June 1-3, at Provo, Utah.

The top performers on the men's side have been Brad Speer, Charles Armstead and Dan O'Mara.

Armstead leads the Big Eight in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 14.44. Speer set a meet record at the UCLA triangular with a leap of 7-2 in the high jump. That mark also tops the conference honor roll. O'Mara has the Big Eight's best throw in the discus at 179-8, and is second in the shot with a mark of 54-10¾.

Sig Ep Fite Nite to raise money for charity

By Mike Rouse
Collegian Reporter

It won't be for the heavyweight title of the world, but when boxers get into the ring this weekend for the tenth annual Sigma Phi Epsilon Fite Nite, they will be fighting for a good cause.

According to ring chairman Troy Warnken, sophomore in agricultural economics, the Sig Eps hope to raise about $10,000 for the American Heart Association.

Warnken said they were able to donate $6,500 to the heart association last year.

Starting Saturday afternoon, an estimated 80 boxers from fraternities and residence halls will battle it out in different weight classes for the title.

This is the second year that residence halls have participated in the tournament. Warnken noted there are several reasons why the residence halls have been allowed to compete.

"We always have a large turnout of boxers, and knowing the money is going to AHA has helped keep bringing people out to the fights. Boxing is an exciting sport and it also appeals to college students."
—Troy Warnken, ring chairman

"We're starting to have diversity in the tournament, and hopefully we can make it campus-wide and bring independent groups into the tournament," he said.

The tournament has grown in size every year since its start in 1979. Warnken said the number of boxers has helped keep the tournament successful.

"We always have a large turnout of boxers, and knowing the money is going to AHA has helped keep bringing people out to the fights," Warnken said. "Boxing is an exciting sport and it also appeals to college students."

The Miss Knock-Out contest is also a part of the tournament that has helped raise money. Women represent each sorority on campus, and people are asked to donate to their favorite candidate. The person who has the most money at the end of the tournament wins the title.

"It helps get the sororities involved in the tournament, because they are a big part of it and we get a lot of money from them," he said. "We hope to raise between $300 and $400 from the contest."

Each fight will consist of three different one-and-one-half minute rounds. Each boxer must wear head gear, a protective cup, mouthpiece and gloves. The fights will be officiated by members of the Topeka Golden Gloves.

The tournament will begin at 2 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena. Action Sunday, Monday and Tuesday will start at 7 p.m. and the finals will be Monday and Tuesday. Admission for the event is $4.50 per night. Ticket packages are also available. The three-night pass is $10 and the four-night pass is $12.

First-place OSU to face Wildcat netters

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat netters have a challenging weekend ahead of them as they take on the No. 1 team in the Big Eight — Oklahoma State — at 10 a.m. Sunday at K-State's L.P. Washburn Recreational Area.

The Cowgirls have five returning letter winners this season. They lost only three veterans from their 1988 team, which won the Big Eight title for the eighth time and finished 12th in the final collegiate ranking poll. They recorded the win in the dual against K-State last year, 9-0.

Coach Steve Bietau said the match this weekend will be one in which the 'Cats will have nothing to lose, but everything to gain. He hopes to approach the match with the attitude that it's a great opportunity to improve, as well as to open some eyes up to their progress.

"Progress and improvement are the final things that you're looking for," he said. "If things are moving in the right direction and you're gaining from each experience overall, then it's just a matter of time before you succeed."

K-State's strategy won't change much, if at all. Stress is put on consistency and approaching each match in the same light. He said the players are looking forward to the match.

According to Bietau, the pressure isn't as great as people might think, even though the Cowgirls have four nationally ranked players in their lineup. He added that in situations like this, players tend to loosen up and relax, not spending as much time thinking about winning or losing as they are getting the job done.

"Rankings don't mean a lot when you get on the court. The way you play does," he said. "It's the way you feel when you leave the match, and what you take with you to the next situation that really counts."

The Wildcats are coming off of a 3-6 loss to KU, which they hope to use to their advantage. Bietau said their attitude is good after Wednesday's match against the 'Hawks.

"I think the players all understand why the things happened that did," he said, "and what they each need to do to take care of their contribution."

The 'Cats will continue Big Eight competition on Monday as they face Oklahoma, also at home.

Sports Briefly

'Cats appear close to inking 2

K-State appears to have received oral commitments from two basketball recruits. Jeff Wires, from Moberly (Mo.) Junior College, and Jean Derouillere, from Miami, will reportedly sign national letters of intent Wednesday, the first day letters can be signed.

Wires is a 6-foot point guard who averaged 16 points and four assists a game this past season. K-State returns both guards Steve Henson and LaKeith Humphrey, but, Wires said, "I wouldn't go there if I didn't think I'd play."

Derouillere is a 6-foot-5 shooting guard who averaged 22 points for Miami's Dade-North Community College.

Lasswell to Northern Iowa

Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman's top assistant Terri Lasswell has accepted the head coaching position at Northern Iowa. Lasswell replaces Kimberly Mayden, who resigned after finishing 7-18 this past season.

Lasswell has been on the K-State staff for three years. She was formerly an assistant at Washburn University and prior to that was head volleyball and basketball coach at Topeka's Washburn Rural High School.

Fritz sets decathalon mark

At he Texas Relays Thursday, two-sport athlete Steve Fritz broke the K-State decathalon mark with a score of 6,994 points to finish in third place. The old record was held by all-Big Eight basketball selection Steve Henson, who set the record last year with 6,519 points.

Fritz, also a member of Lon Kruger's basketball squad, is a transfer from Hutchinson Community College, where he won the national junior college decathalon title last year with 7,015 points, and was also a member of Hutchinson's national champion basketball squad.

Terry VanLaningham also competed for the K-State men at Texas. His score of 6,437 moved him into third place on the all-time K-State list. VanLaningham finished sixth at the meet.

For the K-State women, Karen McGaughey finished in ninth place in the heptathalon with 4,399 points. The K-State women's record is 4,832 points and was set by Kim Hagger in 1981.

for the first home football game.

Senate also allocated $225.30 to Amnesty International after debate on an amendment that would have reduced the group's budget to nothing for fiscal year 1990.

Scott Kelly, graduate senator, said not funding the group would demonstrate "a lack of compassion."

"This is not a political group," he said. "They are apolitical."

"If Amnesty International did not exist on the campus, there would not be an opportunity for students to be involved in international concerns," Kirk Schuler, education senator said.

Todd Giefer, architecture senator, said Amnesty International does not benefit the students as a whole.

"It does not do a thing for the betterment of life at K-State," Giefer said. "We should have our money coming back to us."

The amendment was defeated in a voice vote.

Senate voted to increase the Black Student Union budget for advertising by $40.20. The additional advertising dollars will be used to advertise Black History Month, and the Candlelight Vigil which the group holds on Martin Luther King Day.

"The more ads for the candlelight vigil, the better," said Stephanie Haub, business senator.

The total allocation to the Black Student Union was $591.80.

Senate vote 18-8 to approve BSU's budget. Only 26 of the 52 senators voted on the issue. It is unknown if any of the 26 other senators abstained.

efforts to help the Contras, testified that he had been ordered by his superiors to keep silent about his role in keeping the rebels going after the cutoff of official aid.

"I was told not to tell anybody," North said. "I was particularly admonished" to keep secret "that another country was providing millions of dollars to help the Contras."

also wear pants called scharwal and a scarf called a hata.

Cosima Hadidi, senior in psychology and president of Arab Student Association, said the female dancers performing the Dabbke wear traditional dresses called thoabs.

Different colors of thread used in the dresses make them distinctive from town to town, Hadidi said. Because the elaborate patterns on the dresses are hand-stitched, they take a great deal of time to make.

The style of Dabbke and the variation of dress used in Thursday's performance were from the West Bank, where Arafat was taught the dance.

Hadidi said the traditional music that accompanied the dance is called the Nay and is usually performed on the flute and drums.

Although usually taking about six months to learn the dance, the dancers learned the steps for Thursday's performance in about one, Arafat said.

"We practiced almost every night," Hadidi said.

"Precision and timing are very important for the dance to look right," Arafat said.

Because of the synchronized movement in the dance, if even one person is out of step, it can ruin the performance, he said.

The group originally performed the dance during the Arabian Night activities March 4, Hadidi said.

Feminist critics have given her plays much attention recently, and while it is true that everyone in the play gets married and lives happily ever after, Behn isn't affirming all traditional views.

Women have all the soliloquies in the play and they motivate and control the plot. While Behn pictures men running madly after prostitutes, she tries to depict the hurt and longing for dignity that the women feel.

"The Rover" would be rated PG-13 and was directed by Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech. It lasts nearly three hours, but its humor, short scenes and fast action make the time fly.

Burnett said every member of the fraternity is required to work on kitchen crew for one week twice a semester and complete two weekly cleaning duties.

McDonald said associates gain the satisfaction of commonality within the house, and fraternity secrets are revealed to them when they're initiated into the active chapter.

Sheridan Swords, member of Lambda Chi and sophomore in mechanical engineering, said the associate class is not allowed to have social functions that exclude active house members.

"Sometimes a sorority pledge class will want to function with our associate class, but we only function as a house," he said.

Doug Burton, Sigma Chi president and senior in pre-medicine, said his fraternity stresses unity within the pledge class, and only first year members have daily house duties.

Paul Wagner, Sigma Chi freshman in construction science, said after two semesters of house duties, they won't have to do them again.

Ticket price increases, more event promotions alternative to fee plan

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Ticket price increases and better promotion of athletic events is the KSU Athletic Department's alternative to the proposed student athletic fee, which failed in the student referendum on March 27 and 28.

Athletic Director Steve Miller said it was decided at a department meeting Friday that all general admission tickets to football and basketball games will be increased $1. Chairback seats will be increased by $2, making the total ticket prices $11 for basketball games and $15 for football.

"We will try to keep continuity this year with ticket prices," he said.

Based on this year's ticket sales, the increase should generate about $260,000 revenue, Miller said.

"We also want to create a better atmosphere and do a better job of communicating," he said. "We are planning to do a lot more in football pre-game marketing."

Live rock bands and parking sections reserved for students are two new pre-game highlights the athletic department will begin using next fall to create a "typical football pre-game atmosphere," he said.

"We want to create a party-like atmosphere," Miller said. "We will also be doing some extra things in basketball as well."

Chris Peterson, assistant athletic director in charge of marketing and sales, said he plans to isolate the north corner of the east parking lot at the football stadium for residence hall and greek living group parking. He said live entertainment will be provided on a game-to-game basis.

"We want students to develop their own themes," he said. "If they tell me what they want, I will get it for them."

Peterson said all the entertainment will be financed through the department's marketing budget and will serve as a means of drawing the consumer back to football games.

"If we provide the students with this service, I think they will enjoy themselves," he said.

Family season ticket packages for football will also be offered next season. For $110, two adults and two children younger than 16 can attend all home football games, Miller said.

"We will also be allowing students to charge their football tickets and pay for them at fall registration," he said.

Students will have 14 games on their season basketball ticket passes, which is two more games than this year's passes allow. Miller said K-State will have 16 home games next year with only two being played over the holiday.

The department will keep 6,000 student seats in Bramlage Coliseum for next year, he said.

"Overall, I think we have acted in good faith and in the best interest of the students," Miller said.

He said all statistics for the price increases have been made available to the student ticket sales committee and Student Senate.

Chariot relays draw crowd

By Brian Hummell

The team of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and Kappa Alpha Theta sorority won the 26th annual running of the Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays — twice.

Staff/Brian Kratzer

Members of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority cheer as their chariot wins a race.

In the women's division the Thetas pulled an SAE rider to victory against Kappa Kappa Gamma, while in the men's division the SAE team pulled a Theta rider to victory against Tau Kappa Epsilon. The winning teams even used the same chariots.

The event occurred Friday at Memorial Stadium and is the oldest greek philanthropy at K-State.

"It was a definite success," said Paul Siegfried, chairman of the philanthropy. "The sun came out, so the weather cooperated and about 320 people came out to watch."

The Lambda Chi's will present $1,000 to the Manhattan Special Olympics from the proceeds of the event, Siegfried said.

Usually one wreck per year occurs at the relays, but there "were an unusual number of wrecks" at this year's version, Siegfried said.

"We inspected the chariots as we normally would, so I don't know what the problem was," he said.

The last chariot mishap occurred in the final race, making it somewhat anticlimactic. The TKE chariot broke on the first leg of the final race and the SAE's coasted home with a 1:12 winning time in the 440-yard event. A bolt connecting the handle to the chariot's frame broke on the TKE chariot just as the TKEs overcame the stagger on the SAEs.

The TKE team's semifinal heat time was 55 seconds and the SAE's qualified with a time of 58.9.

The Thetas won the women's division with a time of 1:14. This marked the second consecutive year the sorority has won the relays.

Members of the Theta team were Shelly Healy, Gwen Rieck, Kelly Pakkebier, Beth Rogers and Dina Pingeton. Members of the SAE team were Thomas, Scott Bieker, Dale Kelpin, Kevin Wagner, Mark Wentzel and Jay Haggard.

Natural gas explosion rips section from motel

By The Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. — An explosion apparently caused by natural gas ripped a 40-foot section from a motel on Sunday. Thirty-one people were injured, but no one was killed and only two people were hospitalized.

"We have witnessed a miracle," Fire Department Capt. Marvin Jochems said after searchers accounted for the last occupant of the Super 8 Motel.

"Everybody is accounted for," Jochems said. "We don't expect to find any fatalities in the rubble."

Thirty-one people were taken to the city's two major hospitals, but 29 were released after treatment, spokeswomen for the hospitals said.

Firefighters aided by a long-armed excavating machine continued to pick cautiously through the rubble, but Jochems said fire officials expected to turn the site back to control of the owners by the end of the day.

The blast occurred four minutes after someone phoned Montana-Dakota Utilities at 1:07 a.m. and reported a strong smell of natural gas, said Dick Blee, the acting Billings fire chief. Firefighters con-

Sorority chapter to close

By The Collegian Staff

Alpha Gamma Delta's K-State chapter, founded in 1986, will be closing at the end of this semester because of its "housing situation" and low membership, said Sonya Schraeder, president of the sorority.

The two reasons for AGD's closing are related: housing assumes a heightened importance for K-State sororities in terms of pledge recruitment, Schrader said.

"We were not able to get membership up without the house," she said.

AGD's membership consists of four pledges and 23 members, 16 of whom are living together in a house. Schraeder said the international officers wanted a membership of 75 by this time.

Abortion activists march in Washington

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With cries of "choice" and symbolic coat hangers hung from their clothing, hundreds of thousands of abortion rights activists marched Sunday on the nation's Capitol hoping to avert a return to the days of back-alley abortions.

"We're scared," said Ellen Davidson, a Yale University junior from Hewlett, N.Y. Scared, she said, because "we're coming to the realization that the thing we've taken for granted can be taken away."

The Supreme Court will hear arguments April 26 in a Missouri case that pro-choice and anti-abortion forces agree could significantly alter the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that gave women the right to an abortion.

"I'm thrilled to have my baby," said Kristin McNamara of College Park, Md., as she wheeled 4-week-old Kathryn in a stroller during the march from the Washington Monument to the Capitol. "But I think a woman must have a choice to decide whether and when to have a child."

"The message is: Don't let this right go," actress Whoopie Goldberg said in an interview as the marchers gathered in a brisk wind in intermittent sunshine.

The women's rights advocates — men and women, Democrats and Republicans, dozens of members of Congress and a host of celebrities — assembled on the Mall at the Monument for the march to the Capitol.

Marchers traded taunts with about 200-300 anti-abortion protesters who stood along Constitution Avenue. Police, some on horseback, kept the opposing forces apart.

The anti-abortion activists set up a symbolic "Cemetery of the Innocents" on the Washington Mall containing 4,400 white wooden crosses and Stars of David. That, organizers said, is the number of unborn children killed daily since the Supreme Court legalized abortion.

At the Capitol, law enforcement authorities estimated the pro-choice crowd at 300,000. Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority, said it was more than 600,000. By comparison, some 90,000 people gathered for a March 1986 pro-abortion rally in Washington.

Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, vowed to "raise a political army" to ensure that abortion rights are protected. "If they (politicians) don't get the message, we will replace them with pro-choice."

Rep. Tom Downey, D-N.Y., declared, "I have a message for the man at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue and the nine Supreme Court justices. Read my lips. Pro-choice, pro-choice, pro-choice." The crowd picked up the chant.

President Bush, in one of his first acts after taking office in January, told anti-abortion activists at a rally outside the White House he wanted the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision overturned.

Celebrities said their presence at the rally demonstrated their belief that a massive display of commitment to protect abortion rights will have an impact on the Supreme Court when its considers the Missouri challenge to Roe vs. Wade.

"They're human, they're political animals, and I think we can make a difference," said actress Jane Fonda, who attended the rally with her daughter, 20-year-old Vanessa Vadim.

In Kansas City, Mo., about 1,200 people rallied in a park Sunday afternoon to show support for legal abortion, while Gov. John Ashcroft appeared on a national television program to discuss Missouri's challenge to the issue.

Many of those attending the rally outside the city's Country Club Plaza shopping district said they feared the U.S. Supreme Court would reverse its decision giving women the right to have an abortion.

"I realize there is one right (women) are entitled to under the Constitution, as the Supreme Court sees it, and if they take that right away, we're not going to have any rights," said Linda Tarpley, of Kansas City, who came to the rally with her husband and her 1-year-old son.

A group of several dozen abortion foes gathered on the fringe of the crowd, but no incidents were reported.

Pro-choicers rally on State Capitol

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — About 100 abortion rights activists rallied Sunday at the Capitol to show their support for legalized abortion.

The crowd, bundled up and braving a chilly north wind and overcast skies on the south steps of the Capitol, consisted mostly of young women, many with little children, and a scattering of men.

Several carried signs, among them ones saying "Quality of Life," "Defend Abortion Rights" and "The American Way: The Right to Choose, the Right to Privacy."

The rally was in conjunction with one in Washington, D.C., that drew an estimated 300,000 pro-choice supporters.

The rallies come as the Supreme Court prepares to hear a Missouri case that seeks to overturn the 1973 Roe v. Wade ruling that legalized abortion nationwide.

Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft, appearing Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation," defended the Missouri law, which would outlaw abortions and abortion counseling in public facilities.

In Topeka, the crowd released green balloons at the end of the rally.

Bangladesh bans Newsweek

DHAKA, Bangladesh — The government seized copies of the April 3 issue of Newsweek and banned its entry and publication in the country for publishing a visual image of the prophet Mohammed, authorities said Sunday.

Ninety percent of Bangladesh's population is Moslem, and the faith forbids any visual portrayal of Mohammed.

According to senior officials at the Home Ministry, the government banned the issue Saturday. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

In New York, Newsweek spokesman Peter Hultberg said no one from the magazine would be available for comment until Monday.

In December, Bangladesh banned Salman Rushdie's novel "The Satanic Verses" for allegedly insulting Islam.

Concert to be monitored

QUERETARO, Mexico — Officials warned those attending a performance Sunday by rock star Rod Stewart that they would be screened for alcohol, drugs and weapons after about 400 people were injured at his concert in Monterrey.

State Attorney General Francisco Guerra Malo promised to dispatch 1,500 police officers, firefighters, and medical workers to the city's soccer stadium to "protect the citizenry from possible violent acts."

Guerra Malo was quoted in a report Saturday by the government news service Notimex, which did not mention Friday's incident. Witnesses and relief officials said impatient fans surged toward the stage when the Scottish singer was 1½ hours late, causing three people to suffer broken bones and many others to have bruises and other minor injuries.

The concert in Queretaro, about 120 miles northwest of Mexico City, is the second stop of a four-city Mexican tour that Stewart began before 50,000 fans in Monterrey, an industrial center 600 miles north of Mexico City.

Concert to benefit trumpeter

NEW YORK — Wynton Marsalis and his band, George Benson and Freddie Hubbard are among jazz musicians who will play an all-night benefit Tuesday for jazz trumpeter Woody Shaw, who lost an arm in a subway fall in February.

"The fact that he's still alive — we're very thankful for that," said alto saxophonist Bobby Watson, who plans to play at the benefit at Sweetwater's, a restaurant near Lincoln Center. Watson and Shaw were once fellow members of Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers.

"I hope he can recover. He's a phenomenal musician. He hears a piece of music once and memorizes it," Watson said.

Shaw, 44, who lost his sight to degenerative eye disease several years ago, fell from a subway platform into a train's path on Feb. 27. Surgeons were unable to reattach his left arm, which was nearly severed at the elbow.

Shaw returned to Newark, N.J., his hometown, last year after teaching and traveling in Europe.

Fusion experiment duplicated

HOUSTON — Texas A&M University researchers have duplicated a controversial University of Utah experiment that reportedly achieved nuclear fusion using a relatively simple process, a college spokesman said Sunday.

Officials at the school in College Station said they would hold a news conference Monday to announce that their researchers had achieved the same kind of cold fusion, one of the most sought-after scientific breakthroughs.

"Other labs around the country have been trying to duplicate this, but nobody else has been able to get satisfactory results," said Ed Walraven, a spokesman for Texas A&M. "Our people are convinced that they've got it, so as a gesture to the reserchers in Utah we wanted to announce it as soon as possible."

Scientists have long sought the secrets of nuclear fusion, considered a possible replacement for conventional energy sources because it would be clean, inexpensive and virtually inexhaustable.

Researchers in Utah announced March 23 that they had achieved nuclear fusion at room temperature. Their claim has been met with widespread skepticism among colleagues.

Other researchers have complained that they tried to replicate the experiment of Stanley Pons of the University of Utah and his British colleague, Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southhampton, but without success.

Wildfires burning in Florida

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Gov. Bob Martinez called out two helicopter crews from the Florida National Guard on Sunday to help fight wildfires covering about 30,000 acres of rural land in four counties.

The fires were burning in mostly unpopulated areas and weren't expected to force any immediate evacuations, said Rod Westall, chief of the state Bureau of Emergency Planning.

Winds of 5 to 15 mph were hampering efforts to control the blazes in both northern Florida and Dade County, while drought conditions statewide had disaster officials watching for further outbreaks.

"That's pretty brisk and that's been causing problems with all the fires," Westall said of the wind.

Martinez signed an executive order allowing the guard to provide equipment and personnel, if needed, to the Division of Forestry.

"The worst mistake we could make would be to wait too long and let these fires get out of control," said Martinez. "The affected areas so far are relatively rural, but we must act quickly to make sure these fires do not threaten large residential areas."

Sexton surprised with image

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Rock guitarist Charlie Sexton says he is surprised fans and writers see him as a sex symbol.

At age 20, Sexton has a hit video with the single "Don't Look Back" and has played for such luminaries as the Clash, Keith Richards, Ron Wood, Don Henley and Bob Dylan.

Publications such as the Los Angeles Times and the magazine Creem have referred to Sexton, with his black pompadour, pallid complexion and pouty lips, as the next big sex symbol in rock.

"I really don't pay much attention to all that. I was a bit surprised by it all. I always thought I looked ordinary to tell you the truth," the plain-spoken Texan said in a interview published Sunday in The (Nashville) Tennessean.

The 1989 Miss Manhattan-K-State Pageant winner Katrina Custer, junior in music theater, receives applause from the audience Saturday as last year's winner, Kerry Lynn Tarrant, watches from behind.

K-Stater wins competition

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

The months of preparation and practice for the title of Miss Manhattan — K-State 1989 came to an end Saturday night with the crowning of Katrina Custer, junior in music theater.

After placing first runner-up in the Miss Manhattan — K-State 1988 pageant, Custer said she was still surprised at the announcement of this year's title.

"I prepared more for this year's competition and I knew more of what I was doing after competing last year," she said. "My focus this year was to not compete against the other contestants, but against myself."

Custer, who was awarded a $1,000 scholarship, said she intensified her efforts for this year's contest by attending modeling school, learning more about makeup and hair design, and taking voice lessons.

The first runner-up and winner of a $400 scholarship was Teresa Mumma, senior in graphic design.

"I knew the contest was going to be close, especially when Katrina and I were named as the top two finalists," Mumma said. "I was excited to be one of the final two. I couldn't ask for anything more at the moment. It was a better placement than in past competitions."

Other finalists were second runner-up Melinda Loughman, freshman in human development and family studies; third runner-up Katrina West, senior in animal science and industry; and fourth runner-up Shelli Wineland, senior in business.

Miss Congeniality was won by Mumma, and the judge's interview award was presented to West.

Carla Van Nostran, a senior at Manhattan High School, was awarded a special scholarship of $75 from the Miss Manhattan — K-State pageant board.

"All the young women did an outstanding job in this year's pageant," said Manhattan Mayor Dave Fiser. "The competition was tough."

Larry Ossenkop, a pageant judge, said, "It was a great pageant. This year's winner will represent Manhattan and K-State very well."

Ossenkop said the three months of training spent prior to the contest working with the contestants is fairly unique to the program in Manhattan. But the time and energy spent on the local level pays off in getting the young women into further competition, he said.

Other K-State students have won respective preliminaries throughout the State and will be competing with Custer in the Miss Kansas Pageant in July. These students are Kelly Albert, junior in radio-television, Miss Soloman Valley; Amy Hiett, freshman in psychology, Miss Troia-Thomas County; and Sallie Withers, sophomore in social work, Miss Southwest Kansas.

K-Staters to compete in Miss Kansas Pageant

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

K-State will be well-represented at the Miss Kansas Pageant in Pratt this July. Among the 26 competitors in the pageant, from which Miss Kansas will be selected, four are K-Staters.

Katrina Custer, a junior in music theater, is the Miss Manhattan-K-State representative to the Miss Kansas Pageant.

"I see my participation in the pageants as a stepping stone towards my career as an entertainer," Custer said.

"Talent is my strongest point. Because of my major, I have more opportunities to be on stage. It has helped me develop a better stage presence."

Custer, from Hoisington, said she has been involved with pageants since she was 8 years old.

"You only get out of it what you put in. Participating in the pageants has given me the self-confidence to want to become an entertainer," she said.

Last July, Kelly Albert, a junior in broadcast journalism, was crowned Miss Solomon Valley.

"I entered the contest because I felt it would benefit me in my career goal of journalism," she said. "It has given me the self-confidence and opportunity to communicate and perform when

Appraisals increase for affluent suburbs

By The Associated Press

MISSION HILLS — Think the appraised value of your home took a big jump this year? Talk to Ewing Kauffman or Henry Bloch.

Appraisals on their homes, and others in the affluent Johnson County suburbs of Mission Hills, Mission Woods and Westwood Hills, took some sizeable leaps, according to a computer study by the Kansas City Star published in Sunday's editions.

Kauffman's mansion in Mission Hills, with eight bedrooms, six baths, a pool and tennis courts on four-plus acres, was valued at $144,900 on the property tax rolls until this year.

Under the statewide reappraisal, Johnson County raised the value to $2.7 million, a jump of 1,800 percent.

"I didn't know what it was appraised for," said Kauffman, a co-owner of the Kansas City Royals and the founder of Marion Laboratories Inc.

"Whatever's fair, I'm perfectly willing to pay."

Speaker: U.S. politics changing

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

College Republicans play an important part in the election process, said Jack Brier, former Kansas Secretary of State, at the College Republicans' state convention Saturday in the Union.

"Political parties have changed. Political action groups that don't necessarily give money have changed the way we, as College Republicans, Young Republicans or active Republicans, help candidates," he said.

"The real question is not 'can (College Republicans) make a difference.' The real question is 'will you make a difference,'" Brier said.

Three requirements Brier said must be met to make a better Republican party include dedication, increased collegiate membership and teamwork.

"You have to be willing to give something (to the party). If you are willing to give your time and your organizational skills, whatever it is, that's great," he said. "But whatever you give, it has to represent something.

"The second thing you have to do is very simple: get members, increase the membership of the College Republicans."

He also said teamwork must accompany increased membership and dedication. Politics is undergoing changes like never before, he said.

"Change is everywhere. Never before, whether it is in education, whether it is in religion or whether it is in politics, has there been greater change than you see right now," he said.

Brier cited some examples of the changes he has seen.

One instance he stated took place in the Connecticut State Assembly, where Republicans and Democrats joined to get rid of a liberal assembly speaker.

"A three-time liberal speaker of the state Assembly was ousted in a coup lead by all 63 Republican members and 31 of the 88 Democrats. (In other words), the Republicans and Democrats got together to get rid of him," Brier said.

Another example took place in the North Carolina Legislature.

"Twenty Democrats joined the 45 Republicans to remove the four-term Speaker of the House to elect a more conservative Democrat. So, in North Carolina the Republicans helped to elect a Democrat Speaker of the House," he said.

College Republicans, which has about 50 members, meets every three weeks with different keynote speakers at each meeting, said Travis Stumpff, chairman and junior in political science.

Small, vocal group should reassess goals

Ten hours.

Most people don't even get that much sleep. But that's how long Student Senate was in session Thursday night.

One could bring up the fact that senators discussed the allocation of student monies to three different groups, read a couple of bills, and debated whether or not student money should be divested from companies that conduct business in South Africa.

One could also argue that Senate is responsible for representing students' views, and that any decisions, especially controversial ones, should only be arrived at after careful consideration of all pertinent circumstances.

But ten hours?

Witnessing Senate debate during allocations is like watching the Morton Downey Jr. Show, although the latter is more fun because you can turn it off when it gets pathetic.

Much like the Morton Downey Jr. Show, Senate is prolonged by the debate of a few key elements. These senators insult the intelligence of their peers with a seemingly endless barrage of redundant questions, and verbally offend students who go there out of concern for the issues being discussed.

Issues that could be dealt with in half the time drag on for hours, with many senators leaving the room to stroll around and return only when it is time to vote.

And how can you blame them? Who wants to listen to the drivel of a few people with preconceived notions which are not going to change regardless of the number of hours spent in debate?

Student senators are elected to represent the students in their respective colleges, and to act on behalf of these students in the best interest of the student body as a whole. While opinions on what is in the best interest of the students vary, some senators should not forget that their personal biases should take a back seat to the importance of the issues at hand.

The majority of senators should be commended for their dedication and service rendered to the student body. But a few other senators, comprising a small but loud minority, should reassess their priorities and begin representing the interests of the students, not their own.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR pertaining to matters of public interest are encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus/public interest are especially encouraged and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible. All letters are subject to editing on the basis of space, style and taste.

Fort violates capitalist beliefs

Commentary

Chad L. Sanborn
Collegian Columnist

Being a rather apathetic person — one who would rather bitch than act — it is very seldom that something sticks in my craw to the point where I might actually get off my butt and make a wave.

And I won't this time, either. It's not my fight, and I find a certain dignity in minding my own business — a rare trait among many of my fellow human beings. But I will spend a column taking a side.

You see, I woke up the other morning and I thought I was in America, a wonderful place where everything is set up to protect the land owners. I realize some yahoos out there often get this whole "private ownership of land" thing stuck in their craw, and as they live in America, they have the right to yak all they want about "share the wealth."

But I like private ownership, small business, big business and all the other aspects of our grain-of-salt civilization. There is a certain beauty, painful as it may be, in the balance of our society.

That's enough of the P.R. for capitalism. The issue at hand: a possible gross violation of the things I believe in. The government boneheads are trying to take away some privately owned land.

It seems the brass at Fort Riley need a little more land upon which to play war. Fair enough. Times change, troop numbers increase, as does the range of technology, and thus more room is needed for target practice, maneuvers and to drive golf carts. I'll buy that.

But we're talking about Tara, Scarlett, and that's all that matters. Never forget that.

So Zeke is sitting there in his farm house one rainy day, watching Oprah discuss whether four-toed bull dykes should be allowed to drive at night, when a bulldozer — blessed by the brass — crushes the front wall of his domicile.

I'm sorry, but that's not happening, dig? We don't live in some Third World nation under a totalitarian government where redistribution of the land might be a decent idea.

This is supposed to be a country where the government — thanks to the Bill of Rights — respects the individual as much as possible. Furthermore, this is a country where the goverment — thanks to the Constitution — protects the rights of land owners.

OK, maybe in the grand scheme of things nobody really owns land. But since the days before John Locke, we've been playing the land owning game by a specific set of rules. We've drawn up deeds, financed loans and paid taxes to show who has rights to which hunk of earth.

Sometimes, in the name of progress, highways and parking lots, governments have seen fit to invoke the dungeon master rule of eminent domain.

I can deal with this. I mean, it is irksome to think that just because you pay for land you don't have the right to keep it. But governments are meant to be irksome.

Irksome and wasteful. Governments have a tendency to be like fat guys eating Doritos. They cram handfuls of chips in their drooling mouths and get no more flavor or satisfaction than they would from eating one chip at a time.

It's not like the government is just going to take the land. They will offer to buy it, but not for top dollar. I'm sure they will probably try to use some leftover coupons from "Uncle Sam's Manifest Destiny Days Sale."

Anyway, I'm rooting for the Manhattan-area residents who stand to lose their land; that is, as long as they keep their tactics useful and don't resort to emotional appeals. After all, it's the principle of the thing.

There, I've cast my lot. I stand to lose nothing, but I just hate the thought of someone barging in on my life and jerking the remote control out of my hand.

Letters

Collar not sexist

Editor,

I am writing in response to Wednesday's letter by Kathleen White. I am a woman and I am sick to death of other women griping about imaginary, sexist discriminations.

White is upset because the women graduating from K-State with bachelor's degrees are required to wear white collars with their robes. Let's get real.

You can't possibly believe that this is an act of sexual discrimination. Many women's dresses, especially in warm weather, have no collars. They are needed for the sake of uniformity, not distinction.

Although I have not read the "Instructions for Commencement" myself, I would bet the men are required to wear a white collar shirt under their robes for the same reason.

I see no reason why anyone should be offended by this practice.

Event newsworthy

Editor,

Saturday, 152 K-State students competed in the 61st annual Little American Royal. After speaking with members of the Collegian staff it has become apparent they do not consider this event "newsworthy."

Editor, what type of stories do you consider newsworthy? Stories in Monday's paper had such silly topics as the First Lady wearing a wig and baseball having its own dictionary. These were newsworthy? If we want national news, we can pick up the Manhattan Mercury. The Collegian is a University newspaper and as such, should cover University activities.

We were very disappointed when we opened the paper Monday morning and found not one word about the L.A.R. All the competitors involved spent weeks training and fitting their livestock for the show. It would have been nice to see a little recognition for the winners.

Members of Block and Bridle, the Dairy Science Club and the faculty and staff of the College of Agriculture need to be recognized for the excellent job they did in organizing the show.

The L.A.R. is an important tradition for the University and the College of Agriculture. It needs and deserves the continued support of the entire University, including the Collegian.

Needs support

Editor,

For nearly 25 years, the Friendship Tutoring Program has provided opportunities for Kansas university students to serve as volunteer tutors.

For most, the experience was enjoyable, enriching and an important part of their academic experience. The children of Manhattan, including children of K-State students, have also greatly benefitted form the Friendship Tutoring program.

Friendship Tutoring is currenlty experiencing financial difficulties. The City of Manhattan, which funded the program for 23 years, ceased its funding in 1988. We have again applied for funding from the city for 1990. If we do not receive funding, it looks as if the program may be cancelled. We do not want this to happen.

Our hearing before the social services advisory board is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. on April 11. The final five minutes of our hearing is designated for comments from the general public. We invite anyone who has benefitted from Friendship Tutoring to attend the meeting and share their feelings as to why Friendship Tutoring should be funded. We would greatly appreciate any support we receive.

Friendship Tutoring Program

Need volunteers

Editor,

I was praying with the establishment of the new Pet Hotline Ranch that the public response would be much greater than it has been in the past. Pet Hotline has about 45 orphaned animals housed on the ranch, and because we are supported by donations only, this is a costly operation to those who pick up the slack.

I would like to see much more response from those who really care about animals. Because our orphan program is "NO KILL," we take on the responsibility of caring, feeding and teaching our orphans until the "right" home is found for them.

An adoption contract must be filled out which includes a guarantee to return the orphan to us if the adoption does not work. All of our orphans need vaccinations when they come into the program and this is done as the medical fund allows.

Just think, if you own one dog it will cost $3 for the parvo/distemper serum and $10 for the rabies shot — now times that by 45.

But some of our orphans are puppies and they require more than just one parvo/distemper shot. Now you have some idea of the costs we face for vaccinations.

We also treat our orphans for parasites twice a year at additional cost, and remember, we have orphans coming in weekly that must be treated and vaccinated.

Let's look at the food bill. We feed 50 to 60 pounds of dog food per day and 1 to 1½ pounds of cat food per day. That's $80 to $100 a week for food, and that doesn't include treats.

We have received some food donations, but we are always in need of more, especially during the winter months when we like to feed extra.

We also have a spay/neuter program and as this fund allows we do spay/neuter the orphans. We would like to see this program bloom as it does help in many ways. Unwanted pregnancies cause unwanted pets. We see this all the time.

Unfortunately, not many people realize the cost of running our type of program. Including those programs listed above, we offer 17 services and 4 programs.

Maybe you think someone else will help if you don't. Now what happens if everyone thinks that way?

Memberships and sponsorships are needed along with food and cash donations. We need good, caring volunteers to help work around the ranch and to work with the animals (training and rehabilitation).

Because we are non-profit, no one on the staff receives any compensation except for the wonderful feelings we get each time we help an orphan or find a loving, caring home for one. We offer a valuable service to people and animals that we would like to see keep growing, but we can't do it alone.

We need your help. The orphans are counting on all of us. Give us a chance to show you all the good our programs are doing and give yourself a chance to help the orphans in our area.

Call us at 456-2592 anytime, or 494-8415 after 6 p.m. Thanks to all our supporters.

Campaign to aid Nicaraguans

Materials collected for hurricane victims

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

A school bus and five pickup trucks full of clothes, medical supplies and hand tools left Manhattan Saturday morning on a month-long trek that will eventually end in Nicaragua.

The trucks were part of a "Nicaragua hurricane relief" caravan that collected materials from 34 Kansas towns to be distributed in Nicaraguan villages ravaged by Hurricane Joan last October.

The Kansas Humanitarian Aid Campaign started in Lawrence Saturday morning and made stops in Topeka, Manhattan, Salina, and McPherson to collect donations. At Hutchinson, the final Kansas checkpoint, the materials were loaded onto a freight train.

Maggie Riggs, Hutchinson coordinator, said an estimated 30 tons of materials worth about $360,000 were donated.

"It was real impressive to see the solidarity of people working to help the Nicaraguans," Riggs said. "Something like this is really satisfying."

The aid campaign is an ongoing effort of the Kansas Network on Central America which consists of 12 organizations devoted to helping Central Americans.

Although the effort was designated to aid hurricane victims, Riggs said political motivations were involved.

"As far as I'm concerned, we have to work to change the way our government treats Nicaragua," she said. "We're all working hard politically, and when we can sidestep the bureaucracy, it's satisfying."

John Exdell, professor of philosophy and coordinator of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America, travelled to Hutchinson with the caravan.

"The hurricane stimulated the aid effort, because the destruction was tremendous," Exdell said. "But this is also to convey a message to people that Nicaragua is not our enemy, and our government has misled the U.S public about Nicaragua."

Riggs said a similar effort sponsored by Veteran's for Peace was halted at the Mexican border because guards said the aid was intended for the Sandinistas.

The incident resulted in a court ruling that stated shipments of humanitarian aid (clothing, medicine and medical supplies) can not be prohibited or regulated by the president or executive branch, Riggs said.

"We're doing all we legally can," she said.

Bill Dorsett, spokesman for the Kansas Network on Central America, has been involved with aid campaigns for three years. Dorsett, a member of the Quest for Peace organization that helped with Saturday's event, said the amount of aid given "was indescribable."

"There was more spirit and enthusiasm for giving than I expected," he said. "This is the second time I've helped with one of these events, and the effort was monumental."

Dorsett said much of the supplies come from hospitals.

"Some of the more valuable equipment we get is what hospitals would throw away otherwise," he said.

Riggs said the most impressive piece of equipment was a digital vascular scanner, which detects blood clots. Unusual donations included an accordion and a crate of soccer balls.

"The assortment was real empressive," she said. "We got wheelchairs, sheets and good, quality clothing, which is valuable to these people."

Dorsett said the response to this campaign was so great another shipment may be sent in six months.

"It makes so much more sense to do this as a group than individuaily, because the response is fantastic," he said.

Play portrays American life

'Bridge' fits style of Miller

By Mark Schreiner
Collegian Reviewer

The Alley Theatre presented Arthur Miller's tragedy, "A View from the Bridge," to a half-capacity crowd Friday night in McCain Auditorium.

Miller, an American playwright, wrote "Death of a Salesman" and is famous for his tragedies. "A View from the Bridge" fits the same mold.

The story is placed in the early 20th century in a slum within sight of the Brooklyn Bridge, thus the audience seems to get a view of American life, as it were, from the bridge.

The view isn't pretty.

Eddie, the protagonist, is a naturalized citizen working as a longshoreman whose household includes Catherine, his orphaned niece, and Beatrice, his second wife. Eddie had promised he'd care for Catherine, now 17 and pretty, but his care has grown incestuous, a taboo feeling he never admits to himself.

Eddie, dominating the house like Archie Bunker, trusts machines and technology and the crime syndicate which helps him get work. "Don't trust nobody," he tells Catherine. "Most people ain't people."

Catherine, as innocent as Dorothy in "The Wizard of Oz," is at the top of her post-high school stenography class and wants nothing more than to be a secretary in a big company, but Eddie wants her to marry up the social scale and leave the slums.

Things get complicated when Marco and Rudolpho, Beatrice's cousins from starving Italy, sneak into the country illegally and stay with the family.

Review

While Marco sends his earnings to his family in Italy, Rudolpho buys shoes and records and jackets. Because Eddie finds himself jealous when Rudolpho and Catherine fall in love, he insinuates that Rudolpho "ain't right" and is a homosexual.

He says he bases this claim on Rudolpho's wild blond hair and his ability to sing, sew and cook. Unwilling to admit he is in love with his own niece, but also unwilling to part with her, Eddie badgers Rudolpho and slanders him.

He tells Catherine that Rudolpho is only pretending to like her so he can become a citizen if they get married. She doesn't listen, and after Eddie finds her and Rudolpho alone in the house, he informs immigration officials about Rudolpho.

Marco calls Eddie a rat. Eddie denies it and demands an apology. In the final scene, Catherine and Rudolpho beg Marco and Eddie to forgive each other, to bless them and to come to the wedding, for which they are already late. But when Eddie draws a knife on Marco, Marco grabs his hand and Eddie ends up stabbing himself.

The play accurately represents America's belief in the value of work and the worth of money. "There is only one wonder here — work," Rudolpho says.

While "A View from the Bridge" is a tragedy and the main character dies, it also is funny and nearly every other line contains something humorously ironic.

Miller tries to redeem Eddie and his inability to admit his own feelings. "He was as good a man as he had to be," the narrator tells us.

"If he's a rat, then we all belong in the garbage," Beatrice says. "If he's done anything, it's nothing none of us haven't done."

He didn't have Sting to tell him that if he loves someone, set them free.

Lecture, concert to highlight American music festival week

By The Collegian Staff

Five concerts, three film screenings, a public lecture and assorted master classes will be offered this week as part of a five-day music festival, Panorama of American Music.

"(The Panorama) provides a forum for the performance of American music," Craig Parker, assistant professor of music.

Parker got the idea for Panorama when faculty members were asked to submit an idea for a week-long musical festival three years ago.

A lecture and concert by John Edward Hasse will highlight the third annual festival.

Hasse, a well-known pianist and musicologist, will present a public lecture on Hoagy Carmichael and American music at 1:30 p.m. Friday in McCain 204.

Friday at 8 p.m. in All Faiths Chapel, Hasse will close the 1989 Panorama with his lecture/recital "Ragtime and All that Jazz."

Tickets for the evening concert are priced at $5 for adults, $3 for students and senior citizens.

Originally, John Corigliano, who composed the music for the movie "Altered States," had planned to make several appearances throughout the week in conjunction with Panorama but cancelled, Parker said. No reason was given for the cancellation.

The Panorama begins today with a master class offered at 2 p.m. at Roosevelt School. The class will feature a question and answer session with Manhattan resident Tyler White.

White, a native of Atlanta, was raised in Manhattan where he was active as a violinist, violist and student conductor in the Manhattan High and KSU Orchestras. His work will be featured in concerts later this week.

White will also meet today with winners of the USD 383 composition contest.

At 8 p.m., the KSU Concert Jazz Ensemble under the direction of Ben Rohrer, instructor of music, will perform in Union Forum Hall.

Tuesday, White will meet with students from two K-State music classes. In addition, Tuesday will be highlighted by the works of Kansas students and professional composers.

A concert at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in ABOVE: Lighweight-class body builders participate during the finals of the first Big 8 Body Building Championships Saturday evening in McCain Auditorium. Thirty-four body builders competed in the various classes. RIGHT: Ruthann Thille, K-State graduate, and her partner Kevin Lynn Miller, senior in mathematics, compete in the mixed pair competition during the preliminaries in the afternoon. The duo won first place in this portion of the championship in the finals. BELOW: Greg Eberhardt, left, Endurance Onori and Jeff Heller, are compared by the judges before they each posed individually during the finals of the lightweight class. Onori went on to win first place in this class.

Bodies built

for Big Eight Championships

It could have been the dressing room at a swimming pool.

It was full of men in trunks and women in two-piece bathing suits, and the smell of baby oil and suntanning oil hung in the air. But the trunks were for posing and the oil was to make muscles seem rounder in the spotlight.

The Green Room in the basement of McCain Auditorium was converted for the day into the pump room for the first Big 8 Body Building Championships. Thirty-four body builders competed Saturday.

In the pump room, before the contestants went on stage, they oiled their tanned, shaved bodies until they shined, giving them an almost plastic appearance. Barbells and dumbbells were available so contestants could pump up their muscles. A last-minute workout temporarily enlarges the muscles as blood rushes to them.

While she lifted barbells to pump up, Lori Harris, who competed in the women's lightweight class, said she had not consumed water since Friday and had been eating mainly carbohydrates. The Topeka resident said her diet would help draw the water into her muscles.

"I do worry about the possible detrimental effects of tanning and water depletion," she said. "But, you can worry about something and still do it. Obviously, I'm not too worried about it."

Harris won her weight class as well as the overall women's championship.

David and Cathy Houghland, husband and wife from Leonardville, competed in the mixed pairs division, in which a man and woman pose at the same time. The Houghlands said they worried about some of the inherent dangers of the sport, but not much.

"There are a lot of things the average person does that aren't good for them, too," Cathy said. "Some people sit in front of the TV all day. I suppose that has its detrimental effects, too."

Premliminary judging began at 12:30 in the afternoon. Contestants posed on stage in groups designated by weight class and then completed a one-minute individual routine. The judging panel ranked their muscle size and symmetry as well as the fluidness of movements in their posing routines.

Starting about 7 p.m., the contestants entered the stage in front of a crowd of about 800. Each body builder posed to music for 90 seconds, and audience members shouted their approval for their favorites.

Before contestants walked on stage, they did push ups and helped each other stretch their muscles. They wished each other luck and offered congratulations after routines.

"It's competitive, but it's also a really friendly sport," said Bradley Myer, senior in electical engineering, who competed in the men's lightweight division. "It's all over by the time you get to competition day. Weight lifting stops about a week before (the competition), and you start working on your diet and posing. You're as big as you're going to get."

When the contestants left the spotlight and came off the stage, they were sweaty and out of breath. Shane Saia, a K-State graduate, said posing is exhausting.

"Your adrenaline gets flowing and you hit a peak," he said. "You have to strain a lot as you hit your poses. It's very tiring. That 90 seconds seems like a long time."

Saia was awarded second place in the men's heavyweight division.

Ruthann Thille, another K-State graduate, competed in the women's heavyweight class and mixed pairs. In mixed pairs, her partner was Kevin Lynn Miller, senior in mathematics.

Thille appeared close to tears as she left the stage clutching the first-place trophy for her weight class.

Miller gave her a congratulatory hug.

"What did I tell you? This makes the training worth it, doesn't it?" he asked.

She smiled and nodded.

Later Thille and Miller were awarded first place in the mixed pairs championship.

"This feels really good," Thille said, now holding two trophies. "I've only been lifting weights for five months. This makes all the work worthwhile."

She said she would complete again "if I don't eat too many M&Ms this summer."

Food was one of the first things on Miller's mind after he won the men's overall title. Off stage, as people gathered around him offering congratulations, he devoured a sweet roll.

Later, in the men's dressing room, as he pulled sweatpants over his posing trunks, he said, "The first thing I'm going to do is get after some pizza. I'll probably eat a lot for a couple of weeks, then get back into my diet."

He paused and looked at his trophy. "This is a sweet one," he said. "I'm just going to sit back and enjoy it awhile.

"In the end, you're not in competition against anyone but yourself. You have to make your own body the best that it can be. It's most important to me to know that I worked hard and dieted hard and lifted hard to get here.

"I know this is just a piece of metal," he said, caressing the trophy, "but, there's a lot of pride in it."

Soviet submarine explodes

Nuclear warheads on board

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union said Sunday that 42 sailors were killed when a nuclear-powered submarine caught fire and exploded in the Norwegian Sea, and it disclosed that two torpedoes on board were armed with nuclear warheads.

The official Tass news agency said the design of the warheads "completely rules out radiation threat during large-depth submergence. To ensure radiation safety, the nuclear-powered engine was stopped and the power unit was effectively blanked off."

It said the submarine carried 69 men and that only 27 of them survived.

The vessel went down in international waters 120 miles southwest of Norway's Bear Island and about 310 miles west of Tromsoe, on Norway's northern coast.

Scientists were gathering deep-water samples Sunday, and they placed equipment near the sunken ship that would monitor radiation levels for years.

The Soviets officially informed Norway of the accident nearly nine hours after the vessel went down. The Norwegian news agency NTB claimed Norwegian rescue helicopters could have reached the ship several hours before Soviet fishing vessels if the Soviets had promptly asked for help.

Soviet officials were criticized for not providing accurate or timely information after the 1986 explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant. That incident sent a cloud of radiation into the atmosphere, contaminating crops and livestock in Europe.

In Oslo, Defense Ministry spokesman Erik Senstad told the news conference the Soviets declined an offer of Sea King helicopters from a Norwegian rescue base 370 miles away, but he refused to say if more lives could have been saved.

In Moscow, the Soviet military newspaper Red Star reported Sunday that the submarine was on its way home when a fire broke out in a compartment.

"The crew bravely fought the fire and tried to save the ship," the newspaper report said, citing an interview with Capt. P. Ishchenko of the Northern Fleet. "The fight for life continued for more than five hours, but with no results."

The Norwegians said an explosion occurred on the ship after the fire spread and that the vessel then sank 4,500 feet.

"We believe that when a submarine is sunk (at that depth) of water, it will go to pieces because of the pressure," Senstad said.

Johan Baarli, head of the radiation protection institute, said the tests on the surface water showed a gamma radiation level at a natural level.

Military helps with oil cleanup, issues call for more equipment

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — Military jets flew skimmers, booms, and beach landing craft into Alaska on Sunday, and commanders issued a Pacific-wide call for more equipment to fight the nation's worst oil spill.

Kodiak, the nation's richest fishing port, prepared for the onslaught of oil by putting out log booms, but the Coast Guard said the leading edge of the spill, 60 miles away, retreated a bit and began breaking up into tar balls and sinking.

"That's good news," said Bill Lamoreaux, the state's on-scene coordinator.

The tanker Exxon Valdez ran aground on a reef near here March 24, spilling 10.1 million gallons of crude into Prince William Sound. The oil has spread into the Gulf of Alaska and fouled some of the many islands in the region.

On Friday, President Bush said he would send the military to help with the cleanup. Exxon Corp., which has been accused of moving too slowly to contain the spill, will continue to provide materials, manpower and money.

Also Sunday:

■ A 40-foot gray whale was found dead in an oil-fouled area. Wildlife experts said they hadn't determined whether it was the first whale to succumb to the spill that has already killed thousands of other animals.

■ Exxon said it was beginning to reimburse fishermen for losses from the cancellation of the herring season and had paid $250,000 to cover expenses for fishing boats attacking the spill on their own.

Coast Guard spokesman Rick Meidt said an Air Force general made a tour of the area and sent a call to bases around the Pacific to find out what was available and what the estimated time of arrival in Valdez would be.

The Coast Guard's Pacific commander, Vice Adm. Clyde Robbins, was joining the federal effort. Other experts dispatched by the Pentagon surveyed the cleanup, and with the help of the military, cleanup gear poured into Valdez.

"C5-A after C5-A is bringing in equipment," including skimmers, more booms and beach landing craft to move people to the oily shoreline, Meidt said.

The Navy sent barges outfitted as hotels so that when coastline cleanup gets under way, workers will be housed near where they are working.

The forecast called for continued northeast winds, which will keep the oil moving toward Kodiak, 300 miles from the accident site. Kodiak last year produced a fish catch worth $166 million.

But Meidt said, "When the helicopters go up, they're seeing streamers a couple of miles long and slicks that are breaking up at the edges."

Herring boats and Coast Guard cutters were dispatched to speed the breakup of the spill before it reaches Kodiak. At Seward, on the edge of a national park, a skimmer stood ready to protect inner bays and fish hatcheries.

Nationalists attacked

Clash in Soviet Georgia kills 16

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soldiers wielding shovels and clubs charged thousands of nationalist demonstrators in the capital of Soviet Georgia Sunday, activists said. The clash killed 16 people and injured 100, official sources said.

"They threw themselves on our people like beasts, and our people couldn't do anything," said Leda Archvadze in a telephone interview from Tbilisi, the southern republic's capital.

Tension has been building since Tuesday, when thousands of hunger strikers and protesters began pressing demands for Georgian independence from the Soviet Union. The Georgian nationalists also have accused the Kremlin of fomenting unrest among Georgia's ethnic Abkhazians, who are demanding more autonomy.

An official announcement on Georgian television said 16 civilians and soldiers had been killed and at least 100 people were injured, said a duty officer at the city executive committee.

The announcement included an appeal from the Georgian Communist Party for calm, said the duty officer, who refused to identify himself.

A man answering the telephone at Gruzinform, the official news agency of the southern Soviet republic, gave the same casualty count.

Official reports did not specify how many of the casualties were soldiers.

Archvadze said her information came from her brother-in-law, Svyad Gammsachurdia, a member of the Helsinki Watch Committee in Tbilisi, who had witnessed the clash. He was arrested at his home several hours later, she said.

Archvadze said the troops attacked about 10,000 unarmed demonstrators on Tbilisi's central Lenin Square with clubs and tear gas at about 3 a.m.

She said protesters claimed they were outnumbered at least 4-to-1.

A woman at the information desk of the Central Republic Hospital said her facility treated 57 people injured in the clash, most of them young people. She refused to identify herself.

Unofficial sources said many soldiers and tanks were still in the streets, and there were reports more were arriving. Soldiers and tanks were deployed Friday to the city of 1.2 million, which is 1,650 miles southeast of Moscow.

Authorities detained at least five activists, their relatives said. The five had been among the leaders of pro-independence rallies, which activists said had brought up to 100,000 people to the central square of Tbilisi over the past several days.

The five reported detained were Gammsachurdia; Georgy Chanturia, chairman of the National Democratic Party of Georgia, which started the hunger strike; Irina Sarishvili, a spokeswoman for that group; and Mirab Kostava and Irakly Batryashvili.

On Saturday, five to 10 tanks charged down the main street through a crowd of demonstrators in a show of force that did not succeed in clearing the streets. There were conflicting reports of injuries resulting from that clash.

Georgian nationalists contend that under Moscow's central control, Russians have encroached on their indigenous culture, language, politics and economy.

The military newspaper Red Star on Sunday said the demonstrations started with Georgian objections to Abkhazian extremists. Then leaders of unidentified "informal organizations" turned the young people in the crowd to nationalism and anti-Soviet slogans, the newspaper said.

KU shocks Wildcats, nearly gains sweep

Staff/Joe Freeman

K-State coach Mike Clark looks on in despair as KU scores five runs in the fifth inning and eventually defeated the Wildcats, 14-1, Sunday.

By Chris Wilhelm
and Scott Paske
Of Sports Staff

K-State went into this past weekend's four-game series with Kansas looking to win at least three games to keep its hopes of a Big Eight tourney berth alive. Instead, now KU's postseason hopes are looking very good as the Jayhawks took three of four games from K-State. Meanwhile, the Wildcats dropped to 2-6 in conference play and 19-9 overall.

K-State was without the services of two of its starting outfielders. Regular center fielder Sean Collins broke his hand and right fielder Bill Barnard injured his foot in the opening game of the series to account for most of the Wildcats' offensive woes in the final three games.

Sunday — KU 14, K-State 1

K-State hit just .166 and committed five errors in its final game of a four-game series with cross-state rival Kansas, as the Jayhawks run-ruled the 'Cats, 14-1, in seven innings Sunday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

The 'Hawks reached Wildcat pitchers for 13 hits in 45 plate appearances (.288) and committed only one error en route to their third victory of the four-game series.

"None of our pitchers have done a good job pitching under adversity this season," Jayhawk coach Dave Bingham said. "(Steve) McGinness did a good job today.

"We are a lot like K-State in that we are trying to rebuild our program. The early part of our schedule was tough. When you start the season 5-12, it's hard to gain confidence. I think we started to turn things around with our win in the last game of the Nebraska series."

While McGinness went the distance for Kansas, the Wildcats used four different pitchers, with starter Jim McClellan leaving after giving up seven runs on seven hits in four innings.

"I didn't really think our pitchers threw too bad today. They got a lot of ground balls and we just couldn't pick them up," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "I think the first inning set the tone of the ball game. They didn't get a hit and they scored a run. We load the bases with one out and can't get a run."

K-State looked to be getting off to a fast start in its half of the first, after KU jumped in front, 1-0, in the top of the inning.

Jeff Troll led off for the Wildcats by striking out, but Craig Wilson and Rusty Ringgenberg each singled, and designated hitter Kevin Kaufman drew a walk. The 'Cats had the bases loaded with just one out.

But the next two batters seemed to set the K-State tempo for the rest of the day as Mike Rosenboom popped out to the shortstop and Brad Ripplemeyer was called out on strikes to end the inning. From there, KU starter McGinness gave up only two more Wildcat hits as K-State's offense went silent.

All of the 'Cat hits in the game were singles, and no K-Stater had more than one hit in the contest.

"We're going to make a couple of lineup changes," Clark said. "A couple of people didn't stand up and show me what I needed to see. We put them up in front of a fight and they backed down.

"We'll see how things go in our next series at Columbia, (Missouri, against the Tigers). If they go well, great. If not, we'll play more freshmen and sophomores. Our young guys are the future of this team and we have some good ones."

Jeff Mentel had the best day at the plate for either team, as he went 2 of 3 with two doubles, two walks and 3 RBIs.

The 'Cats used an explosive offensive display to win the opener, 11-8, but Kansas responded by sweeping a doubleheader Saturday, 4-3 and 6-4, to guarantee a split and allow the Jayhawks to stay ahead of K-State in the Big Eight race.

Saturday, 1 — KU 4, K-State 3

Wildcat ace David Hierholzer pitched masterfully for the final six innings of Saturday's seven-inning opener, but a shaky start provided Kansas with enough offense to hold off a late K-State rally in a 4-3 Jayhawk win.

Kansas used a pair of infield singles and a walk to load the bases in the top of the first. The junior pitcher then made his only major mistake of the day, leaving a fast ball over the heart of the plate which Jayhawk left fielder Dan Benninghoff ripped over the right field fence for a grand slam and an early 4-0 KU lead.

KU starter Craig Mulcahy held the 'Cats in check for four innings, allowing just two hits while striking out four. Control problems caught up with the senior in the fifth, however, as he walked three straight batters. Craig Stoppel came on in relief, and Rosenboom greeted him with a two-run double down the right field line. The 'Cats managed to load the bases again later in the inning, but Stoppel got David Amaro to fly out and end the rally.

K-State tallied again in the sixth on a sacrifice fly by Ringgenberg, but Jayhawk reliever Curtis Shaw came in to retire the final four batters and preserve the win.

The win was Kansas' second in the past 10 contests between the two teams and fifth in the past 20. Mulcahy improved to 2-4 with the victory while Hierholzer suffered his first loss of the year and dropped to 4-1.

Saturday, 2 — KU 6, K-State 4

Jayhawk right fielder Mentel went 4-for-5, including a two-run homer in the top of the ninth to give Kansas a 6-4 win and sweep of the twin bill. More importantly, the victory gave KU a two-game cushion over K-State in the Big Eight race.

Kansas built a 4-0 lead over the first three innings behind first baseman Tom Buchanan's two-run blast in the top of the first off K-State starter Jeff Peterson. The Jayhawks then turned the game over to starter Steve Renko, who overpowered the K-State offense with a KU record nine strikeouts in five innings of work.

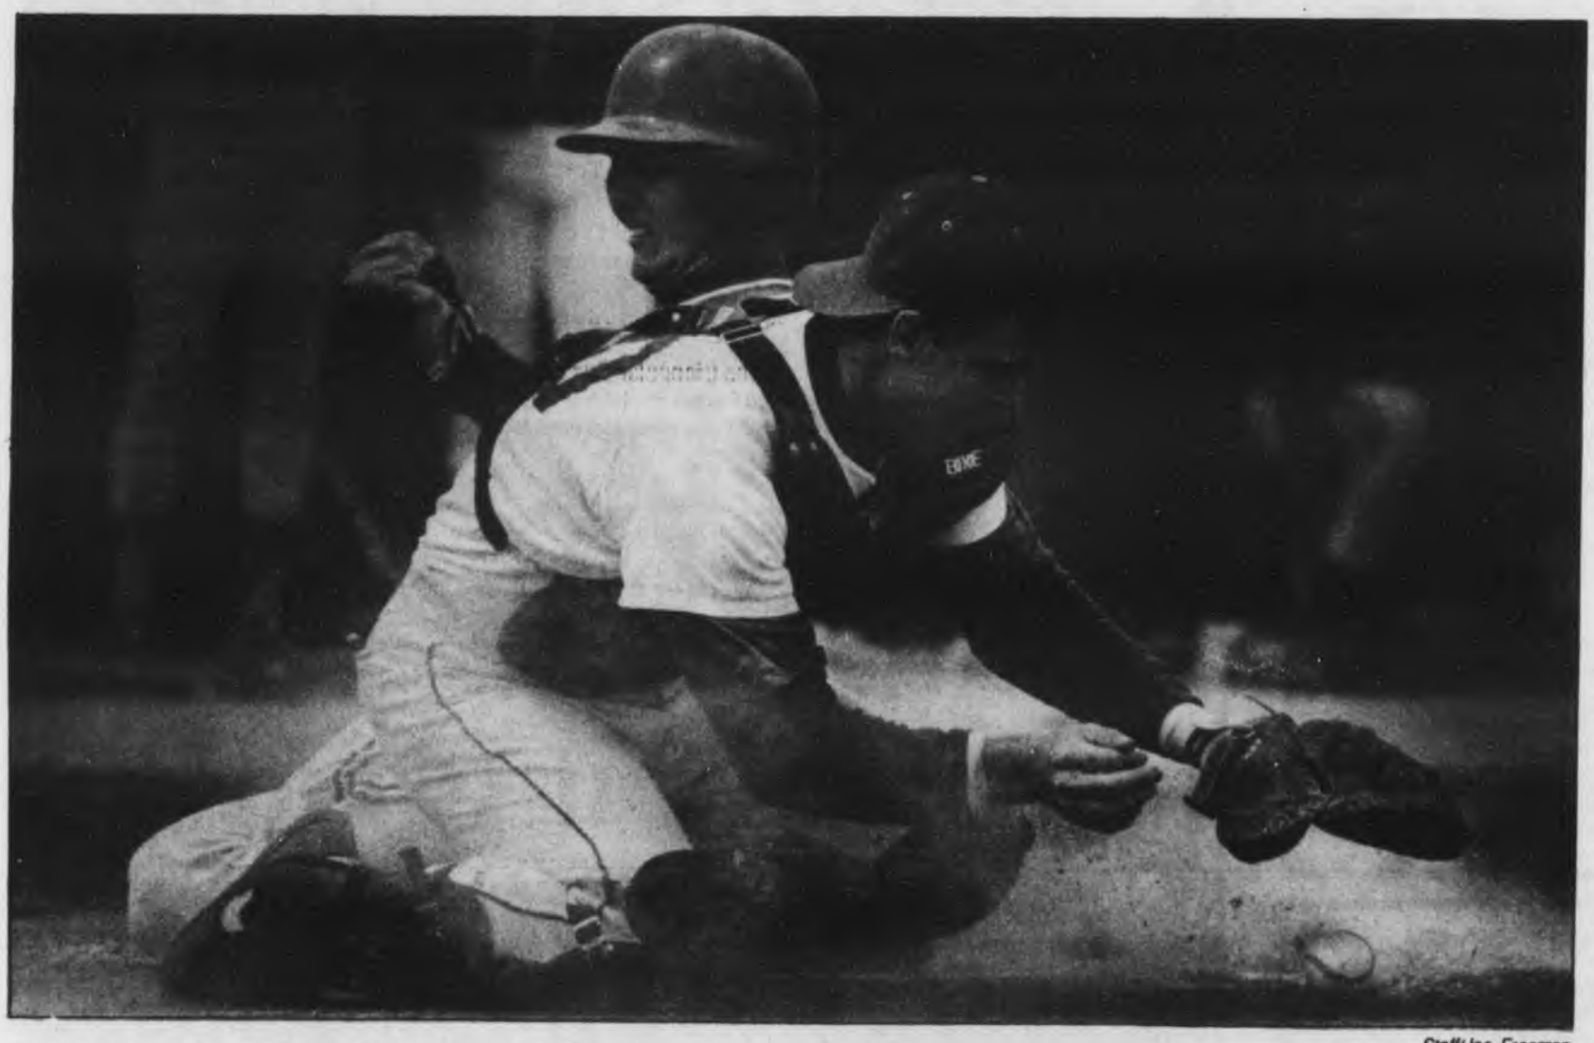
Like Mulcahy in the opening game, Renko fell victim to control problems as K-State threatened in the fifth. Trailing 4-1, the 'Cats used back-to-back hits by Ringgenberg and Kaufman to tie the game. The Wildcats loaded the bases later in the inning, but Renko got pinch hitter Ron Bradshaw to ground into a fielder's choice to end the rally. The 'Cats failed to get a runner past first base the rest of the way.

Friday — K-State 11, KU 8

K-State picked up its 1,000th career victory since beginning the sport in 1897 with an 11-8 win.

The win was anything but pretty as the 'Cats had to overcome six errors, 10 walks and two-hit batsmen. K-State did so by tagging Jayhawk ace Brad Hinkle for six runs in the third, with the big blow coming from first baseman Rosenboom. He smashed a three-run shot over the right field fence after Hinkle had given up three walks and a sacrifice fly by Barnard.

The 'Cats extended the lead in the bottom of the fifth when third baseman Rippelmeyer deposited his first home run of the season over the trees behind the left field fence. Rippelmeyer was the offensive standout for K-State, going 3-for-4 with five RBIs.



K-State added insurance runs in the seventh and eighth to preserve the win for Jim Haller, who improved to 3-2.

NOTES:

■ K-State will make up a previously rained out contest with Emporia State today at 7 p.m. The two team will play a single, nine-inning game at Frank Myers Field.

■ Three Wildcats will have X-rays performed today after suffering injuries during the weekend series with KU. Sean Collins has what is thought to be a broken bone in his hand, Bill Barnard has a bruised foot and Jeff Troll suffered a hand injury that has yet to be diagnosed.

■ Friday night, the Wildcats begin a four-game road series with Big Eight foe Missouri in Columbia. The Tigers and the Wildcats have identical 2-6 conference marks.

K-State catcher Dan Skala couldn't handle David Amaro's throw from right field as KU's Jeff Mentel slides by to score Sunday at Frank Myers Field. KU took three of four games from the 'Cats this past weekend. K-State's record dropped to 19-9 and 2-6 in the Big Eight.

Faldo wins green jacket in playoff

By The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Nick Faldo won the Masters with a 25-foot birdie putt on the second extra hole Sunday after Scott Hoch missed a two-footer for the title on the previous hole.

Faldo, a former British Open champion and eight times a runner-up in tournaments around the world last year, lifted both arms high in the air and howled in triumph when the winning putt found the cup.

The Englishman, who lost the 1988 U.S. Open in a playoff, secured the victory in the gathering gloom of early evening at Augusta National.

Twice, however, he benefitted when Hoch blew short putts that would have won it.

The first came on the 17th hole of regulation play when he made a great recovery shot to the green, then missed a three-foot par putt, dropping him out of sole control of the lead and, eventually, led to the playoff.

The other was even more telling and will be one of the memorable misses in golf history.

With daylight running out, Hoch had an even shorter putt for par, which would have won it outright on the first playoff hole.

After stalking it from every possible vantage point, he pulled it, the ball lipping out. It matched Faldo's earlier bogey and they went to the next playoff hole, where Faldo rolled in the long one.

Both drove the fairway in the drizzling rain. Faldo went for the pin, ignoring the pond on the left of the 11th green. He got it about 25 feet below the hole.

Hoch put his approach to the right, with the ball skipping off the sodden putting surface and running down an embankment.

He chipped up to about six feet and had that left for par when Faldo ran in the birdie that secured the green jacket that goes to the winner.

Bosox down Royals, 8-6

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Boston finally got going Sunday and Wade Boggs had four hits to help lead the way.

"We just have to start plugging away. You have to win the first one to start something big," he said after the Red Sox beat the Kansas City Royals, 8-6, for their first victory of the season after four straight losses.

Kansas City blew a 4-0 lead and made three errors. Boston rallied with a six-run seventh inning highlighted by Ellis Burks' three-run triple.

"We've got a good offense," said Boggs, who singled in the seventh for his 1,400th career hit. "We're going to score some runs."

John Dopson, 1-0, got the victory with 5 2-3 innings of relief.

Absurdity, ignorance prevalent in discussion of referendum

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Let's beat a dead horse one more time.

Before we do so, however, I want something known up front. I like what I've seen of Laurian Cuffy since he's been student body president and don't hesitate to call him my student body president.

That having been said, here it goes.

Now, just under two weeks since the athletic fee "died," I'd like to address a few things I heard at the Student Senate meeting March 28 that were enough to make me sick to my stomach.

I probably would have blown my cookies right there in the Union's Big Eight Room had I not been laughing so hard at the absurdity of the recurring statements.

One of the babblings went something like this: "The students have spoken. They're obviously against the fee, and they've shown it more than once. We shouldn't even be considering something the students are so obviously against."

How can anyone in his or her right mind claim that the failure of the athletic fee to be passed in referendum is an obvious sign the students are against the fee?

Didn't the students who voted in this referendum — and an earlier one — vote in favor of the proposal by a majority? Seems to me they did, and did it twice.

With the Student Senate Constitution written the way it is, requiring a two-thirds majority for passage if fewer than one-third of the student body votes in a referendum, the fee was destined to die a constitutional death even before students voted. Previous and obvious apathy on the part of the student body in such elections made that plainly clear.

The aforementioned absurd statement, if made in another way, could have sounded like this: "The students have spoken. They're obviously against (Laurian Cuffy/Troy Lubbers/fill in your favorite student body president or senator's name here), and they've shown it more than once. We shouldn't even have a student body president or senators that students are so obviously against."

That's a pretty ignorant statement, isn't it?

So why is it, then, that a student body president can be elected by a minority of students on this campus who are ardently in favor of a candidate and had the conviction to get off their posteriors to get out and vote, and an athletic fee can't be passed in the same situation.

You can't make me buy the fact that Cuffy might not have still been elected student body president had the entire student body voted, and you'll never make me buy the fact that the athletic fee might not have passed if they had done the same thing here.

But to make the opposite claim, that Cuffy is the president of the entire student body of K-State is equally absurd; that is, if you follow the earlier faulty line of reasoning.

Cuffy was elected student body president by 1,186 students of a total of 2,102 who voted. The athletic fee was supported by 2,506 students, more than the total that voted in the student body president runoff election.

And yet, there's no one out there saying things like "when you look at the raw figures, 7 percent of the student body is all that voted for Cuffy, so the other 93 percent must be against him." But that's what you got from more than one senator the night the fee died.

Cuffy is still the student body president, though, isn't he? What an incredible double standard. The fear of ballot box stuffing and the desires to protect a minority are admirable traits that no doubt led to the consitutional amendment in question, but it's just as easy for minority students to elect a Cuffy as it is for supporters of athletics to pass an athletic fee, now, isn't it?

The argument that "only X percent of the student body voted for the fee, so the other X percent (larger number) must be against it" is dumb-dee-dumb-dumb, dumb.

And "dumb" seems to be the four-letter word that summarizes this whole mess best.

Coach impressed with crew's ability despite placing

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

On paper, the K-State crew club turned in a rather average performance at the Sunflower State Championships in Wichita Saturday, but given the club's inexperience, Coach Don Rose had good reason to be excited with the way his youngsters rowed.

"Straight across the board, I think we did a whale of a job," Rose said. "To have as many first-time rowers as we do this year, row as well as they did is just unheard of. I didn't know they could come through under pressure."

K-State's day was highlighted by the experienced tandem of Kurt Becker and Troy Kolb, who teamed to win the men's pair event. The two easily outdistanced second-place Wichita State by nearly 25 seconds, with a time of 5:21.4 minutes on the Arkansas River's 1400-meter course.

K-State's men's varsity eight finished in second place with a time of 4:06.4, barely losing to WSU, which finished in 4:05.5.

"The men's varsity eight is a Cinderella boat for sure," Rose said. "We have only three holdovers from last year's winning boat. Two of our men were rowing in only the third race of their lives.

"They are in their first semester of rowing and rowing is not an easy sport to learn."

Rose also said that just the coxswain remained in the same position that he rowed in at the Washington Crew Classic in St. Louis last week; the other seven changed positions.

"We felt we had to make a move," Rose said. "I can't remember a time when I've ever seen a situation like this and I've been connected with crew since 1948. I'm impressed and so very, very pleased."

The women's varsity eight also finished second, which Rose said was a strong improvement from recent weeks.

"The varsity women just joined the other three teams with renewed swing and fight, after not-so-good races in our first two regattas," he said.

Overall, K-State was second in five races. Here is a brief recap of the events in which K-State placed:

Sunflower State Championships

Men's pair — 1. K-State (Becker-Kolb) 5:21.4, 2. WSU 5:46.8.

Men's varsity 8 — 1. WSU 4:05.5, 2. K-State 4:06.4, 3. KU 4:19.2.

Women's varsity 8 — 1. KU 4:09.0, 2. K-State 4:18.0, 3. WSU 4:20.6.

Men's JV 8 — 1. KU-A 4:16.1, 2. K-State 4:18.4, 3. WSU 4:18.5.

Women's freshmen 8 — 1. KU-A 5:01.9, 2. K-State 5:05.9, 3. KU-B Disqualified.

Men's freshmen 8 — 1. WSU 4:17.1, 2. K-State 4:23.4, 3. KU 4:36.8.

Netters handed defeat, 9-0

O-State team ranked first in Big Eight

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat netters took a hard loss Sunday in Ahearn Field House as they fell to Oklahoma State, 9-0.

Going into Sunday's competition, the Cowgirls, who have won eight straight league titles, were ranked No. 9 in the nation and first in the Big Eight Conference.

Competition was close in several spots, including Sara Hancock's match at No. 3 singles, Annika Emtell at No. 6 singles, and Emtell and Thresa Burcham at No. 3 doubles. However, Coach Steve Bietau said Oklahoma State was in the position to force mistakes.

"They put you in the situation where just getting the ball back is not enough," he said. "Inconsistencies on our part were forced by them ... to a great extent."

Another factor was that the pressure to play at a constantly high level became extremely tiring. According to Bietau, this was a large part of the problem in the doubles matches.

"We're not used to having to work that hard and hit that many good shots in a row to win the point," he said. "Frequently we played what we thought was a good point and then see the ball come back and be surprised by it."

The 'Cats also had trouble staying on the offensive attack and were many times forced to take the defensive position. There were some instances in which Bietau thought K-State conceded too much. However, he cited Hancock as being the perfect example of being able to attack and take command, and said that she played some of the best tennis he's seen from her. She was defeated by Oklahoma State's Danielle Jones, 7-6, 6-3.

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf

K-State tennis player Helen Schildknecht returns a shot against Oklahoma State's Monika Wainek Sunday in Ahearn Field House.

Hancock was pleased with her first set, but said she lost some of her concentration and the dominating position in the last sets.

"In the second set she changed her tactics, and I lost some of my momentum, and I felt the change," Hancock said. "Looking back now I realize I should have kept attacking, but I stepped back a bit. Playing a team like O-State, they're so tough that you can't afford to do that."

Bietau said the match provided some valuable experience, and taught the team the importance of playing offensively, and that against good teams, it isn't enough just to play defensively.

The match brought Oklahoma State's Big Eight record to 3-0, having also beat Kansas, 8-1, Saturday, and Missouri, 9-0, last week.

The Wildcats will continue their Big Eight season at 2 p.m. today at the L.P. Washburn tennis courts against Oklahoma.

According to Bietau, the Sooners will be tough, but not unbeatable. He ranks them close to KU, which downed K-State, 6-3, Wednesday.

"They're a very good team," he commented. "It's certainly a tough team to play, and a difficult match for us to win, but also one that we're capable of winning."

Omaha tournament takes toll on ruggers

By The Collegian Staff

The weekend was tough on the K-State rugby squad with three of the club members suffering injuries that could put them out for Saturday's competition against the Kansas City Blues.

Veterans Steve Duncan and Isaac Madison, centers, and Pat Sherman, fullback, were all injured during the team's semi-final appearance in the Omaha Tournament.

"We had to replace them with rookies and that really hurt our back line," said Darrel Loder, wing forward. "We only had one real veteran (on our club team) in the final game."

The club team lost in its final match to the GOATS, 14-0, and took second in the tournament.

The collegiate side placed fourth in the tournament after a win against Northern Iowa and a loss to both Nebraska and Iowa State.

"We did use a lot of rookies. (After the injuries) we barely had enough to have both sides. A couple of us had to double over (and play both sides)," Loder said.

The squads will take on the Blues at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, at the rugby field just west of Dick Edwards Ford on East Highway 24.

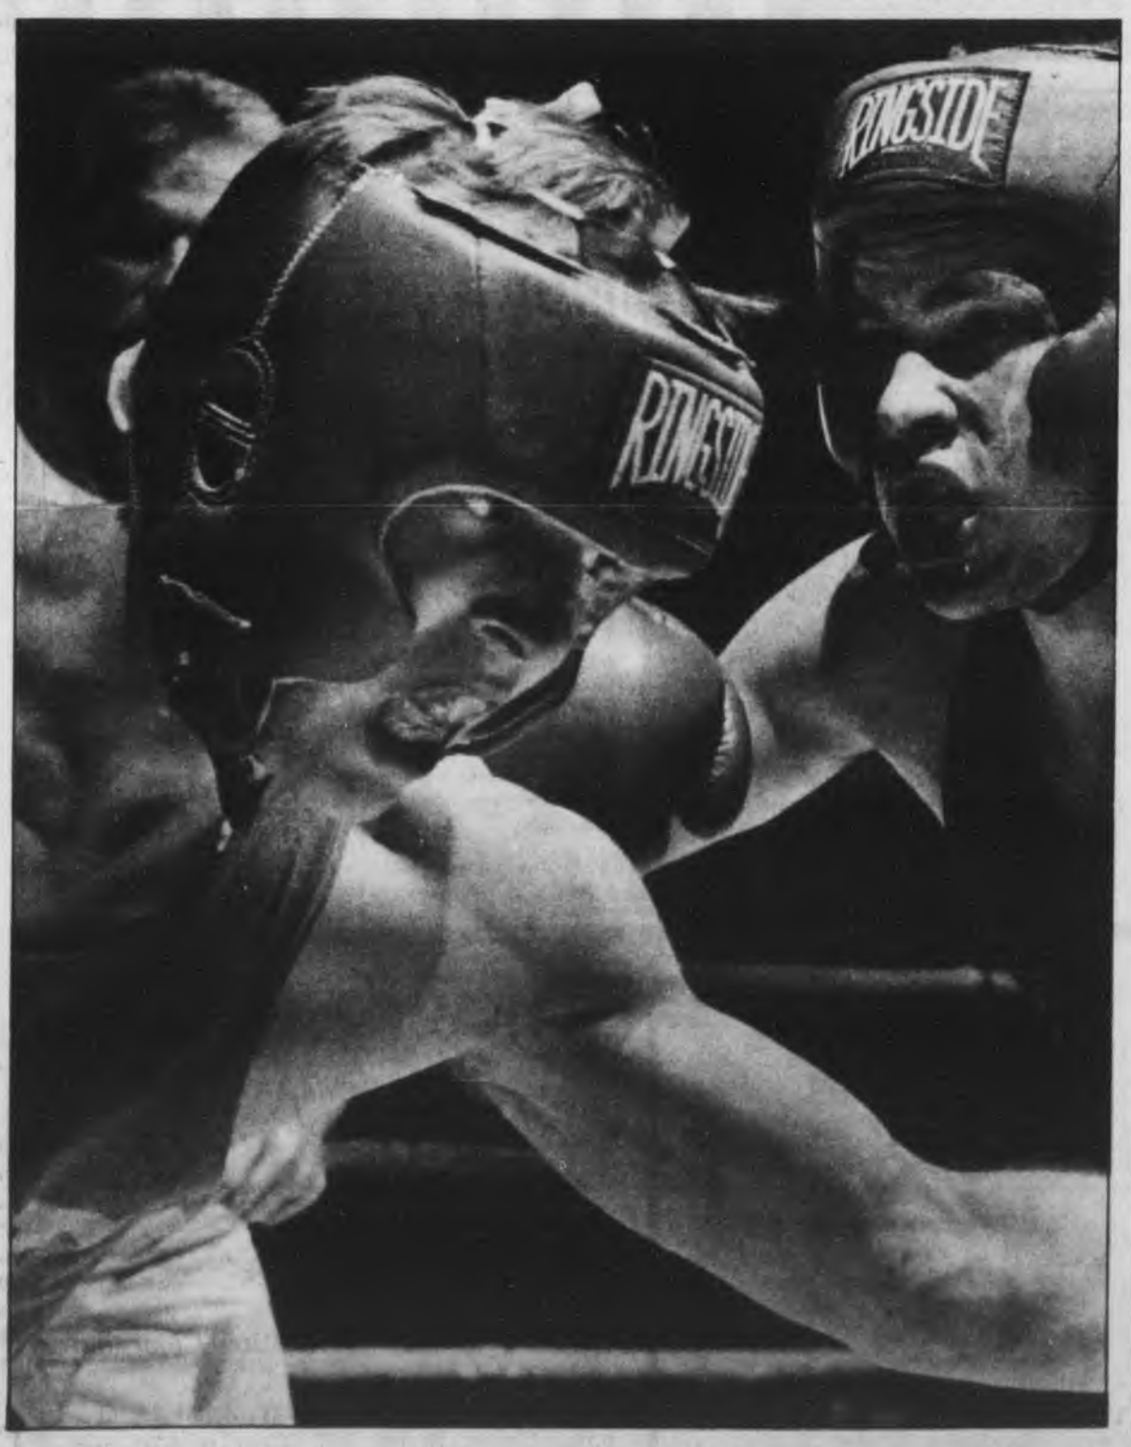
"(The Blues) are usually a pretty physical match," Loder said.

Soccer club loses 3

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State soccer club was the host for this year's Big Eight men's soccer tournament which was played at Frank Anneberg Park and Memorial Stadium.

K-State lost all three of its matches, however. In game one, Oklahoma took a 1-0 decision from the Wildcats. K-State then continued to lose the close one, as Colorado defeated the Wildcats, 2-1, as did Missouri, 1-0.



"We didn't get blown out or anything," soccer coach Robert Healy said, "but it's kind of disappointing to lose. We had some heartbreakers.

"We lack a lot of experience. We have a lot of freshmen and sophomores and we needed a little more leadership experience on the field, like the other teams had."

In the semifinals, Kansas downed Missouri, 1-0, and Colorado beat Nebraska by the same score to set up the finals matchup between KU and Colorado.

And the Buffaloes proved no match for the 'Hawks, as KU cruised to a 3-0 victory to take the crown.

The K-State soccer club will play three games this weekend. Friday night, Creighton will be at Anneberg Park for a 7 p.m. matchup. The club then travels to Emporia State for a game Saturday, before coming back home to face Central Missouri State at 2 p.m. Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

Golf team travels to Missouri

By The Collegian Staff

After shooting some rather subpar scores at the Wichita State Invitational last week, the K-State men's golf team will be looking to improve considerably today and Tuesday at the Missouri Intercollegiate at Tantara.

"The guys want to regroup and are looking at redeeming themselves after bad weather kept scores high at Wichita," K-State coach Russ Bunker said. "They can play a lot better. I know they can shoot a heck of a lot better scores."

The squad placed third at Wichita with a 54-hole team score of 952.

Senior Daran Neuschafer will be making his first trip with the team, replacing John Shields in the lineup.

"Daran's been playing well and we're looking for some more experience from him," Bunker said.

> "I know they can shoot a heck of a lot better scores."
> — Russ Bunker golf coach

The rest of the squad will be the same as in the first two tourneys and includes Troy Keller, Jeff Sedorcek, Brad Stephens and Brett Vuillemin.

"I really look for Jeff Sedorcek to come back at this tourney," Bunker said. "He was really disappointed with his scores at Wichita."

Bunker said there will be approximately 24 teams at Tantara, with several Big Eight Conference teams slated to compete. The tournament will consist of two 18-hole rounds each day.

"This will be our first crack at the other Big Eight schools this spring," Bunker said. "We are anxious to see how we stack up."

The K-State women will be back in action at the Nebraska Invitational, April 17-18.

Track teams win in duels vs. Idaho

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Even though track coach John Capriotti was able to take only 23 athletes to the Washington State triangular in Pullman, Wash., Saturday, K-State was still able to pick up a victory over Idaho.

The triangular was organized in a dual format and both the K-State men and women defeated Idaho, 73-57 and 72-46, respectively, while losing to host Washington State, 91-74 and 85-51.

"The numbers game really caught up to us because we didn't really bring enough people to win the meet," Capriotti said. "But every event we entered in we won with the exception of one, so both teams competed well. I'm really pleased with our performances."

The men were led by double winner Dan O'Mara. O'Mara set a meet record with a throw of 184-3 feet in the discus and he also won the shot put with a heave of 54-11. Both marks were seasonal bests for the K-State senior.

"Dan is starting to come around," Capriotti said. "He threw really well, especially since it wasn't a very good wind for the discus."

The 1600-meter relay team of Corey King, Tyrone Watkins, Ray Hill and Sean Banks posted a meet record time of 3:11.41 minutes. That mark is the second fastest K-State time ever, just .25 seconds slower than the record time of 3:11.16, which was set in 1987.

"They won by almost 100 yards," Capriotti said of the relay team. "They get some good competition and I think they can run 3.05 or 3.06, hopefully."

Clifton Etheridge turned in a solid performance in his first long jump competition of the season, winning the event with a leap of 23-5½ , and Brad Speer continued his stretch of wins in the high jump, soaring 7-0½ .

The 400-meter relay team of Chuckie Allen, Hill, Darrell Wyatt and Watkins also picked up a first-place finish in a time of 41.47. Wyatt also won the 100 meters in 10.7, his second straight victory in that event.

Pat Hessini captured the 1500 meters in 3:51.46, while teammate Brian Zwahlen was right behind in 3:51.91. Also picking up a victory for the Wildcats was David Warders in the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:34.23, while Pat Allen won the javelin with a season-best toss of 210-2.

The K-State women also had a double winner in Kim Kilpatrick. Kilpatrick, the Big Eight leader in the 100-meter hurdles, set a meet record in her specialty, winning the event in 14.2. Kilpatrick then set another meet record in the 400-meter hurdles. It was the first time Kilpatrick had entered the event this season, and she did it in impressive fashion, winning with a time of 1:02.11.

Kilpatrick also ran on the women's winning 400-meter relay team with Joy Jones, Markeya Jones and Latricia Joyner. The relay squad posted a time of 45.66, with which Capriotti was extremely pleased.

"That is a really good run for this time of year and in that kind of cold weather," he said. "They were just off the national qualifying time (45.34) and I expect them to get that in the next couple of weeks. I expect this team to be, possibly in the NCAA finals."

Joy Jones won the 200 meters in 24.83 and also turned in a personal best time of 54.93 to finish third in the 400 meters.

"Joy Jones had some really good races," Capriotti said. "I was pleased with the way she ran, getting a PR (personal record) in the open quarter in pretty strong wind."

Kim Richeson won the long jump with a leap of 17-3 and finished second in the triple jump at 35-9½ , while Angie Miller won the discus with a throw of 143-8 and finished second in the shot put with a put of 44-7½ , and Greta Semsroth, who set the K-State javelin record last week at 172-11, recorded the second best K-State throw ever with a first-place heave of 171-9.

The remainder of the K-State squad traveled to Oklahoma State to compete in the Ralph Higgins Invitational. Coming away with wins in Stillwater were Debbie Schmidt in the javelin with a toss of 149-7 and Amy Dryer in the discus with a throw of 147-9.

Fisher reportedly will be named coach

By The Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Steve Fisher, who in 20 remarkable days guided Michigan to the NCAA basketball championship, will be named coach of the Wolverines at a news conference Monday, The Associated Press learned Sunday.

The move will come one week after the 44-year-old Fisher coached the Wolverines to the national title with an 80-79 overtime victory over Seton Hall.

Sources close to the team, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Sunday that Fisher was the only candidate interviewed by Bo Schembechler, the football coach who also is athletic director.

"Until the tournament, he hadn't seen me do much of anything," Fisher said Saturday.

Professor to participate in program

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages and director of study abroad, has been selected to participate in a United States-Soviet Union summer exchange program of language teachers.

The program, administered through the International Research and Exchanges Board, is funded by the United States Information Agency.

Kolonosky said IREX is an exchange program directed mainly toward Eastern Europe.

"IREX is like a subcontracter for every appropriation made to the United States Information Agency," Kolonosky said. "Each year Congress appropriates money to the United States Information Agency. One of the things that the Agency does is fund these types of accounts. IREX is one of these accounts."

This will be Kolonosky's third visit to the Soviet Union.

"I made a trip in 1969 and 1979, so it seems fitting that I get to return again in 1989," he said.

Kolonosky and 29 other participants will spend from mid-June to mid-August at the University of Moscow, attending lectures, participating in discussions and conferring with Soviet colleagues who teach Russian as a foreign language.

Near the end of the program, he will present a paper titled "A Hedge Against Translation" to the other 29 participants in the program and their Soviet counterparts.

"Each one of us will be given an opportunity to read a paper at this time," he said. "It will have to do with how to offer a course to students and circumvent the problem of the translation.

"There's always a translation available (on famous books). I'm trying to suggest a way around students just reading the translation by closely formulating questions on the text that make it impossible to answer these questions without reading the book."

He said he is especially anxious to visit the Soviet Union "in this atmosphere of glasnost (openness) and perestroika (restructuring). With greater access to the archives of the Lenin Library, I can get a lot accomplished."

Kolonosky said he will be able to look at some letters in the Lenin Library that haven't been published before.

"I also know that there is a folklore archive that has been opened recently," he said. "Those are two areas that I want to look into carefully.

"If Gorbachev's reforms mean a turning point in the development of socialism, I have an opportunity to take a close look at history in the making."

speaking to a group or a large crowd."

Albert, from Beloit, said participation in the pageant program has helped her attain knowledge and confidence in herself, as well as the ability to cope with stressful situations.

"There are many good points and attributes to the pageant program," she said. "The positive aspects last a lifetime."

Miss Southwest Kansas, Sallie Withers, said she entered her pageant as a learning experience and for the opportunity of a scholarship.

"I enjoy the opportunity to meet new people," said Withers, a sophomore in social work. "It is rewarding in the fact that you may meet people that will come across your path again."

Withers said getting along with people you like and dislike is important in a social work career. The work done for the pageant's one-on-one interviews has been helpful in preparing for the social work field.

"Enthusiasm is the best way to describe what it is all about," Withers said.

Amy Hiett, Miss Troia-Thomas County, was formerly a Miss Kansas Junior Miss. A native of Colby, she is a freshman majoring in psychology and mass communication.

Hiett said she was encouraged by an acquaintance at the local level to compete.

"(The pageant experience) has given me a lot of interview experience," she said. "I've learned a lot about speaking in front of crowds.

"I've also found out a lot about myself — a little more of what I can do."

greek affairs, said the problem for the AGDs originated with its colonization in 1985, which occurred at the time when the K-State sorority system started to expand. In 1986, the nationals had promised the local chapter a house within a year, she said.

"The national officers promised to have competitive, or comparable, housing (in K-State's greek system)," Robel said. "They did not follow through with that promise."

"We're hurt because we were not given the opportunity to continue. (The international officers) just felt it was in our best interest and we didn't agree," Schraeder said. "We've stuck together this long and this is the group that really deserves a pat on the back."

The sorority does have the option to recolonize at a future date, but does not foresee that happening any time soon, she said.

Police recover car, stereo components stolen from campus

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

A 1988 Camaro IROC Z and numerous stereo components stolen on campus Saturday night were recovered Monday night in Topeka, said Campus Police Chief Charles Beckom.

Topeka Police recovered the car and a trunkload of stereo equipment about 9 p.m., but Beckom said it was unknown how much equipment was recovered or if any suspects have been arrested.

"At this time we don't know. It will be a few days before we process the evidence and get enough information we can use," he said.

Police reports show eight vehicles parked in lots B-2 and B-3 were burglarized and an IROC in the Goodnow/Marlatt parking lot was stolen sometime Saturday night.

"From what we've pieced together, we are working under the assumption it was a group of highly organized individuals," Beckom said.

"They were looking for specific high-dollar items, most definitely with the intention of reselling the equipment," he said.

The total value of the stolen items was estimated at about $3,000, Beckom said.

Police reports show the burglarized cars had their windows broken, allowing access. Some of the items taken along with the stereo equipment, included cassette tapes, parking permits, fishing tackle and a stuffed animal.

Campus Investigator Richard Herrman is expected to meet with Topeka Police today to recover the car and equipment.

In what appears to be an unrelated incident, three juveniles were detained Sunday night after being caught with stolen stereo equipment and burglary tools in lot B-3W.

Beckom said no connection between the equipment possessed by the juveniles and Saturday's burglaries has been established.

"The equipment they had was more of 'mail-order' stuff," he said. "They may have been involved in some earlier thefts on campus, but not necessarily this weekend."

Beckom said the recovered components had identification marks such as serial numbers scratched off. He estimated the value of the equipment at "roughly $300."

The juveniles were "roaming the lot," he said, and hadn't stolen any equipment Sunday night.

Two students were arrested in March for auto burglaries, but only one of the stereo components recovered from the arrests was stolen on campus.

Since the arrests, an additional $2,073 in stereo equipment and other items have been stolen from cars on campus. In addition, $190 worth of vehicular damage has been reported, not including the burglaries Saturday night. So far this semester, car burglaries have accounted for $8,273 worth of stolen items, and more than $1,840 in damage has been reported.

Beckom said he had offered to extend officers' hours to allow for extra surveillance in lot B-3 and B-2 for a week beginning last Friday, but no one accepted.

"I would have compensated for the extra hours, and this would have been a one-time thing," he said. "I can't pay overtime for what is part of an officer's duty during the regular hours, which is to apprehend those who have been committing these burglaries."

Beckom said he wanted to increase surveillance beginning Friday because "the conditions were right."

"There were a lot of extra people around because of the circus and Fight Nite, and patterns of burglaries around the area told us the group might be on campus," he said.

Beckom said the same individuals responsible for the thefts on campus are likely to have been involved in burglaries in Junction City and Fort Riley.

North defends use of Iran-Contra fund

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oliver North, seemingly struggling to keep his temper, on Monday defended his stewardship of an Iran-Contra cash fund and insisted the money he paid for a used car came from a $15,000 family cache in a metal box bolted to a closet floor.

At the start of cross examination at his trial, North said he kept track in a spiral-bound notebook of every penny he disbursed from the Iran-Contra fund which totaled between $240,000 and $300,000.

"The ledger is still around?" asked prosecutor John Keker.

"It was destroyed," North said.

"Do you know who destroyed it?"

"Yes," he said. "I did."

Earlier Monday, North testified that former President Reagan and his attorney general, Edwin Meese III, concealed U.S. involvement in a November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran.

In a meeting on Nov. 12, 1986, Reagan clearly "had made a decision not to disclose" the shipment, North said.

The president told a news conference on Nov. 19 — a week after that meeting — that the government had not been involved with other nations in shipping weapons to Iran and that the United States had shipped none before he signed a January 1986 authorizing document. Immediately afterward, the White House put out a statement in which Reagan said a third country had been involved.

North testified that he assumed Reagan had known of the diversion of Iran arms sale funds to the Contras, a contention Reagan has denied.

The former National Security Council aide was asked by his own lawyer about NSC documents North and his former secretary, Fawn Hall, smuggled out of the White House complex about the time North was fired.

North, who destroyed stacks of other documents around that time in November 1986, said he wanted the papers so "that I would have something to show if necessary, to show I had authority from my superiors for activities that I was engaged in."

The papers, some taken out by North in the days before the Iran-Contra affair became public and some by Hall after the firing, totaled 196 pages.

Asked about one note, which he had written to superiors on Dec. 9, 1985, North said it "clearly articulates what process the United States was up to" — the process North was involved in — in approaching Iran in hopes of gaining release of hostages.

College expenses expected to increase for fall

Costs to be similar to peers

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

Tuition, fees and housing costs will be higher next semester, according to University officials.

The tuition costs were raised in part to keep up with K-State's peer institutions, said Ray Hauke, director of budget and planning for the Kansas Board of Regents.

"We received a legislative directive that we should raise our out-of-state tuition, as it was significantly lower than area schools," Hauke said. "We're still quite a bit behind what is charged in other places."

Tuition and fees for full-time, resident, undergraduate students have been raised from $681.40 this semester to $724.60 for the fall semester. Tuition and fees for full-time, nonresident undergraduates have been raised from $1,896.40 to $2,123.60.

A student must be enrolled in seven or more credit hours to be considered full time.

Tuition and fees for full-time, resident, graduate students have been raised from $801.40 to $874.60. Tuition and fees for full-time, nonresident, graduate students have been raised from $2,016.40 to $2,273.60.

Full-time, undergraduate, resident, veterinary medicine students will pay $1,570.60 in the fall compared with $1,406.40 this semester. Full-time, undergraduate, nonresidents in veterinary medicine will pay $4,418 as opposed to $3,956.40.

At K-State, out-of-state tuition for fall 1988 was 2.8 times the resident rate, while at peer institutions it was 3.3 times the resident rate, he said.

"One reason non-resident fees are higher is that tuition in Kansas finances about 28 percent of the educational costs of the institutions, which means Kansas taxpayers finance the remaining 72 percent," Hauke said. "Since the overwhelming majority of non-residents have not been paying taxes in Kansas, they must pay higher fees to go to school here."

Thomas Frith, director of housing, said housing fees were raised to keep pace with rising costs.

"We're completely self-supporting; (the department of housing) receives no government funding," Frith said. "The cost of such factors as food and salaries has gone up and we have to have enough income to cover our costs."

Full capacity for University housing is 4,195. This semester 3,941 students live in residence halls.

The student activity fee has been raised 20 cents for full-time students.

Todd Johnson, Student Senate chairman, said the increase is due to the increased membership dues for full-time students to support the state level of Associated Students of Kansas, a lobbying group.

Committee recommends 6 percent tuition increase

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

In-state residents will pay $613 per semester in tuition during the 1990-91 academic year if the Kansas Board of Regents accepts the tuition increase recommendations made by a special committee Friday.

The committee's recommendations included raising in-state residents' tuition by 6 percent and nonresidents' by 10 percent, and charging a $15 processing fee to all students who applied for admission to a regents school.

All seven regents schools would be affected.

President Jon Wefald said he thought the 6 percent increase is "a reasonable increase in tuition."

Wefald said he believes the increase is a "reasonable request" of the students by the regents "in light of the three-year Margin of Excellence funding" by the state legislature.

"It helps set the stage (for the state) supporting higher education," he said.

The $15 processing fee would generate about $546,000 for admissions office work and financial aid offices that are understaffed, according to an article Saturday in The Wichita Eagle-Beacon.

Wefald approved of the fee.

"It's very expensive to process (applications)," he said.

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said the University processes about 12,000 applications each year, and anywhere between 4,000 to 5,000 of those are from students who decide to go to another university.

"It would cut down on the number of multiplicable applications," he said.

Wefald said he believed instituting a processsing fee would "help focus the students" who are unsure of where they should attend college. Students who used to apply to three or four schools might cut that number down to two or three, he said.

Some of the money K-State would save on processing needless applications could be channeled to student financial aid, Krause said. About 68 percent of K-Staters apply for aid, he said, and the extra funding could help in processing those applications.

French plane crash kills 22

VALENCE, France — A passenger plane with 22 people on board lost control and crashed into a mountainside in southeastern France on Monday night, likely killing all aboard, officials said.

Rescuers located the wreckage 3½ hours after the crash, which occurred shortly after 9 p.m. as the plane was about to land, local officials said.

They quickly found 17 bodies among the aircraft's scattered debris in a forest near the village of Leoncel, about 15 miles from this city in southeastern France.

Chances of anyone surviving the crash were slim because of the impact of the crash, officials said.

The wreckage was on the northern face of the Vercors mountain, at an altitude of 3,900 feet.

The Fokker 27, a twin-engine turboprop, was flying for the private airline Europe Aero-Service. It was making a regular flight from Paris' Orly Airport to Valence.

The control tower at Mont Verdun, near Lyon, lost contact with the plane at 9:10 p.m. The plane was scheduled to land at 9:18 p.m. at the Chabeuil airport, near Valence, which is south of Lyon.

There was no immediate explanation why the aircraft flew into the mountainside as it was making its landing approach.

Three children were among the 19 passengers aboard, police and rescue officials said. Three crew members were aboard the aircraft.

Officials said rescue workers concentrated their search for the 82-foot aircraft around Leoncel because numerous residents reported hearing a loud noise or explosion at about the same time the aircraft lost contact with the control tower.

A Fokker 27 crashed March 4, 1988 on a flight from Nancy to Paris, killing 23 people. It was the worst plane accident in France since 1981.

British Jews criticize play

LONDON — Leaders of Britain's Jewish community on Monday criticized a musical comedy spoofing Adolf Hitler that opens this month in a London fringe theater to coincide with the 100th anniversary of the dictator's birth.

"The Adolf Hitler Show," with actor Brian McDermott in the title role, gives a camp portrayal of the Nazi leader appearing in an assortment of swastikas, black stockings and suspenders.

The show, scheduled to open at the Old Swan Cabaret Bar on April 27, is said to be a loosely based follow-up to the Mel Brooks' film "The Producers," about a madcap impresario putting on a musical called "Springtime for Hitler."

According to the London Alternative Magazine, playwright David Parker has written "a devastating parallel between Britain in the 1980s and Hitler's Germany."

But the Board of Deputies of British Jews, which represents Britain's Jewish community, said the show is "in very poor taste."

World fisheries threatened

ROME — The world's fisheries continue to increase production but have become threatened by overfishing and pollution, a U.N. official said Monday.

Edouard Saouma, director general of the Food and Agriculture Organization, told the opening session of the Rome-based agency's Committee on Fisheries that world fish demand could exceed 100 million tons by the end of the century.

Fisheries have increased production steadily from 20 million tons a year after World War II to more than 90 million tons in 1987, he said.

Almost all major stocks of bottom-dwelling fish and crustaceans, such as lobsters and crabs, have been heavily exploited and some are nearing depletion, he said.

Director caught raiding files

TAMPA, Fla. — A former news editor at WTSP-TV was charged Monday with scheming with a colleague to tap into the confidential computer system of a competing Tampa-area television station.

Terry Cole, 32, surrendered at the Hillsborough State Attorney's office on a conspiracy charge and two counts of computer-related crimes, said Sam Jones, head of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement in Tampa.

Cole was fired by the station in mid-March, along with Michael I. Shapiro, 33, assistant news director at the ABC affiliate.

Cole was news director at KWCH-TV in Wichita before accepting the Florida job.

Shapiro was charged with 14 counts of computer-related crimes in an alleged series of raids on the computer news files of Channel 13, the CBS affiliate. He has been released on his own recognizance and hasn't come to trial yet.

Cattle rustled in Chevette

BALDWIN, Wis. — Cattle rustlers have broadened their range, transporting stolen animals by Chevette after stuffing them through the rear hatch, authorities said.

"I don't imagine it was easy," Sheriff Ralph Bader said Sunday, adding that the stolen cattle weighed up to 600 pounds.

The subcompact Chevrolet was recovered as two men were arrested over the weekend in cow thefts from eight farmers.

Since December, farmers in this area of western Wisconsin had been complaining to authorities about single animals missing from their herds. In all, 16 calves and nine yearling heifers have been reported stolen.

Bader said most probably were sold.

David Webster, an Emerald-area farmer, said cattle were taken from his farm on three occasions. He said the cows apparently were roped and walked from the barn to the road, where they were loaded into a vehicle.

Asked how two men and a 600-pound cow in a small car could avoid notice, Bader said, "At 4 a.m., it's not too easy to see what's inside a car."

Music festival continues

Students' works to be performed

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

It isn't unusual that three K-State music students are participating in the Panorama of American Music festival this week. However, their involvement is somewhat unusual — instead of performing musical pieces, they will have their own music performed at 3:30 p.m. today in All-Faiths Chapel.

Patricia Russell, senior in music education, has been composing music for about two years.

"I had written a piece for one of my theory classes and I was really interested in (composing)," Russell said. "I took the piece into the composition teacher, Hanley Jackson (professor of music), and he thought it was OK, so I started taking lessons from him.

"He was very encouraging and told me my own ideas were the most important. I probably wouldn't have stayed as interested if it hadn't been for him."

Amy Kickhaefer, sophomore in music education, has been interested in composing music since her childhood, but she credits Jackson for helping her become seriously involved in composing.

"I've been making up music since I was about 11, but I wouldn't call that serious composing because I didn't write it down," Kickhaefer said. "In composition class we get to compose what we feel like composing and I started writing it down because it is a class."

Kickhaefer's piece that will be performed today is titled "The Child." It is a flute and piano piece which contains three movements describing a day in the life of a child.

"I decided to use flute because it is one of my favorite instruments," Kickhaefer said. "It is not vocal, so it's not like someone is up there singing about the child. Rather, it is represented."

Jason Schafer, sophomore in music, describes most of his compositions as learning experiences with the exception of his piece being performed today.

"Previously, I've taken ideas from older periods of music and incorporated them into my style," Schafer said. "Tuesday's piece is more independently my style rather than the styles of Beethoven or something like that."

Schafer's interest in composing began in high school when he was influenced by a friend who composed.

"He was very encouraging and told me my own ideas were the most important. I probably wouldn't have stayed as interested if it hadn't been for him."

—Patricia Russell senior in music education

"Watching her inspired me to do it because I knew that I could probably do it — it was just a matter of getting my ideas down on paper," he said.

Schafer said he decided to compose music seriously after realizing that he had a special talent.

"I finally realized that I could do something that not everyone else was capable of," he said. "I'll always remember that someone told me not everyone has the ability (to compose) and if you have the ability you should make use of it."

The three composers rely on different methods and sources to collect ideas for their compositions.

Russell said the idea for the most recent of her five compositions was taken from the cover of a magazine. She also reads books to generate ideas.

"For one piece, I thought about five different adjectives or emotions and tried to write music to reflect that," she said.

Schafer prefers to supplement his ideas by listening to pop music and experimenting with his synthesizer.

"Listening to pop music gives me a lot of rhythmic ideas," he said. "From my experience with the synthesizer, I've learned a lot of different ways to manipulate sounds."

From their experiences, the composers have discovered that anywhere from several weeks to a few months are required to produce a composition.

None of the three is quite sure if composing will figure into their careers.

"Right now it's just something I like to do," Kickhaefer said. "It's kind of a release from all the other classes I take which are a little more serious and concrete. Instead of something being right or wrong, (Jackson) may suggest another way of doing it."

Schafer said he would like to incorporate composing into a performance career.

"I enjoy performing too much to entirely give it up," he said. "Performing helps my composing because it gives me a better idea of what is effective in front of an audience."

Russell views her compositions as a hobby but would consider studying the theory of composition if she enters graduate school.

Terrorism actually hypocritical U.S. myth

Commentary

Kale Baldock
Contributing Columnist

Welcoming home the American hostages from Iran in January 1980, President Reagan said, "Let terrorists be aware that when the rules of international behavior are violated, our policy will be one of swift retribution."

Indeed, terrorism has become an international preoccupation. My aim here is not to excuse the kinds of terrorism our government and media are constantly up in arms about, nor is it to deny that such acts constitute terrorism. Rather, I merely want to point out the great hypocrisy constituted by what the government says and what it does concerning the issue of terrorism.

Who are terrorists? Palestinians? Arabs in general? Brown people? The focus of the government and media would seem to suggest so, although right-wing scholars tend to go beyond that and include "leftists," and "communists" who are all driven by the elaborate plots of the Soviet Union.

Hardly anyone even stops amid this popular harangue to consider the terrorism committed by the United States and its allies, which, in numbers of victims, dwarfs the terrorism carried out by small radical bands, and certainly equals it in gruesomeness.

The United States deals mostly in state-supported terrorism. This works by propping up dictatorships or juntas which use their military and secret police forces to intimidate their populations into submission through the classic means of kidnapping, torture and murder.

This has been the case with Augusto Pinochet in Chile, Alfredo Stroessner in Paraguay, Anastasio Somoza in Nicaragua, the Shah of Iran, the governments of Indonesia, Turkey, El Salvador, Guatemala and a host of others.

In our government's benevolent "democracy" of Guatemala during March 1985, Head of State General Humberto Mejia Victores declared the country's only human rights agency to be full of "subversives." A few days later, four armed men kidnapped one of the agency's leaders, beat him to death, and cut out his tongue.

Another of the agency's leaders was found murdered at the bottom of a ravine along with her 3-year-old son and younger brother.

The Contra "freedom fighters" are also a part of the U.S. terrorist network, and their record of grave human rights violations against civilians is even more widely documented, even by such mainstream sources as Newsweek, which had a particularly damning article in the June 1, 1987, edition.

Palestinian terrorism is heavily stressed by the government and media, often without much effort to clarify that those responsible are factions of Palestinians, which tends to paint the entire Palestinian people as a terrorist culture in general.

Although the media have done a fairly commendable job of covering Israeli attrocities against the Palestinians in the occupied territories, despite Israel's restrictions and bans on journalists (so much for freedom of the press on the part of our closest "democratic" ally), these acts are never referred to as terrorism.

In news acounts of Israel's military i ıtrusions into Lebanon, we read and hear of surgical strikes" by Israeli jets against "suspected terrorist strongholds." It's all very clean and logical.

Only in the alternative press can one find out that these "suspected terrorist strongholds" were in many cases actually settlements consisting largely of women, children and old men, with few, if any, actual guerrilla fighters.

These attacks maim and kill hundreds of people at a time — as many or more than are victimized in the bombing of an airliner. I suppose it's only common sense to conclude that if the media insist on relying on Israeli government reports of such incidents, and hence choose to remain ignorant of the facts, they really can't call such action terrorism.

A number of prominent Israeli leaders, apart from becoming state terrorists, were terrorists of the Palestinian fashion in heir younger days. When British forces occupied Palestine earlier in the century, Menachem Begin and Itzhak Shamir, who were to become heads of the Israeli government, were leaders of revolutionary Jewish factions which carried out bombings, kidnappings, and assassinations against British civilians and officials.

Although Begin, Shamir and their kind are viewed romantically by Israelis today as having been "freedom fighters" and "liberators" of their people who fought against the domination of foreign occupation, how much different were they from those Palestinians who today are using the same tactics to fight Israeli domination and occupation of their land?

The controversy over which land belongs to whom is complicated, involving the gray area of religion espoused by the Israelis, and the claim to ownership based on 2,000 years of occupation on the part of the Palestinians.

But it doesn't take a genius to surmise that by driving the Palestinians off the land into smaller and smaller densely populated areas, and constantly repressing them by brutal means, the Israelis have enraged and incurred the wrath of these people. And, as it has been the United States which has provided the means for Israel to carry this out, the anger and resentment of the Palestinians has naturally come our way as well.

Again, this is not to excuse the taking of innocent lives on the part of Palestinians or any other terrorists. But I do want to stress that terrorism in most cases does not just come out of the blue for no reason. Most terrorists did not simply wake up one morning hating the United States or Israel or imperialism or whatever. There is a history behind these acts that is either overlooked, misunderstood, or both.

I am not an expert on terrorism, but neither are many of the so-called "experts" whose work I've looked into, as far as I'm concerned. As much as they can tell you about who did what when, about plastic explosives, about links to Muammar Qaddafi and the Soviet Union, they all tend to sidestep the root causes of terrorism, or simply dismiss them as irrelevant.

As long as it is constricted to such a narrow focus, terrorism will remain to a great degree a hypocritical myth of sorts concocted by the West to divert attention from its own atrocities.

Moral issues set tone for divestment debate

Student Senate's action Friday to divest student monies from South Africa was a controversial decision on a controversial subject. It was also the proper decision.

Convincing arguments, depending on which economic theory to which you prescribe, can be made for either side of the issue. However, a time comes when the bottom line of the balance book is not the final line of discussion.

The potential economic and monetary gain by investors in South African companies and the financial hardship which may be caused on the South African economy by divestment are important factors. But compared to other factors, they should be relatively minor in the divestment discussion.

Divestment of student monies from South Africa is a moral statement by the student community — a statement more impressive than any returns on money invested there could ever make.

The ugly South African government policy of apartheid is a stance which no U.S. company, organization or citizen should tolerate. Nor should they support the practice of apartheid, even indirectly, by investing in companies operating in South Africa.

K-State student senators realized that apartheid in South Africa is morally corrupt enough to withdraw the money they had invested there. The price of divesting might be lower returns on future student investments, but it also ensures the invested money will not support the tainted practice of apartheid.

Other Perspectives

Today is the last day to file applications for Student Government Association seats. As of yesterday, fewer applications than seats available were filed.

Last year, students let an uncontested SGA presidential race happen. This year, the few groups filing stacks of applications for the seats available will be able to control student government as their candidates don't face opposition.

Do FHSU students really not care? You don't have to be a political activist to want to have a say in decisions that will immediately affect you.

Activism day lacks real activism

Commentary

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

I'm writing here today to get all you children hip to this "Student Activism Week" that the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee has got goin' down. The news release promises "something for 'armchair' activists and avid protestors alike," and will transpire under the moons of Aries and Taurus (April 18-21 for you squares). People are just gonna come together and tune in and turn on. Man, there's gonna be free love, free music and free ... well, you know.

I'm just real stoked by all this, 'cause it's about time the UPC got wise to the whole student activism scene. What's really groovy about it is that it's like, so out there, so ambiguous.

I mean, they call it "Student Activism Week," but they never exactly say what we're supposed to be activist about.

Maybe a visit to the information table April 18 will put me wise to it. They're gonna have stuff on protests from the '60s. Or maybe I'll check out the fashion show and slide presentation later that day.

They're gonna have organic refreshments, a psychedelic slide show and '60s threads. I mean, I didn't know fashion had anything to do with activism, but I'm hip to new scenes.

There's also some tie-dyeing that's gonna be happenin' the next day. Or, if you don't dig that, you can purchase "UPC Student Activism T-Shirts." That way, when we get down to the nitty gritty of "Passive Resistance Day" on Thursday, we'll be well-dressed for it.

Different protest groups are gonna come together and powwow, but I'm not too savvy on what we're gonna be resisting, which kinda freaks me out. Are we like, passively resisting repression or are we like, actively protesting something? I guess we're just gonna be puttin' down the whole scene. Heavy.

Now some of you dudes and chicks out there may be sayin' that this "Student Activism Week" is like, a sham. I can hear you puttin' down the whole UPC scene, sayin' it's shallow, a protest for protest's sake, just a big fashion show where all the fascist-pig frat boys and servile sorority sisters can tie-dye their T-shirts and listen to their "Freedom Rock" CDs.

But man, that's just bad karma. UPC knows that the only time college students were ever, like, socially relevant and really tuned in to the whole political scene was in the '60s, the age of Aquarius, the love generation. Man, all you '80s people are just so lame.

Oh sure, some of you people try to be relevant. Man, you talk about real heavy stuff like "South African divestment" and "Central American policy" and you protest those pigs from the CIA. But man, you just ain't with it, you know, because you don't have hip threads and hair and drugs.

You people have teach-ins instead of love-ins and Students for Educational Awareness instead of Students for Altered Awareness. Maybe the free showing of "Hair" on Friday will get you hip to our scene.

I mean, if you '80s people really want to do your own thing in your own time, I'm hip to it. But if you really want to bring about, like, relevant social change you people had better stop gettin' haircuts, stop wearin' clean clothes and start sayin' "whoa!" to taking showers and the whole personal hygiene trip.

Then you need to start turnin' on. That's like what's most important, 'cause that's the groovy part. The whole "no nukes" and "no war" scene was cool, but the drugs and the sex were what was really far out.

UPC is hip to this. They know that all you people are lookin' to get turned on. All that jive about nuclear power, whales and war is just smoke on the water to you '80s children. You hear about it all the time in those Lou Reed and Lennon Lectures, or whatever. You children really want to get hip to the free love and music and clothes and drugs. 'Cause man, that's what student activism is all about!

You catchin' my drift? Maybe some of you people who are tryin' to get your protest or passive resistance scene together should come out to "Student Activism Week" and get hip to how to really make a statement. Maybe some of you pro-life and pro-choice or pro-wire hanger and pro-death folks should get wise to our scene as well.

Maybe all you K-State '80s children could come together for "Student Activism Week" and let UPC know that student activism is alive and stokin'. That would probably really turn them on, 'cause they really seem to care about resistance, protest and unity and all that.

Or maybe you could go it even one better and all come together to boycott "Student Activism Week." That would be a real statement, 'cause it would show that you '80s children are like, self-defined and self-actuated individuals who don't need to adopt the style and mannerisms of previous generations in order to enact relevant social change, or something like that. That would be like, mondo student activism. You know, like the real thing.

Editor's Note: Although the style of this column may suggest that it was written under the influence of mind-altering drugs, we at the Collegian strictly stress and maintain a drug-free workplace. This column is no exception. As proof, urine samples are available in the Collegian newsroom, Kedzie 116.

Plane hijacked, diverted to Miami; gunmen captured

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — A twin-engine aircraft carrying a missionary group from Haiti to Fort Lauderdale was hijacked Monday, and the plane was diverted to Miami, officials said.

Two gunmen, who the FBI said apparently were members of the Haitian military, surrendered when the plane landed and no passengers were hurt during the flight. The men were taken to FBI headquarters. The FBI said the motive for the hijacking was not known.

The Cessna 402, owned by Missionary Aviation Fellowship of Redlands, Calif., landed at 2:30 p.m. at Miami International Airport.

A Fellowship spokeswoman, Donna Burns, said the plane held four Haitians and three Americans, plus the two gunmen and the pilot, Duer Smedley.

"They boarded at Cap Haitien," Salac said. "It's unclear if they were expected aboard or just came on the plane."

Burns said the men fired weapons into the air and took over the plane, and the pilot was ordered to fly immediately without a flight plan.

The Fellowship is an international Christian aviation group founded in 1945. It operates 145 aircraft in Third World countries to provide rural aviation and radio service.

The Fellowship first started flight service to Haiti in 1979, flying doctors, medicines, supplies and mission and development personnel. The service has been based at Executive Airport in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, since 1982.

In October 1987, a Fellowship single-engine Cessna was hijacked in Suriname. The pilot was held by a rebel guerrilla group before being released unharmed.

Programs aim to ensure safety

Officer: 'Common sense' best prevention

By Linda Kleiner
Collegian Reporter

While an individual walks in the dark, an unusual rustle of leaves echoes from the bushes and a distorted and enlarged outline of a person appears. This scene is only one of many settings in which a victim may be attacked.

Two years ago, a program to make women and the community aware of the procedures for personal safety and criminal prevention was established by Sgt. Stan Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department.

By studying statistics, talking with victims and offenders and reviewing information from his 19 years of experience on the police force, he said he has compiled public safety suggestions.

"One out of every four women could be subject to rape or sexual assault in their lifetime," Conkwright said.

For personal safety and criminal prevention, "good old common sense" is the best precaution, he said.

"Making women and people aware of where they are, what they are doing at any time and how to maintain control are my objectives," he said.

Conkwright tries to make people recognize the common sense factors of personal safety, he said.

When people are purchasing or renting an apartment or a house, they should consider the amount of lighting in the area at night, he said. Potential renters or home owners should contact the police department to determine the crime rate in the neighborhood before making a decision to move.

Prevention in the home begins with making sure door and window locks are secure, Conkwright said. An offender often becomes discouraged if entry is difficult because of adequate lock systems.

Individuals need to be aware of the surroundings and possible hiding places for offenders, he said. Shrubs close to the house, especially untrimmed shrubs, should be checked because they provide good hiding places for offenders. Removal of shrubs would be ideal, but not absolutely necessary.

Criminal offenders seldom activate a crime in places with adequate light, Conkwright said. Therefore, lights should be checked for brightness. If a person is living in an apartment building, they should make sure there are adequate lights in hallways.

Securing proper light does not ensure safety because "people signal offenders by the use of their porch lights," Conkwright said.

Most people turn their porch lights on when they leave and shut them off when they return, he said, which gives the potential offender a dark place to work when the people are home. The best prevention is to keep front and back porch lights lit throughout the night.

If an offender would enter the home, the most dangerous room for the victim is the bathroom, Conkwright said. Because bathrooms usually have only one door, the victim has no other means of escaping, he said.

People usually do not have a telephone in the bathroom; therefore, it is impossible to call for help. Conkwright said he encourages people to purchase an inexpensive telephone for the bathroom.

In addition to security tips for the home, Conkwright outlined several car safety suggestions. Car safety begins with using the seat belt, locking doors and keeping windows closed or only partially open when traveling.

Travelers should stay in the car when they have car trouble. To maintain control of the situation, the traveler should wait for someone to offer assistance or ask the person who stops to call for help at the nearest available telephone, he said.

If individuals think they are being followed while driving, they should remain on the main streets, Conkwright said. By avoiding side streets, alleys or short cuts, they may avoid being trapped in a boxed-in area.

The person could drive to the police station and enter the building, or the individual could drive to an open business area and go into the store, he said.

If walking instead of driving, the pedestrian should walk as far away from shrubs as possible and walk in as much light as possible, Conkwright said. Walking in pairs or in a group reduces the risk of attack.

It is important for women to inform a family member, friend or roommate when they are leaving, who they will be with, where they are going, how they are getting there and an estimated time of return, he said.

In 1986, a majority of the 817 rapes reported in Kansas were without weapons and occurred in the victim's home. Many people think rape happens on an impulse, Conkwright said.

"Rape isn't an impulse crime. It's a well-planned crime," he said.

Conkwright informs women and the community what to do if they would become victims of rape or criminal assault.

Refrain from panicking in the situation, he said. When a person panics, control of the circumstances is lost.

If the offender has a weapon, the victim should not fight because most offenders do not follow through with the threat, Conkwright said.

Some victims have escaped by telling the suspect they have a sexually transmitted disease. Others have urinated or vomited, he said.

Faculty Senate to hear salary comparison report

By The Collegian Staff

Faculty Senate will hear a report from Faculty Affairs Committee regarding administration and faculty salary comparisons at its 3:30 meeting today in the Union Big Eight Room.

"For several years the Faculty Salaries and Fringe Benefits Subcommittee has prepared a report on the equity of percentage increases given to K-State administrators when compared to the general faculty," the subcommittee report said.

"While there had been a general improvement in achieving equity, last year produced a modest reversal in this trend."

Also to be discussed at the meeting is the issue of plagiarism and cheating.

The Academic Affairs Committee will recommend that the following statement be included in each syllabus or course outline for every course offered.

"Plagiarism and cheating are serious offenses and may be punished by failure on the exam, paper or project, failure in the course and/or expulsion from the University."

Other issues on the agenda to be discussed at the meeting are course and curriculum changes (599 level and below) approved by the College of Agriculture, College of Arts and Sciences, College of Human Ecology and College of Engineering.

Tuition

Larry Moeder, associate director of Student financial assistance, said more money would "definitely" help the office's budget.

A tuition increase should not have much of an impact on students' financial aid awards, he said, adding that it may result in a few more students having to take out loans.

Financial aid adds the additional increase into the expenses part of the students' financial aid forms, and Moeder said he believed K-State's current programs could accomodate the need increase that would come about.

The programs that are limited "don't have enough funds to fill (the students' needs) anyway right now," he said.

The recommendations were approved at the yearly meeting of a regents special committee, which consists of two members of the board, two university presidents and the student body presidents from Emporia State University and Wichita State University.

Laurian Cuffy, student body president, said he hadn't had a chance to talk with the student members about how much input they had on the committee's proposals, but that he was concerned about the outcome.

"My concern is why wasn't the (Student Advisory Council's) position followed." Cuffy said.

SAC is composed of the student body presidents from the regents' schools.

"Our recommendation was that if we were going to go with the Margin of Excellence, then we wanted a flat 5 percent increase," he said.

The council only supported a 6 percent increase if the universities could be assured that one percent of the funding would be returned through the Educational Opportunity Fund, Cuffy said.

"Either the students were not able to make a case for the 1 percent (return) or stand fast on the 5 percent increase," he said. SAC will meet Friday and review the committee's recommendations.

This fall, in-state undergraduate tuition at the University of Kansas, Wichita State University and K-State will increase from $550 to $578 per semester. It would then rise to $613 in 1990.

Total cost including fees for in-state, full-time, undergraduate students was $681.40 this semester, and it will increase to $724.60 this fall.

Non-resident, undergraduate tuition and fees was $1,896.40 this semester and will rise to $2,123.60 this fall. Tuition alone would rise from $1,977 to $2,174 for non-resident, full-time, undergraduate students as a result of the 10 percent increase.

The total increases from all regents schools would raise about $7.5 million.

KU Chancellor Gene Budig expressed concern that the committee's original proposal of a 12 percent increase for out-of-state residents would make Kansas universities less cost-competitive, the Eagle-Beacon reported. He referred to the recruitment of students who live on the Missouri side of the metropolitan Kansas City area. The proposal was cut from 12 percent to 10 percent after Budig's appeal.

Wefald said he would "tend to agree" with Budig.

"(We) don't want to make it prohibitively expensive for out-of-state residents," Wefald said.

Stanley Koplik, regents executive director, supported the 12 percent increase as the way for students to pay their share of the Margin of Excellence program.

Although a vote on the recommendations by the full regents board is not scheduled until May, the board will consider the proposals at its April 20 meeting.

Capitol's drug problem 'out of control'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — William J. Bennett, slapping at the city government's attempts to battle a drug problem which he said "is so glaring — so out of control," announced on Monday a multimillion-dollar federal effort to combat drugs in the nation's capital.

Bennett, director of the national drug control policy office, said that "the plain fact is that, for too long and in too many respects, the D.C. government has failed to serve its citizens."

He announced plans calling for building new pretrial detention and prison facilities, expanding a local law enforcement task force, an effort to rid public housing of drug users and dealers, expansion of drug-treatment facilities, and an increase in job-training programs.

Bennett spoke at a news conference with Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp.

Washington was the nation's murder capital last year with 372 slayings, most of them drug-related. Already this year, there have been 135 homicides, compared with 87 at this time last year.

Bennett said "drugs and demand for drugs sorely test the responsive abilities of dozens of American cities. But here, where the problem is so glaring — so out of control — serious questions of local politics and governance can no longer be avoided or excused. They must be answered."

'Cats down ESU

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

K-State used a five-run fifth inning to come back from an early 5-1 deficit and beat Emporia State, 7-5, Monday at Frank Myers Field.

"I liked that game. It was a fun game," Coach Mike Clark said. "We were down 5-1 again and you could have counted us out. We were hitting the ball hard, but right at people."

K-State received help from Emporia State pitcher Dan Eaton in the fifth, as he walked two and gave up four singles.

Chris Hmielewski started the fifth with a single and went to second on Mike Dunaway's single. Jeff Ryan moved both up to second and third with a grounder back to the pitcher for the first out of the inning.

Russ Ringgenberg continued the hit parade with a single that drove in Hmielewski, while Riggenberg was stealing second. Jeff Troll walked to load the bases, and Craig Wilson walked forcing in Dunaway.

Bill Barnard brought in the tying run with a two-run single that scored Ringgenberg and Troll. Kevin Kaufman then brought home the go-ahead run with a sacrifice, giving the Wildcats their first lead, 6-5.

Hmielewski capped the scoring with a solo home run in the sixth, his first of the year.

Although K-State starter Bill Schafer struck out three Emporia hitters in the first inning, the Hornets jumped to an early two-run lead.

Lead-off man Jon Perry started it off with a double, then Schafer walked Glenn Schneider to put runners on first and second with no outs.

After Schafer struck out Richard Lira looking, Brad Bascue reached on an error by Wildcat shortstop Wilson, scoring Perry, and went to second on left-fielder Ron Bradshaw's error, with Schneider going to third.

Schafer got Tom Cimino on strikes, but catcher Ryan had to throw him out at first, scoring Schneider. He ended the inning by striking out Bob Fornelli.

K-State cut the lead in half in its half of the second. Barnard led the inning with a single, then moved to second on Kaufman's fielder's choice to third base. Hmielewski drove him in with a two-out single, cutting the Emporia State lead to 2-1.

Emporia State struck for single runs in the third, fourth and fifth innings.

Schneider tripled with one out in the third, and scored on Bascue's two-out single for a 3-1 lead.

Fornelli started the fourth with a single, and moved to second on a single by Albert Cavazos. But he was gunned down trying to steal third by Ryan, with Cavazos taking second on the play. He moved to third on Jon Murcek's single and scored on Steve Bushnell's sacrifice.

Schafer went six innings, allowed 11 hits and five runs, three earned. He struck out nine and walked only one — moving his record to 3-1. Greg McNamara pitched the final three innings to pick up his first save of the season.

The Wildcats will face Tarkio (Mo.) College at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in a doubleheader at Frank Myers Field.

Tennis squad upsets OU

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat netters recorded a major upset Monday, defeating Oklahoma 5-4.

The win marked the first time ever that the 'Cats have taken more than one point from the Sooners, who finished second in the Big Eight last year and defeated K-State 9-0 during the season. They also recorded a 6-3 win over Kansas Sunday in Lawrence.

The duel came down to the No. 1 singles match-up of Marijke Nel and Julie Vaughan. The two met last semester in Oklahoma, where Nel recorded the victory in straight sets. According to Nel, this may have given her a psychological advantage in Monday's contest.

Nel came on strong to win the first set, 7-6, but then dropped the second, 2-6, before settling the match in the third, 6-2. She was having trouble with her forehand at the start of the match, and by the middle of the second, Nel started playing more aggressively, taking several dives and eventually injuring one of her fingers.

"When I slid into home base," she said sarcastically, "my ring dug into my finger. But if your opponent is aware of your injury they're liable to try and take advantage of that."

Coach Steve Bietau apparently had some worries during Nel's match.

"In a few minutes, we're going to go out and pick up the pieces of her body that she left on the court," he joked afterwards. "I'm pleased that she was able to maintain her composure and stay relaxed enough to play well when it really counted."

Nel also contributed a point, paired with Valerie Rive, at No. 2 doubles, besting OU's formerly undefeated team of Vaughan and Bernadette Brennan. Nel and Rive won the first set 7-5, fell 4-6 in the second set, but both players agreed they were excited and enjoying their third set, which they won, 7-5.

The tandem didn't know Vaughan and Brennan were previously undefeated going into the match, which Nel said made the win "all the better" when they found out afterwards.

Sara Hancock also chalked up two points for the day, winning against Brennan at No. 3 singles and again paired with Helen Schildknecht at No. 1 doubles. She had a strong comeback after losing the first set 2-6, but had decisive wins in the second and third sets. According to Hancock, knowing that OU wasn't taking them seriously was part of their incentive to win.

"We knew that we could upset them even before we took the court," she said. "Knowing that OU was taking us lightly got us going."

Perhaps the day's greatest comeback was made by senior Annika Emtell at No. 6 singles. Emtell was shut out of the first set, 0-6, but stayed in to take the last two, both 6-4. According to Bietau, she was the perfect example of what endurance and a will to win can do.

The win will go down as one of the biggest in K-State's 12-year tennis history. All of the players agreed that not many people believed the 'Cats could win going into the match.

"Since they're OU, a lot of people automatically rank them No. 2 behind O-State, but that doesn't mean anything when you get beaten by K-State," Nel said.

"This is the biggest thing that's ever happened," Bietau said. "We now have a win over one of the traditionally elite teams in the conference."

Columnist's hit list includes Michigan job, Collins, athletic fee

It's Just Madness

CHRIS HAYS
Sports Editor

While pondering column ideas for this bi-weekly feces of mine, I came up with several. But none had enough substance upon which to waste this valuable space. So, I shall hit upon a few of the topics instead of strain to make one worthwhile.

Prior to the NCAA postseason basketball tournament, it became evident that Michigan's Bo Schembechler should have just stuck with being football coach for the Wolverines. He knows football. He's proven that. Michigan is consistently one of the better football teams in the nation year after year.

But he obviously doesn't know the job of athletic director the way it should be related in a job description. Athletic directors should stand behind and support their coaches — at least until there is no sign that the coach is going to be able to handle the role.

As the old saying goes, "You dance with the girl you brought to the ball."

Former Michigan basketball coach Bill Freider took the Wolverines to this year's NCAA postseason "ball," but then Schembechler cut in on Freider's last dance after he accepted the Arizona State job.

If Bo had just listened to Freider's reasoning for announcing his decision before the end of the season, it would have made perfect sense to him.

Rumors had surfaced linking Freider to the Sun Devil position a week before the NCAA tourney and Freider thought his team needed to know his decision in order to go into the tourney in the right frame of mind — instead of leaving them hanging.

Luckily for Schembechler, who fired Freider after his announcement, saying, "A Michigan man is going to coach Michigan," Steve Fisher proved to be a capable last-minute date.

Fisher, as interim coach, guided Michigan to the pinnacle of college sports with an 80-79 overtime victory against Seton Hall in the NCAA title game and, in the process, covered Bo's derriere.

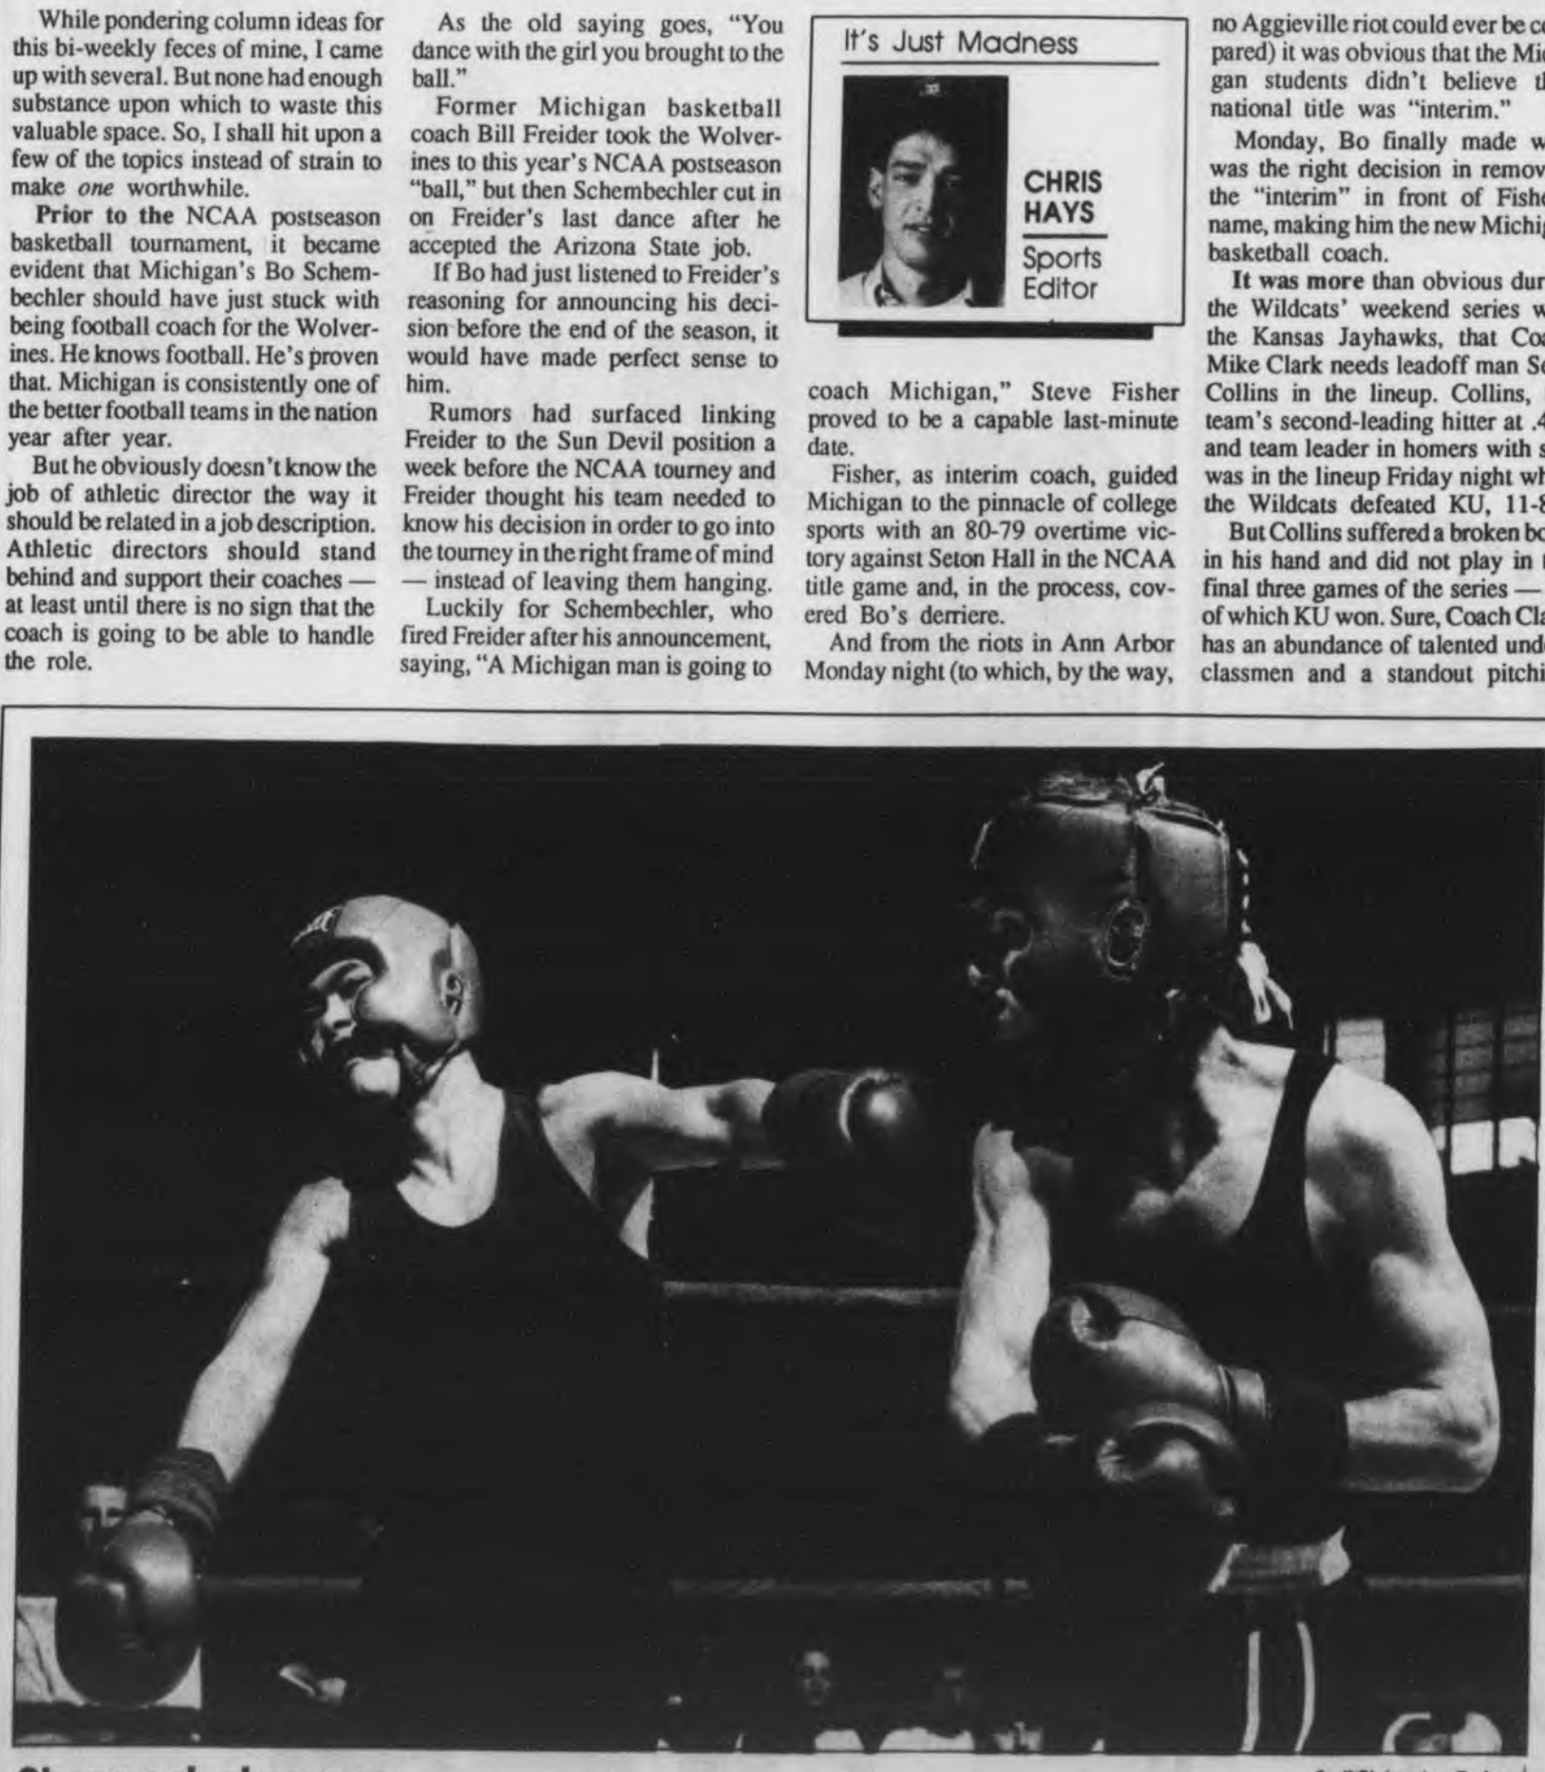
And from the riots in Ann Arbor Monday night (to which, by the way, no Aggieville riot could ever be compared) it was obvious that the Michigan students didn't believe their national title was "interim."

Monday, Bo finally made what was the right decision in removing the "interim" in front of Fisher's name, making him the new Michigan basketball coach.

It was more than obvious during the Wildcats' weekend series with the Kansas Jayhawks, that Coach Mike Clark needs leadoff man Sean Collins in the lineup. Collins, the team's second-leading hitter at .407 and team leader in homers with six, was in the lineup Friday night when the Wildcats defeated KU, 11-8.

But Collins suffered a broken bone in his hand and did not play in the final three games of the series — all of which KU won. Sure, Coach Clark has an abundance of talented underclassmen and a standout pitching staff, but none of them can provide the distractions on the base paths that Collins can. When Collins gets on, the Wildcats are on.

So be sure that when Collins returns to the lineup, which shouldn't be longer than two weeks tops, the 'Cats will be back on the winning track and in the hunt for a Big Eight tourney spot.



The athletic fee. Oh, the dreaded athletic fee. You know, the topic about which everyone wants to talk and then about which nobody wants to talk.

The athletic fee is needed at K-State. OK, before all of you who disagree start writing letters to my boss, remember, that's just my opinion. If you don't agree, then that's your opinion, and before you go wasting ink on a letter you think might change my mind — don't. By now, everyone has his or her own opinion, and it won't make a difference what any one person says to another anyway.

But athletics is one of the biggest windows through which the nation sees a University and it has been evident that college teams, which are successful on the national level, are also more successful in their recruiting efforts — student recruiting.

Seton Hall's basketball team went to the NCAA tournament for the first time in the school's history last season. After such national exposure, Seton Hall's number of applications jumped 25 percent last year.

This year, the Pirates were in the title game and, already, applications have increased 17 percent over last year and are still piling into the post office on the South Orange, N.J., campus. How many people can truthfully say they knew where Seton Hall was before last week?

Golf team shoots impressive round

By The Collegian Staff

Going into the Missouri Intercollegiate at Tantara, Russ Bunker said his golfers were looking to improve upon what they called "disappointing scores" at last week's Wichita State Invitational.

And, after Monday's first round on the par-71 Tantara Country Club golf course, Bunker and his squad have to be pleased.

K-State is in fourth place, with a score of 321, just nine strokes behind first-round leader Tennessee-Martin, which had an 18-hole total of 312. In second place is Missouri at 317 and Wichita State is in third at 318.

"We'll be all right. Our guys see where they can improve," Bunker said of today's second and final 18-hole round. "Missouri is supposed to be one of the top four teams in the Big Eight, so we feel good about where we are in relation to them."

Individually, K-State was led by Troy Keller and Daran Neuschafer, who each shot scores of 79 to put them in a tie for third place, just two strokes behind the leader, J.P. Velasco of Northeast Missouri State, who shot a 77.

Fisher named coach

By The Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Finally, Steve Fisher is just plain coach.

Named as Michigan's interim coach two days before the NCAA tournament, Fisher took the Wolverines to their first national championship, and he was officially rewarded on Monday when the "interim" was removed from his title.

Fisher, an assistant for seven years, took over on March 15 after Bill Frieder accepted the job at Arizona State and was told he could not finish out the season with Michigan. The Wolverines responded with six victories, including an 80-79 overtime victory over Seton Hall in the title game at Seattle.

There was overwhelming support for Fisher, both locally and by the national media, after the polite, red-faced man led a talented group of underachievers through six tournament games. But Schembechler wouldn't be stampeded.

"I wasn't going to be pressed into an emotional decision," Schembechler said. "I wanted to be cool, calculated, and study it from every angle. It always came up Steve Fisher."

Talks stall again in Eastern purchase

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Talks aimed at selling Eastern Airlines bogged down Monday as its parent Texas Air Corp. balked at accepting tentative agreements reached between Eastern unions and buyers led by Peter V. Ueberroth, sources close to the situation said.

Ueberroth and representatives from Eastern, Texas Air and its unions met Monday with U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Burton Lifland. The meeting followed a weekend of secret talks aimed at beating tonight's midnight deadline for setting terms to get Eastern's striking unions back to work.

That deadline is a condition of the agreement by Ueberroth's group to buy Eastern. The airline has been largely grounded since March 4 due to a strike by Machinists that has been honored by most of its pilots and flight attendants.

Lifland, who is overseeing Eastern's reorganization under federal bankruptcy law, must approve any sale of the airline.

But although sources said the Ueberroth group and the unions had reached tentative agreements in their weekend talks, Eastern and Texas Air attorneys emerging from a day-long meeting at the Manhattan bankruptcy court indicated there was no overall accord.

"There's no agreement," said David Boies, an attorney representing Texas Air, as he emerged from the meeting and left the courthouse. "I will tell you there will be no agreement tonight."

There was no immediate comment from the unions or Ueberroth. Labor sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, had refused to give specifics earlier about their agreement with the former baseball commissioner.

Sources familiar with the weekend talks had indicated a formal announcement on an agreement could be made Monday but declined to elaborate, due to a news blackout on the talks.

also been stolen from campus buildings in the past few weeks.

On April 1, three electronic scales were reported stolen from King Hall. The total value of the scales was reported at $5,000. Another scale worth almost $2,000 was stolen from Call Hall four days later.

Herrman said the scales may be used for weighing drugs.

"The scales have been a big item since the 60's when the drug craze began," he said. "It's most likely that's what they are used for unless whoever stole them knows an outlet where they can sell them."

A detective for the Riley County Police Department said it is more likely the scales "are set up in a student's home."

"It's unlikely a 'doper' would want to possess such sophisticated equipment, when the cheaper balance beams work just as well for what they want," Herrman said.

Most of the burglaries occur at night and no signs of breaking and entering were apparent, he said.

"They could have occurred anytime from 5 to 7:30 or 8 in the morning," Herrman said. "When the weather gets nice, this type of activity increases. It's like spring fever."

Sub located in Norwegian Sea

Electrical problems may have caused fire

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet navy has found its nuclear submarine at the bottom of the frigid Norwegian Sea and believes electrical problems may have caused a fire and explosions that sank it, a newspaper reported Monday.

The government newspaper Izvestia said rescuers had found the bodies of 19 of the 42 sailors killed when the sub sank north of Norway on Friday.

Tass, the official news agency, said the 27 survivors were hospitalized in serious condition at Murmansk, a Soviet Arctic port, and investigators were able to interview them for only minutes at a time.

It also said a government commission praised the crew for "bravely and intelligently" working to shut down the sub's nuclear reactor.

"According to preliminary information, the fire started because of a short circuit," Izvestia said, quoting navy investigators in Murmansk. It said the submarine carried 10 torpedoes, two of them nuclear-tipped.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov and the newspaper reiterated previous Soviet statements that there was no danger of radioactivity being released from the torpedoes or the reactor.

Izvestia said search crews had determined the sub's location but Gerasimov said whether it could be raised was not yet known.

"The question of lifting the submarine up has not been decided yet," he told a news briefing. "It's a bit deep there."

Norwegian defense officials in Oslo said the Soviets had a salvage vessel at the site, but spokesman Erik Senstad there was no indication whether an attempt would be made to raise the sub from nearly 5,000 feet below the surface.

He said civilian salvers have raised wrecks and parts of wrecks from much deeper water, however, and the Soviets presumably would want to retrieve the sub.

Vadim Rozanov, press attache at the embassy in Oslo, said Soviet vessels were in the area to test for radiation, paralleling studies by Norwegian scientists, but "I don't know if there are any plans to salvage the submarine."

If the ship was a Mike-class vessel, as believed in the West, it would contain some of the most advanced Soviet technology, which the Kremlin would not want disclosed to NATO countries, the Norwegian news agency NTB reported.

Norway prepared 10 questions for the Soviets about the sub's construction and reactor safeguards.

Report shows record level of international terrorism

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Terrorism increased worldwide to a record level in 1988, including a jump in the number of anti-U.S. incidents, the State Department reported to Congress on Tuesday.

The bombing of a Pan Am jetliner in December over Scotland, which the department's office to counter terrorism said probably was a terrorist incident, and the Palestinian uprising on the West Bank and in Gaza helped push the total of incidents to a new high of 856, up 3 percent from 1987.

In all, 658 people were killed and 1,131 wounded, an increase in fatalities from 633 in 1987 but a decrease in injuries from 2,272.

The casualty figures include terrorists themselves who were killed or wounded during attacks.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed that the Army's top uniformed lawyer has contended the U.S. military can legally attack terrorists without violating a 1976 presidential order that bans assassinations of individuals abroad.

Maj. Gen. Hugh Overholt, the service's judge advocate general, argued in an eight-page draft memorandum that because of changes in "the nature of the threat," action against terrorists can be justified on grounds of national self-defense.

Overholt's memorandum was disclosed Monday by the newsletter Defense Week and confirmed by Army officials.

The State Department report said the United States remained a primary target for international terrorism last year, as the number of anti-U.S. incidents rose from 149 in 1987 to 185. They resulted in 192 persons killed and 40 wounded, compared with seven Americans killed and 47 wounded in 1987.

The increase in deaths was due mostly to the attack on U.S.-bound Pan Am 103 in which 259 people aboard the jumbo jet and 11 on the ground perished.

Latin America was the area showing the largest percent of incidents against U.S. citizens and property — 60 percent.

On the whole, the Middle East again had the highest incidence of international terrorism, with 313 attacks. Israel, again, was the main target.

The State Department credited Syria and Iraq with a substantial reduction in direct involvement in terrorism last year, but said both countries continued to provide safe haven and training to terrorist organizations.

Iran's decision to end its war with Iraq and expand its ties to the West lessened Iranian involvement in terrorism temporarily, although Iran continued to include terrorism among its foreign-policy tools, the report said.

At year's end, 20 foreigners were listed as political hostages being held in Lebanon, two others possibly were dead, while 13 were released during the year.

Cheating policy approved for fall

Class syllabi to include information

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

Students will be informed of the consequences of cheating and plagiarism through information which will be required on all class syllabi or course outlines, beginning fall 1989.

Tuesday, Faculty Senate approved the measure recommended by Academic Affairs Committee which will require faculty members to include the following statement on class syllabi:

"Plagiarism and cheating are serious offenses and may be punished by failure on the exam, paper or project, failure in the course and/or expulsion from the University. For more information refer to the academic dishonesty policy in 'Inside KSU.'"

Wayne Nafziger, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee, said there is good reason for the statement.

"The students are able to get off the hook (when accused of cheating), so to speak, because they are not aware of the policy regarding plagiarism and cheating," said Nafziger, professor of economics.

"This, in a way, would protect the instructor."

If students accused of the action say they are not aware of the rules, the statement included on the syllabus would provide support for the professor, he said.

Todd Johnson, Student Senate chairman, said Faculty Senate's action is important in addressing the issue of student cheating.

"I think it is important in addressing the concern that cheating is bad, and I think most students realize at least what constitutes cheating," said Johnson, junior in chemical engineering. "I think what is important about this also, is it gives the details as to what can happen to you as far as being expelled from the University."

In other business, Senate approved the Faculty Affairs Committee faculty and administration salary comparison report.

The report found a small monetary difference between administration and faculty salary increases.

David Vruwink, Faculty Affairs Committee chairman, said in comparison, the difference between administrators' and faculty members' salary increases is only about $20, before taxes.

"It's not that great a difference," said Vruwink, associate professor in accounting.

Faculty Senate also approved course and curriculum changes (599 level courses and below) for the colleges of Human Ecology, Agriculture, Arts and Sciences and Engineering.

Funding approved by state Legislature for full MOE plan

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

K-State received a total of $3.86 million in Margin of Excellence funding to be used for faculty salary enrichments and program enhancements, said Legislative Liaison Richard Hayter.

The Legislature, in one of the final acts of the 1989 session Saturday, approved full funding for all Kansas Board of Regents institutions.

Although final distribution of the funds has yet to be determined, Hayter said it will definitely bring the University more in line with schools of similiar size.

MOE is a three-year program, said Ray Hauke, regents director of planning and budget. He said regents approved the original proposal in June of 1988 and Gov. Mike Hayden responded to the request.

Hayden supported 100 percent funding of the base budget increase and faculty parity, and 50 percent funding of mission-related enhancements.

"The Legislature concurred 100 percent on the base budget and faculty parity and added monies to make the mission-related enhancement 100 percent as well," Hauke said.

He said the six regents universities received about $17 million.

Of the total, $6.88 million will be allocated for faculty parity at each university, and $4.85 million for mission-related enhancements.

John Struve, director of the budget office, said the $2 million added to the salary budget will result in a 2.6 percent salary increase for faculty members. The $1.86 million allocated for program enhancements will go toward programs such as a Wheat Genetics Resource Center, the Veterinary Medicine Complex and equipping undergraduate classrooms. Seventeen other programs will

SGA budget approved by Student Senate

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate voted to approve Student Government Association's proposed budget allocation of $35,373.15 during its three-hour meeting Thursday.

The budget was approved with an amendment to increase SGA's printing budget by $120.

The increase in the printing budget will allow for the publication of 1,000 "SGA Today" newsletters each semester. The newsletters are expected to be distributed throughout the campus and to living groups.

Some senators said they did not want to approve the printing increase because it would "only be a pat on the back" to senators.

Senate debated and failed to pass an amendment that would have deleted a $500 allocation to employ a student secretary in the SGA office.

"We (58 senators and 18 senate interns) can do the work on our own and save $500," said Chris Kern, architecture senator.

However, other senators said there is a possibility of losing the current SGA secretary during the summer and a work study student would help "pick up the slack" while a new secretary is in training.

In other buisness, Senate voted to allocate $368.10 to the Coalition for Human Rights after passing two amendments.

One amendment raised CHR's honorariums budget from $200 to $300 in order to hire more speakers.

Matt Higgins, engineering senator, said CHR has had good attendance for speakers and needs money to have more of them.

The second amendment increased the group's film budget by $25, from $100 to $125.

A spokeswoman for CHR said past films have cost $125, which meant another group was needed as a co-sponsor to cover the remaining $25.

Senate voted to allocate Older Wiser Learning Students $340.90 after passing an amendment that raised OWLS' travel budget from $46.70 to $94.50.

The amendment was submitted after Crystal Sapp, OWLS secretary, said the group needed to pay rent on a state-owned van to use in transport to and from Fort Hays State University. OWLS is conducting a seminar there regarding the benefits of having a non-traditional student program.

Laurian Cuffy, student body president, supported the amendment.

Senate also voted to allocate $12,653.85 to University for Man.

The majority of the allocation, one of Senate's largest, is spent on staff salaries totaling $11,532.

Senate also voted to allocate the Consumer Relations Board $3,863 after passing an amendment that increased CRB's dues/membership/subscriptions budget from $53 to $73.

Senate approves minimum wage plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush's minimum wage plan was defeated Tuesday as the Senate moved closer to confronting him with a proposal he repeatedly has promised to veto.

The Senate, on a 61-39 vote largely along party lines, backed an amendment to legislation sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that brought the measure essentially in line with a House-passed bill calling for an hourly minimum wage of $4.55 by October 1991.

Rejected, by 58-41, was Bush's proposal to increase the minimum wage by 30 cents a year from the current $3.35 an hour to $4.25 in January 1992. It was the second time Bush's proposal was defeated in Congress. The president's plan was rejected by the House three weeks ago.

More amendments were being considered before the legislation itself faced a final Senate vote, likely to come today, but no further significant changes were expected before then.

"We compromised," said Kennedy, referring to his past proposals to raise the minimum wage even higher. He also noted a number of other changes in the legislation, including expanded exemptions for small businesses, to meet Republican concerns.

"The president's approach is a far superior approach," Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said in his unsuccessful effort to win support for substituting Bush's proposal for the Kennedy bill.

The action seemed to guarantee the first domestic-policy showdown

Frogs delay rocket launch

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Eight frogs that were to be sent into space last week escaped before the rocket launch, delaying the experiment, the Swedish national news agency TT reported Tuesday.

The female frogs climbed out of their aquarium and eluded searchers for several days in a building at the Esrange rocket center in the northern city of Kiruna, TT said.

Researcher Ulf Hogman told TT the frogs were part of a biological project to study mating and various other functions.

After the frogs were retrieved, they were united with males on Monday and were launched 190 miles into space. They were brought back to earth after one hour. TT said results of the tests were being studied.

Bhutto to visit United States

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto will make her first official visit to the United States in June, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said Tuesday.

The prime minister is to meet President Bush and members of his administration and Congress during the trip, which begins June 5, the spokesman said on condition of anonymity.

Bhutto, 35, also will address Harvard University graduation exercises on June 8. She is a graduate of Harvard's Radcliffe College.

Bhutto assumed office Dec. 2, after her Pakistan People's Party won the largest bloc of votes in the country's first free polls in more than a decade.

Afghanistan will be the main topic the Bush-Bhutto meeting, Pakistani diplomats said.

Wheat crop showing stress

TOPEKA — Despite some rain last week, the Kansas wheat crop continues to show moisture stress, Kansas Agricultural Statistics reported today.

Topsoil moisture showed little improvement the past week, and was rated 66 percent short, 29 percent adequate and 5 percent surplus. Subsurface moisture was rated 82 percent short and only 18 percent adequate.

KAS rated just 8 percent of the 12.4 million acres planted to wheat last fall in good to excellent condition, with 51 percent in fair to poor condition and 41 percent in very poor condition.

At this time last year, 57 percent of the crop was rated good to excellent and 43 percent fair to poor. None of the acreage was rated very poor a year ago.

"Wheat stands are slowly greening up, making winter kill more evident," said KAS' weekly summary of condition of the crop.

Man sets himself on fire

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — A Lampe man, apparently distraught over marital and financial problems, bought gasoline and a lighter and set himself on fire at a Springfield convenience store Monday night.

Kenneth B. Coutts, 42, was listed in critical condition at the University of Missouri-Columbia Hospitals and Clinics burn unit Tuesday, hospital spokeswoman Ellen Klein said. He had burns over 80 percent of his body after the apparent suicide attempt.

Tammy Mares, a store clerk, said Coutts walked in, purchased $1 worth of gasoline and a cigarette lighter. "He was perfectly normal when he came in. There was nothing wrong with him," she said.

Coutts left the store, walked to his van and picked up a red plastic container and doused himself with gasoline before returning to the store, police said.

"He came up to the store and had gas in his eyes," Mares said. "I asked one of the customers to help him get the door open."

Coutts handed her a slip of paper containing a woman's name and telephone number. He calmly told her to call the woman if she didn't call the store later in the evening.

Tabitha McMillen, 18, another clerk, said the victim told Mares to tell the woman he loved her.

Air Force One desecrated

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A white supremacist claims he spit on the seats and urinated on the floor of a plane being built in Wichita for President Bush.

Dennis Mahon, an aircraft mechanic from suburban Northmoor, had been employed by a contractor that was doing work at the Boeing Co. plant in Wichita, where an Air Force One plane is being built. He said he was fired recently after someone in the plant noticed his white supremacist belt buckle.

Mahon, a reputed Ku Klux Klan organizer who was defeated last week in a race for a seat on the Northmoor Board of Aldermen, told the Kansas City Star in a telephone interview Monday that he was leaving the Kansas City area "because the Feds are hot on my tail."

However, a Secret Service official said the incident involving the plane, which has not been turned over to the federal government, was not in itself of particular interest to the agency.

"As a general rule, if someone has a direction of interest toward one of our protectees, we would want to talk to them," said Mauri Sheer, assistant special agent in charge of the Kansas City office of the Secret Service. "But if a guy wants to urinate in a plane, we don't really care."

Dodge City bank robbed

DODGE CITY — A gunman in his 20s robbed a bank and escaped on foot Tuesday with an undetermined amount of money, police said.

The man came into a branch of the First National Bank of Dodge City shortly before noon, pointed a gun at a teller and demanded money, Dodge City Police Chief Oakley Ralph said.

No one was injured in the robbery, Ralph said.

Poet to give reading tonight

Marilyn Hacker, winner of the 1975 National Book Award in poetry, will be on campus today for a poetry reading at 7 p.m. in Union 212.

"She wanted to do a tour of Kansas," said Antonia Pigno, chairwoman of specialized collections. "She specifically wanted to come to K-State."

Hacker earned the National Book Award for her first book of poems, "Presentation Piece," Pigno said. Best known for her modern sonnets about relationships, Hacker's newest poetry book, "Love, Death, and the Changing of the Seasons," was released in 1987.

Hacker's tour includes stops at the University of Kansas, Salina and Wichita State University. Other locations were included as a "package deal" because of the high cost involved with Hacker's visit, Pigno said.

"She is considered by some to be the foremost living poet in the United States," Pigno said.

Pre-lecture forum addresses peace in Israel

Speaker: Little hope exists for possible independence

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

There is little optimism that Israel will allow an independent Palestinian state, said Dan Acheson-Brown, graduate student in Middle East studies.

Acheson-Brown was one of three panelists in a pre-Lou Douglas Lecture discussion Tuesday night in Union 206 focusing on "Achieving Middle East Peace: Prospects for a Two-State Solution." The upcoming Lou Douglas Lecture by Ibrahim Abu-Lughod will be at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Forum Hall.

"I don't share any kind of optimism (for an independent Palestinian state), I think Israeli policy is based on the determination to keep the (occupied) territories," Acheson-Brown said.

He said the basic problem is one of Palestinian nationalism and the right of self-determination. The question, he said, is if Israel will allow this nationalism to be realized.

There is no movement on the part of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir or the two major political parties in the Israeli government toward an independent Palestinian state, Acheson-Brown said.

The Palestine Liberation Organization and Yasser Arafat have made statements renouncing terrorism and accepting Israel, he said. The U.S. government has called these actions "magic words," permitting the PLO to enter the Middle East peace process.

And even with the Palestinian effort toward negotiations, Israel has not taken any significant steps toward a solution to the problem, he said.

There is an active policy on the part of the Israelis not only to deny Palestinians independence and self-determination, but also to deny them any chance for economic development, said Beata Lipman, Manhattan resident and author.

Lipman said a conscious Israeli policy says the government is inactive in the affairs of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, while actually being very active, thus avoiding the scrutiny of the outside world.

Because Israel does not want the world to know what it is doing in the occupied territories it "pretends continually about what it is doing, what it is planning and how it is operating," she said.

Staff/Joe Freeman

Beata Lipman, left, and Dan Acheson-Brown, middle, listen as Roger Friedman addresses the topic "Achieving Middle East Peace: Prospects for a Two-State Solution" in a discussion Tuesday in the Union.

Some Israelis believe the peace problem could be solved by moving the Palestinians into Jordan, under the rule of King Hussein, but this is worrisome, Lipman said.

She said she does not believe a majority of Israelis or Palestinians consider this a viable solution, but about 20 percent of the Israeli population does. This could influence Shamir and the parliament in that direction.

Although she hopes the United States would oppose such a solution, Lipman said if the U.S. government did, that solution would not come about.

Considering the economic aid given to Israel by the United States, Lipman said the Bush administration could change Israel's attitude overnight if it wanted.

"This is a very powerful democracy," she said, "and it can make or unmake states."

Like the other two panelists, Roger Friedmann, professor of English and an Israeli citizen, said there is much opposition to an independent Palestinian state. However, he does see some cracks in that opposition and believes there is hope for a solution to the problem.

One of those cracks deals with the proposal for elections taking place in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Friedmann said.

"One of the standing complaints against the PLO as being the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people on the part of Israelis hardliners is the question of who elected them," he said.

Friedmann said if elections were to take place, PLO officials would easily win and that would open the way for negotiations between the PLO and Israel.

There is also a growing feeling in the Israeli military that the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip is a liability, he said. Friedmann has served in the Israeli military and reserve.

The upper echelons of the Israeli military today are uncharacteristically dovish, he said.

"In the past year, 100 Israeli generals have signed a petition stating that Israel can give up significant portions of the West Bank in a territory compromise," Friedmann said.

Rough seas subside; spill stalls

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — Rough seas that helped stall and break up some of the giant oil spill from the Exxon Valdez became calmer Tuesday and winds shifted away from fish-rich Kodiak Island, the Coast Guard said.

"Kodiak still seems to be saved," said Jim Hayden, the state of Alaska's cleanup coordinator.

Coast Guard spokesman Ken Freeze said the spill appears to have stalled and is breaking into tar balls. "That's better than ooey, gooey oil," he said.

Equipment continued to pour into the area aboard military transports. About 67 tons of material, everything from containment booms to absorbent pads, were scheduled to arrive Tuesday.

A huge Soviet oil-skimming vessel, the Vay Dagursky, was expected to arrive Saturday, state officials said. The ship can skim 200,000 gallons an hour and store 2 million gallons of oil on board, according to the officials. But it remains unclear how effective it might be against the Alaska spill.

Despite the favorable weather, a light sheen of oil seeped into the Kenai Fjords National Park at scattered inlets and fjords, Freeze said. With a thickness measured in molecules, the sheen does not threaten serious environmental damage, he said.

The Coast Guard said it planned to deploy a flotilla of 30 fishing boats from Seward and six from Kodiak, along with the Coast Guard cutter Morganthau, to drag small-holed herring and shrimp nets through the leading edge of the slick.

Coast Guard Capt. Joe Blackett said tests Monday showed the nets break the oil into small globs, which don't reform.

Deadline passes; talks to continue

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A midnight Tuesday deadline for completing agreements to sell Eastern Airlines to Peter V. Ueberroth passed without a deal being reached, but the judge overseeing the talks ordered all sides to return to his courtroom Wednesday morning.

It remained unclear whether the parties had agreed to extend the deadline, which was imposed by Ueberroth and Texas Air Corp., Eastern's parent company. None of those involved would comment immediately.

Although a group led by Ueberroth has agreed with Eastern union leaders on labor concessions necessary to complete the $464 million deal, sources said remaining obstacles included resistance by Texas Air to demands that include the naming of a special trustee to run the airline.

Furthermore, a committee representing Eastern's unsecured creditors expressed reservations Tuesday about the deal and indicated it wanted financial advisers to review it.

Discussions took place at offices of New York law firms before participants moved to the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, where they met separately with bankruptcy examiner David Shapiro.

At about 9 p.m., Ueberroth and partner Thomas Talbot left the courthouse. Ueberroth declined to say whether the deadline had been extended.

New definition should concern entire U.S.

That most clever of oxymorons, Army Intelligence, is up to its old tricks again. Currently, in Washington, a proposed policy change is being sent from government agency to government agency to get feedback. The proposal, if ever approved, would allow the military to slink past a 1976 presidential order issued by then-president Gerald Ford that said "No person employed or acting on behalf of the United States government shall engage in, or conspire to engage in, assassination."

Even though the term assassination may seem fairly clear to some, it is not to the military, and they are now seeking to have it redefined so that the military can hunt down and kill terrorists without having to bother with trivial little things like trials or the U.S. Constitution.

Using such tactics, according to the report by the Army legal service, "to protect U.S. citizens or the national security of the United States is a legitimate exercise of the international legal right of self-defense and does not constitute an assassination."

This new definition of assassination also provides the justification for carrying out the act. As Army spokesman Lt. Col. Richard Bridges has said, "If we're going after terrorists as a matter of self-defense, that is not assassination but the proper employment of military force."

According to the policy, such killings could only be conducted with the approval of the president, who will be required to consult with the congressional committees on intelligence.

This comment is very interesting when taken in light of former President Ronald Reagan's actions during the United States' attack on Libya. Reagan did call in members of the Senate and the House, but only specific ones, and only after the attack was already under way. He wasn't really consulting them, he was just briefing them as to what was going on.

The attack on Libya is also very interesting when you look at part of the process that led up to it. This part just happens to include Oliver North, who is now on trial for his role in the Iran-Contra scandal.

North provided two scenarios for eliminating Moammar Gadhafi, the leader of Libya and the United States' favorite terrorist.

North recommended that the United States arrange a meeting with Gadhafi and Terry Waite, the Church of England envoy who is now missing in Beirut. At a certain time, Waite would leave and the bombers would make their appearance. End of Gadhafi. End of problem.

The government rejected this proposal, calling it an illegal assassination attempt.

Commentary

Dwayne Lively

Collegian Columnist

North then offered a second scenario. Have Waite call Gadhafi and attack while the Libyan leader was on the phone. This scenairo was also rejected as illegal.

What the United States did instead was attack every place Gadhafi was known to spend the night. This was called a military strike. Evidently, when you know where someone is and try to kill him, it's called an assassination attempt, but if you just attack every place he might be, it's called a "military strike."

The biggest problem with the Army's proposal is not its justification of assassination. As the attack on Libya shows, the 1976 presidential order is just seen as something that must be worked around. Skirting it is fine, as long as one makes the effort to appear that it is being obeyed.

The biggest, and potentially the most dangerous, problem with the proposal is its definition on which types of groups these acts of "self-defense" could be carried out.

Not only are groups who carry out attacks on the United States and U.S. citizens considered as potential targets, but the policy also seeks permission to strike at groups that, while they may not pose an immediate threat or have actually attacked the United States, represent a "continuing threat" to the United States.

This concept of "continuing threat" is very ambiguous and citizens of any nation should get a little leery at anything a government prints that is left ambiguous. In the history of the world, governments have tended to use such ambiguous statements against their own citizens as well as any outside threat.

Also, the proposal does not specifically state that assassinations would be approved only for threats existing outside the United States. It is very possible such assassinations might be carried out on select groups within the United States. Remember, the proposal says that a group or individual need not have actually done anything against the nation for the government to send military forces to kill them. The military would be allowed to utilize the old fashioned "pre-emptive strike" against "potentially dangerous" groups.

While something must be done about terrorism, neither the president nor the military deserves the right to make arbitrary decisions to assassinate people based on ambiguous definitions of what a terrorist is. History has repeatedly shown, time and again, that citizens who, in their haste to solve a persistent problem, allow their government to use measures that violate the law of the land to save the land, eventually find themselves as the ones the measures are being used against.

Let's hope that someone in Army Intelligence has the intelligence to stop this proposal from ever reaching a vote. If not, let's hope that someone in Congress will see fit to stop it.

If not, look for the FBI to request permission to assassinate "drug lords and drug dealers," (just because they say that's what they are doesn't mean that's what they are). Since the CIA is the reason the presidential order was issued in the first place, look for them to conduct business as usual. Also, with the threat of assassination hanging in the air, look for the United States to become a much quieter, much more tense place to live.

At least we'll have done something about crime and terrorism.

Alternatives available to Fort Riley expansion

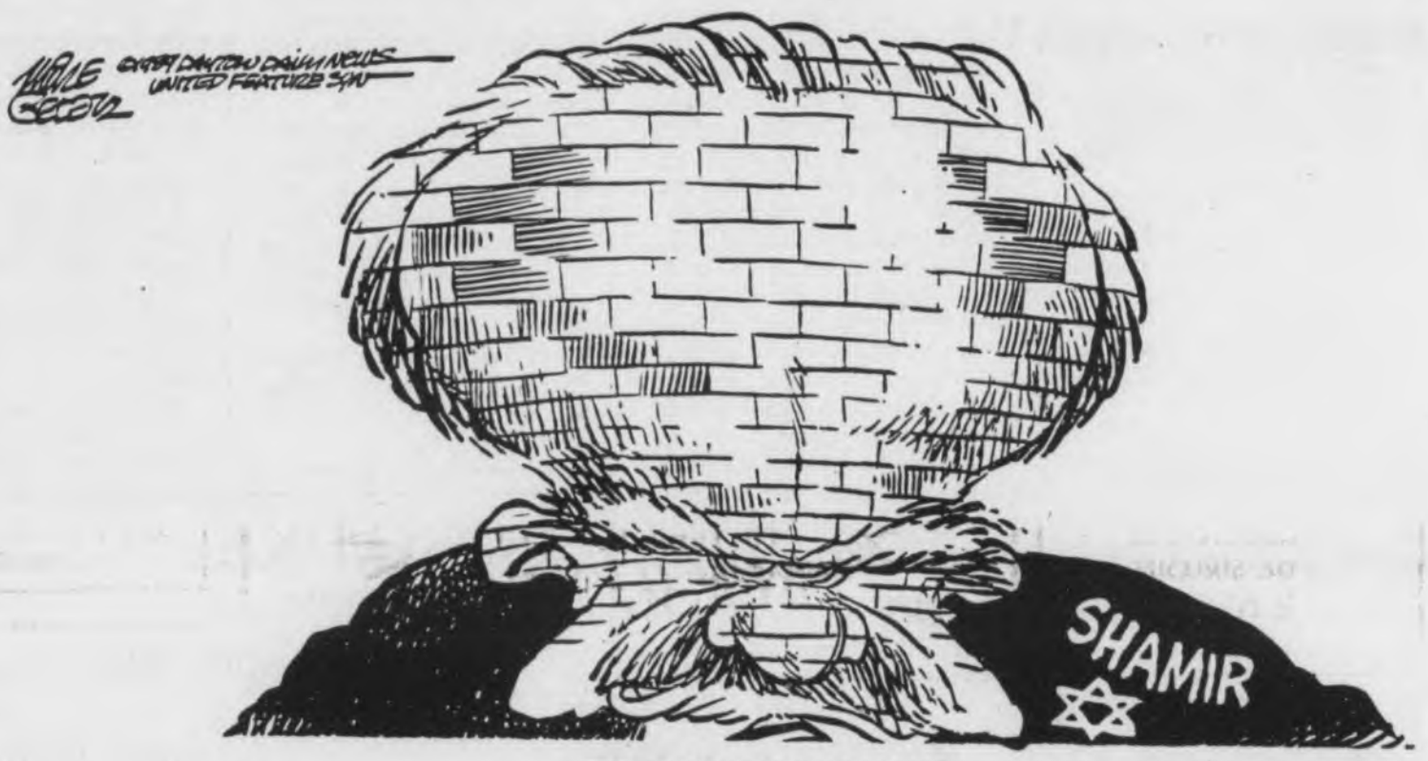
Don't stop 'til you get enough, says the old Michael Jackson song.

The nation's armed services have long subscribed to a similar philosophy. Over the last decade, military spending has gone through the roof, and taxpayers have borne the brunt of it.

Some of that money was used to purchase the military's National Training Center in California's Mojave Desert. The Center was to serve as a training ground for units stationed around the country, units like those found at Fort Riley.

But that isn't enough. Fort Riley now claims that it needs to double its size by adding 100,000 acres of farmland. Why? They need more training ground.

Never mind that 320 families happen to live on these 100,000 acres. The area includes wildlife, eight cemeteries, and farms that have remained with families for generations. Never mind that in this country, unlike others, the military is supposed to serve the people, not help themselves to the people's land. The important thing is that Fort Riley, that cornerstone of our national defense, has enough turf for its war games.



Never mind that this is a base that often uses golf carts instead of trucks and tanks for military maneuvers. Why? Because it's too expensive to use the big machinery. So why do officials at Fort Riley want more space for exercises anyway?

They claim they need it for their newer, more expensive, more advanced, long-range weapons systems.

In addition, the officals claim that they may need to double their acreage once again in the year 2015, due to further projected advances in weaponry.

Instead of needing a new chunk of Kansas every 25 years or so, Fort Riley could start learning to make do with the available resources. In the past, fiscal shortages have been dealt with by occasionally using golf carts instead of tanks. Now would be a good time to find other ways to improvise, such as taking more trips to the National Training Center.

In the long run, it would be much cheaper than having to take over Riley and Geary counties. It also might be more appreciated by the people they are supposed to defend.

Senators offend students

Extremists monopolize Senate

One of the hallmarks of American political discourse is the rabid anti-communism espoused by the extreme right. Careful to protect their highly stylized and mostly fictitious ideals of free enterprise, the nuclear family and Christianity, the extreme right raises the specter of communism not only as a means to stop rational debate, but also to hide its own bigoted opinions from public scrutiny.

In the past, right wing extremists have used anti-communism as a cover for their anti-Semitism. Last Thursday, however, during Student Senate's debate of divestment, anti-communism seemed more designed to camouflage support for apartheid.

While most of the opposition to divestment appeared to be from people with legitimate concerns, it also became something of a cause celebre for a small group of right-wing extremists who were scrambling to prove how great things are in South Africa.

In one rambling, mostly incoherent speech, one student displayed his anti-communist credentials by denouncing the African National Congress as "communist inspired." He then said that with respect to human rights, "South Africa has the cleanest hands in all of Africa."

The same individual went on to say that socialism was identical to National Socialism, and thus, the thousands of socialists, communists, social democrats and other Staatsfeinde on the left who died in the Nazis' concentration camps were no longer victims, but the very people responsible for the destruction of European Jewry.

Ironically, only a few minutes prior to this speech a senator had asked rhetorically, "What do we learn history for?" But the attempt at holocaust revisionism was doubly cruel in that at least one person within earshot was herself a refuge from Nazi persecution in the 1930s.

In addition to the McCarthyist anti-communism, there were several other statements typical of the authoritarian personalities who champion anti-democratic and quasi-fascistic causes.

Commentary

Scott Miller

Collegian Columnist

One student argued that apartheid was a historical necessity because "these people were running around in animal skins." Other than a few isolated gasps (one of which, I confess, was my own), no senators seemed prepared to challenge her assumption that one's rights should be contingent upon one's wardrobe.

Nor did the student seem to question whether her own perception of "uneducated" Africans had anything to do with the policies of the government she was so staunchly defending.

Another student painted a rather pastoral picture of South Africa in which multi-racial harmony and cooperation prevailed. I asked him if he had read the latest report from Amnesty International. He said, "No."

When I asked him what he had read, he handed me a journal called the "Family Protection Scoreboard." I leafed through to find an article denouncing Randall Robinson, the executive director of Trans-Africa, as a supporter of the African National Congress and every other "anti-white, Marxist movement or cause."

In fact, the ANC is neither anti-white — it has a strict policy of non-racialism — nor Marxist, unless by Marxism, one means a commitment to a mixed economy.

I also noticed an article quoting "U.S. journalist John Rees." According to an article in the Progressive, Rees is a veteran FBI informant and a regular contributor to the John Birch Society's "Review of the News."

As sort of a subplot, Senate also debated not how much, but whether, to continue funding the campus chapter of Amnesty International. The highlight came when one senator said he was against funding AI because "Maybe some of these (prisoners of conscience) ought to be in jail." This was after AI representatives had explained that prisoners of conscience were people imprisoned solely for their non-violent beliefs.

A close second goes to another senator who chimed in that AI was "political" because it tries to get governments to free prisoners of conscience. Never mind that AI tries to get all governments to release prisoners of conscience — the fact that AI "works with governments" was proof enough of its partisanship.

In a manner reminiscent of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, the senator sputtered and whined in desperation, "The next thing you know the Campus Communists will be asking for funding." The drama was good — even if the reasoning was not.

Thus, in a classic example of schizoid behavior, the governmental body set up to represent students politically is itself afraid to be political. Even if AI were a "political" group, there is nothing in Senate's constitution or by-laws to prohibit it from being funded. And if the Campus Communists ask for funding and if Senate does not think communism at K-State is a worthy cause, it can always "just say no."

In another rabid outburst, the same senator called the people who had come to show their support for divestment (many of whom were his own constituents) a group of "radical, liberal, bullshit people trying to railroad their opinions through Senate."

Aside from his utter failure to grasp the concept of an adjective, this senator also failed to understand that his own attempt to kill the issue of divestment by postponing the bill indefinitely could be characterized as trying to railroad his opinions through Senate.

It's ironic that the forum set up ostensibly as a model of democracy in miniature has become the breeding ground for the anti-democratic views of a few.

UPC coordinates paint gun shootout

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

If the idea of running around on a plot of land to avoid being shot with a paint gun by an opposing team sounds fun to you, the Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee may have a trip for you.

The survival game adventure will be at 10 a.m. this Saturday at Hunter's Island, south of Manhattan.

"We have seven teams signed up now," said Mike Penner, program adviser of UPC and graduate student in student counciling and personal services. "We'd like to get as many as 10 teams."

Teams consist of eight to 10 members.

"Even individuals who don't have a team can sign up and we will place them on a team," Penner said.

Each team will have a "base" where a flag on a stick will be located. The object of the game is to get the other team's flag and bring it back to the home base. By doing so, 50 points is awarded to the team. The flag must be brought back to the base or it is worth zero points.

Points are also awarded for hitting the opposition. Each hit is worth 10 points. Once people are hit, they must stand with their hands up so people know they are "out." The person then turns in a "killed" card to the judges table off the field. The card is used in figuring scores.

If a head shot occurs, both players are out. Referees on the field during the game will observe and settle any disputes. Anyone who shoots a referee is also out.

"This competition, using paint guns, involves a carbon dioxide cartridge which shoots a paint ball," said Jim Phalen, outdoor recreation chairman and senior in industrial engineering. "At a short range it can sting, depending on the clothing you wear. Loose clothing is better than tight.

"This is a growing sport; one we hope will take off here at K-State in a couple of years."

People wanting to participate have until 4 p.m. Thursday to sign up in the Activities Center at the Union.

"We need time to make up the brackets," Phalen said.

The trip costs $12, which covers gun rental, goggles, refreshments and one clip of paint pellets for each game. Additional clips will be available for $1.25 per clip for practice or spare ammunition. Transportation to and from the site is up to the participants.

Ted Pope, freshman in electrical engineering, and eight or nine other Theta Xi members have already signed up to compete.

Spring Fling '89 underway

Activity variety highlights annual event

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

Dating games, bed races and a road rally will all be part of Spring Fling '89.

"'Toons It Up," is the theme for this year's Spring Fling, using cartoons or cartoon characters as themes for different events. The annual event is for the 4,000 students living in residence halls.

"Manhattan merchants donated all the prizes that will be given away during the week," said Jeff Martin, sophomore in arts and sciences and co-chairman of Spring Fling.

"About 2,000 people are expected to participate in one way or another in this year's events," said Kelli Nichols, adviser to the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

Monday's event, "Game Night," took place in Derby, Kramer and Boyd food centers. The event gave students a chance to play a variety of board games.

A leadership banquet was Tuesday night in the Gold room at Derby for the '88-'89 staff and governing boards of the residence halls.

Today's main event is a Casino night in the Union Catskeller.

"The Casino night has always been popular because it offers students a chance to win a lot of prizes," Nichols said.

Sixteen people will be contestants in the "Dating Game" Thursday night in the Union Catskeller. The eight winners will receive a free dinner.

"The Dating Game is always fun because you get to see your friends up there," she said. "You try to give them hand signals so they know which man or woman to pick. It's a lot of fun."

Friday, Laff Olympics will feature tug-of-war, relay races, catch the Wildcat's tail, an egg race and a water balloon toss. Teams will be composed of five men and five women competing for prizes.

Super Saturday will offer 12 events, including a jello-eating contest, a marshmallow-stuffing contest, a scavenger hunt, a volleyball tournament and a road rally.

Sunday's bed race will wind down the week's events. The race will start at the Union, then end at the Pittman building.

"Spring Fling has always been successful because not a lot of other schools offer a program like it," Nichols said.

Board selects fall editor, ad manager

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

The fall Collegian editor and advertising manager have been announced by the Board of Student Publications.

On April 4, the board interviewed and chose Susan L'Ecuyer, senior in journalism and mass communications and history, as editor of the fall newspaper and Tamara McCreary, senior in marketing, as fall advertising manager, said Gloria Freeland assistant director of Student Publications Inc.

Because only one candidate for each position applied, board policy required the jobs to be readvertised for one week before the interviewing and hiring process could begin, Freeland said.

L'Ecuyer has worked for Student Publications for five semesters as a reporter, agricultural and business editor, senior staff writer, editorial page editor and managing editor.

"I am excited about getting the job," L'Ecuyer said, "because there are a lot of ideas that I would like to implement next semester, the largest one being increased coverage of campus."

Improving the quality and increasing the scope of the editorial page content is another major goal L'Ecuyer has set for the paper.

There will also be some changes in the newspaper because most of the Collegian staff will be new next fall, she said.

One aspect of the newspaper that will probably not change drastically is the design and look of the paper, L'Ecuyer said.

"We had quite a few changes in the past years and I think it is time to give the reader some continuity," she said.

During the three semesters McCreary has worked with Student Publications she has been a sales representative, campus and tear sheet manager and an assistant advertising manager.

McCreary said she plans to work closely with the news side of the paper to better match advertising promotions to subjects the news staff is interested in covering.

A monthly newsletter to businesses advertising with the Collegian is also in the works for the fall semester, she said.

"I also want to set down a policy on a rate card for mistakes," McCreary said. "An example would be like if there is a wrong phone number — there will be a certain percentage taken off the price of the add, because right now it is very subjective how mistakes are handled."

Applications for fall news and advertising staffs are available in Kedzie 103 and will be due at 5 p.m. April 14. Persons applying for either staff need to sign up to interview with L'Ecuyer or McCreary, April 17-21.

Variety of weekend feature films selected by UPC film committee

By Carrie Law
Collegian Reporter

The Union Program Council Feature Films Committee is responsible for choosing a variety of low-priced weekend films.

Every Friday, Saturday and Sunday evening in Union Forum Hall, the committee features second-release movies.

David Grant, senior in radio and television and Feature Films chairman, said his committee votes twice a semester on which movies it will show.

"We work with two film distribution companies," Grant said. "They give us a list of possible titles, and we develop a ballot. Our committee members rank the movies by choice."

Scheduling movies twice a semester, Grant said, has helped alleviate the problem of video stores coming out with the movies before his committee has a chance to show them.

The 18 committee members are responsible for movie choices, ticket taking at six films, and promotions for two films.

Feature Films is the only UPC committee budgeted to make money. Marilyn Woodward, program coordinator for UPC, said it doesn't look as if the committee is going to reach its annual projection.

"Feature Films is budgeted to clear between $12,000 and $13,000," Woodward said. "However, that money is not directly budgeted back into that particular committee."

The funds, Woodward said, are used primarily for the Promotions Committee.

She said UPC operates at a loss each year. However, it is supported by the Union to help coordinate student activities. Because it is not supported by student fees, it must charge small admission amounts to its activities.

Another film committee sponsored by UPC is Kaleidoscope Films. This committee differs from Feature Films in that it attempts to expand viewers' horizons by showing innovative and international films, Woodward said.

"Kaleidoscope works as a balance to Feature Films," Woodward said. "Its mission primarily is to provide the widest variety of films for the community as possible. Kaleidoscope basically provides a service to K-State students and the community."

The students on the committee are fairly aware of the latest in film, she said.

"They view the critics on television and read reviews," Woodward said. "Occasionally we take special requests from groups or classes about film choice."

Because films for Kaleidoscope are fairly expensive, this committee usually operates at a loss.

Keeping up with promotions is a big responsibility, Grant said.

"We distribute flyers in all the campus mailboxes promoting films by the week," he said. "We also have a movie line which we record weekly."

The UPC Promotions Committee is responsible for the weekly ads in the Collegian, as well as the movie promotions poster, Grant said.

One of the promotions which Feature Films sponsors is group discount nights, Grant said.

"We mail letters to various campus organizations. They come at a specific date and time, and we give them a special rate of $1 per person," Grant said. "We also work to co-sponsor movies with other groups."

Another special the committee offers is the "6 for 6" pass.

"It's really a good deal because you get six movies for $6," Grant said.

Apartment house fire kills 9

By The Associated Press

PEORIA, Ill. — Fire swept through an apartment house early Tuesday, killing seven children and two young mothers, and investigators were seeking to question a visitor who left the building shortly before the fire broke out.

The three other occupants of the building were injured, two of them seriously.

Fire Chief G. John Parker said the cause remained under investigation and authorities were focusing on a gas heater near where the fire started. Parker said that based on an initial investigation, authorities did not suspect arson and he stressed the man being sought was not a suspect.

Smoke detectors were found, Parker said, but the downstairs detector was connected directly to the building's wiring and electricity service had been cut April 4 by Central Illinois Light Co.

The blaze started about 2 a.m. on the first floor and had engulfed the two-story, wood-frame structure by the time firefighters responded.

"The fire was just blazing all of a sudden. ... I can't remember hearing (noise) or anything," said Rhonda Tracy, a relative of several of the victims who lived across the street. Tracy was the first to call the fire department at 2:20 a.m.

"I had never seen people come out burned like that," she continued. "I was just hysterical."

Police and fire authorities, aided by arson investigators from the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, were sifting through the rubble in a working-class neighborhood in this central Illinois city of about 130,000.

Three families, consisting of four adults and eight children, lived in the house, and had moved there last year, officials said.

Moslems petition for book ban

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Thirty-three Wichita Moslems have signed a letter asking that the novel "The Satanic Verses" be removed from Wichita's Public Library and its 11 branches.

The American Library Association, with headquarters in Chicago, said the Wichita request is the first formal attempt anywhere in the country to remove Salman Rushdie's novel from the shelves of a public library.

"The Satanic Verses" has been denounced as blasphemous by Moslems throughout the world. Rushdie is under a death threat because of the book.

The Wichita library gets an average of three or four requests a year to ban a book. Most complaints are about children's literature.

Normally, a three-person review committee reads the book in question and makes a recommendation, said Richard Rademacher, Wichita's director of libraries.

However, before "The Satanic Verses" is sent to a review committee, it will be discussed by the full library board at its meeting next Tuesday.

"Given all of the notoriety surrounding this book, I've sent the note to the board for discussion," Rademacher said. "What I assume will happen, the board will refer it to a review committee."

Painting for pleasure

With their clothes streaked with bluish-gray paint and their cheeks rosy from the cold, a lunch of hot chocolate and sloppy joes was a welcome sight for the K-State students and Abilene community members who joined forces Saturday to paint the Dickinson County day care center.

The group of about 30 students, parents and day care staff was hard at work by 9 a.m. in the day-long community service project sponsored by K-State Community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort.

Hardly daunted by the morning clouds and chilly wind, the group worked until about 2:30 p.m., painting the center, fixing its shed and clearing an adjoining field. Pat Lacy, director of the center, had nothing but good comments about the Community SAVE program and volunteers.

"We just feel so good about everything that got done," she said. "We painted twice before, but it took about two months (each time). We never realized how long it took.

"We are just so thrilled with this. It's a wonderful program and we hope it continues."

The Community SAVE program is in its third semester of service, and the number of students involved has increased every semester, said Pam Klaus, student coordinator. Forty-three students have participated this spring in volunteer projects, including two "Alternative Spring Break" trips.

Because the program, which Klaus, junior in leisure studies, said is one of the few of its kind in the United States, has to acquire its own funding, its advertisements are limited. Rural community leaders in Kansas usually learn about the program through word of mouth.

"Someone hears about us and they talk to someone else and somehow it filters down to us," she said.

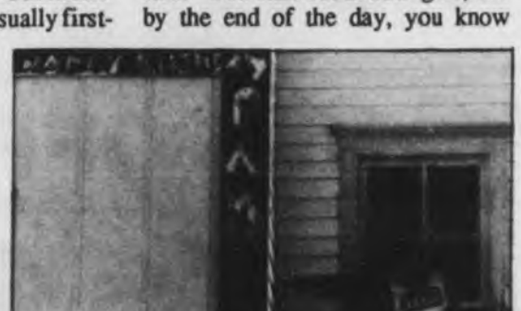
Lacy said she was at a K-State conference in the fall when she heard about Community SAVE.

Having volunteers to help with the painting of the center was a "double blessing," she said.

Last spring, a water pipe broke and destroyed much of the center's floor, costing the center nearly $4,000 to replace. The parents and staff spent last summer repairing the damage.

Because the center lost money last year, it couldn't afford to hire anyone to help with the painting.

The center furnished the paint and the siding used on the shed, which cost about $570, Lacy said.



Although 80 percent of Community SAVE volunteers are usually first-timers, Klaus said more students are beginning to go a second and third time.

"Once they get hooked, it gets in their blood and they sign up again," she said.

Angela Reinking, freshman in arts and sciences, is one of those who have become "hooked." In addition to going to Abilene last weekend, she spent her spring break in Kinsley, cleaning Midway Park. If she can fit it into her schedule, Reinking said she will go on another trip before the semester ends.

"I saw a sign that said 'Alternative Spring Break — FREE,' and that interested me," she said.

Reinking said she had so much fun she "was anxious to go again.

"It's an opportunity to get something done for someone and see the results."

So often people think of college students as being self-centered, Reinking said. Participating in a volunteer project gives her a chance to change that image.

"It's incredible how close you get to the people you work with," she said. "You start out as strangers, and by the end of the day, you know them."

Monica Kelly, sophomore in statistics and marketing, participated in her first Community SAVE project Saturday in Abilene. She said her living group requires her to complete two community service projects.

Kelly said she enjoyed herself and was impressed at how much the group accomplished in one day — so impressed that she may return for a second project in Summerfield.

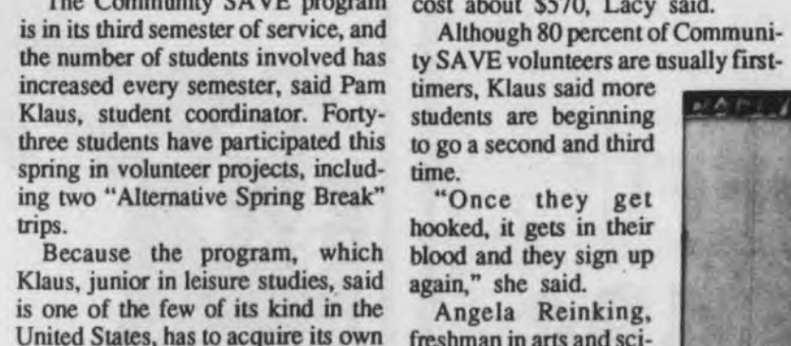
"I thought it was really fun, and the people were really friendly," she said.

More students would be willing to help, Kelly said, if they realized it only takes one day.

Klaus said students went to Sharon Springs during spring break. They painted picnic tables at South Park, restored the upper floor of the Butterfield Overland Dispatch Depot at the Fort Wallace museum and made repairs on Main Street.

Saturday, three Community SAVE teams will volunteer their services. A youth center will be painted in Leonardville as will the exterior of an auditorium in Summerfield. In Manhattan, the students will team with volunteers from the University for Man Home Program to paint and do general home repair on low-income homes for the elderly.

On April 22, volunteers will travel to Blue Rapids to paint a bathhouse, shelterhouse and picnic tables.



Klaus encouraged students who have not been on a project before to sign up for one of the four remaining trips.

"We'll even take volunteers on the day we leave. I never turn a volunteer away," she said.

The cold weather caused the volunteers in Abilene to quit work earlier than they had expected, but Lacy said she believes the parents and day care staff can finish the jobs on another Saturday.

For the center, which is in the process of changing its name to the Abilene Child Care Center, the help couldn't have come at a better time.

"We'll have a new name with new paint and a new look," Lacy said.

North guards honor despite accusations of code violations

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oliver North defended his honor and his efforts on behalf of the Nicaraguan Contras Tuesday against a fusillade of suggestions from the prosecutor that he violated the code he was taught at the Naval Academy.

"At the U.S. Naval Academy you would have been kicked out for this?" Prosecutor John Keker asked at one point.

"In the U.S. Naval Academy nobody taught me to run a covert operation," North retorted. Nor about "political warfare going on in Washington in 1983-1986."

On specific matters, North:

■ Denied he tried to help his associate, Richard Secord, make a half million dollars by renting a ship to the CIA, which turned out not to be interested in the offer.

■ Said he was merely following orders when he drafted a letter to Congress denying involvement in helping the Contras at a time when official aid was barred.

"At the Naval Academy you were taught falsehood included deception?" asked Keker of the witness, a Marine lieutenant colonel until he resigned in the wake of the Iran-Contra affair.

"You were also trained to obey all lawful orders?" asked Keker, underlining the word lawful on a large pad on an easel facing the jury.

"Did you take courses in that and learn what was meant by lawful and unlawful ... you were trained and taught that it was a crime when in World War II at the end of the war German officers came and said they were ordered to do it?"

Said North: "I don't believe I have ever received an unlawful order."

North said he was only following orders from National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane when he drafted a letter to Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., the chairman of the House Intelligence Committee. That letter denied news accounts that the National Security Council staff was soliciting donations and offering tactical advice to the Contras. It is at the heart of several charges concerning lying to or obstructing Congress.

Coupons used to cut corners

Local businesses discuss customer savings

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

To some individuals, coupons are just more paper to add to their stack of "save for later," but for others, coupons are money savers which help them to cut corners in their budgets.

Coupons for necessities such as food and personal and household products are available in newspapers and magazines or on the product itself.

Sherry Phillips, customer service manager at Wal-Mart Discount Cities, said, "There is a lot of coupon use by students — not the majority, but quite a few."

Phillips said people who do use coupons in Wal-Mart usually use more than one coupon at a time.

"They save, on the average, anywhere from $2 to $5," she said.

Stores accept coupons for various reasons, but Phillips named two of the biggest.

"It increases sales, and it's just good customer service," she said.

Linda Schultz, assistant manager at Dillon's Westloop, said, "We do get a lot of coupons. People do use them."

About two years ago, Dillon's began doubling coupons. Dillon's will discount the product equal to the amount stated by the manufacturer. The double coupon savings cannot exceed $1. For example, if the coupon is worth 50 cents, the consumer can receive a $1 discount as a double coupon. However, if the coupon is worth 60 cents, the consumer will still receive $1 in savings.

"Business picked up right after we started (doubling coupons), then other stores started offering triple coupons," Schultz said. Overall, she said the increased business has compensated for the cost of doubling coupons.

Dutch Maid offered triple coupons but now has adopted the policy of doubling coupons as much as 60 cents.

Schultz said more "family types" use coupons, than do students. She said Dillon's used to offer super coupons, and students used them. The super coupons appeared in newspapers, and were only redeemable at Dillon's.

Cindy Dugger, head cashier at Dillon's, said the super coupons were "not only easy to use, but really good deals."

Dugger said a package of hot dogs that was regularly $1.09 might be 59 cents with a super coupon. The store tried to pick items that would appeal to students, she said.

The store no longer offers super coupons because of an advertising format change. Prices on other items were lowered and it "wasn't feasible to continue both," said Jim Peterson, store manager for Dillon's.

Coupons are a promotional device, said Cynthia Fraser, associate professor of marketing.

"The manufacturer, if he or she is smart, will set the price fairly high," Fraser said. "Essentially (a coupon) is a trade-off."

People who don't use coupons will pay the higher price, she said, which balances for individuals who do use coupons.

"I think they're a good idea, but I don't ever remember to use them," said Michelle Belin, junior in business administration.

Leavenworth escapee captured

By The Associated Press

PENSACOLA BEACH, Fla. — Miami's "Blockhouse Bandit" was recaptured Tuesday after escaping from prison and undergoing plastic surgery to look like actor Robert DeNiro, U.S. marshals said.

Robert Litchfield, 41, was arrested by agents of a special U.S. Marshals Service task force as he left a condominium in this barrier island resort community with a large amount of cash, marshals said.

Litchfield escaped March 10 from the U.S. Penitentiary at Leavenworth — the first person to have done so in 12 years, said W.L. McLendon, U.S. marshal for Northern Florida.

Litchfield had black, puffy eyes, "which indicated he had just received plastic surgery of his eyes and ears to alter his original appearance," said Kent Pekarek, the U.S. marshal for Kansas.

"Robert DeNiro is his idol," Pekarek said in Kansas City, Kan. "He said he altered his appearance so he would look like Robert DeNiro."

Litchfield offered no resistance when surrounded by four deputy U.S. marshals early Tuesday, McLendon said in Tallahassee.

The "Blockhouse Bandit" nickname stemmed from Litchfield's specialty of robbing bank drive-in facilities separate from main banks.

Kansas State Collegian

California standout to sign with 'Cats

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State coach Lon Kruger may still be able to land South Plains (Texas) Junior College standout Keith Stewart, the Collegian learned Tuesday. The 6-foot-8 power forward had committed to the University of New Orleans, but South Plains coach Ron Mayberry said, via telephone Tuesday, that Stewart had changed his mind.

"He was really interested in New Orleans, and I can tell you that he is interested in Kansas State now," Mayberry said. "Honestly and truthfully, he was pretty well committed to New Orleans, but something happened and I'm not sure what, but he is wide open now. He definitely will not sign (a national letter of intent) tomorrow (today) though."

Today is the first day of college basketball's spring signing period, which runs through May 15. However, Kruger and his staff have been hitting the recruiting trail hard since K-State's NCAA tourney loss to Minnesota.

The Collegian also learned Tuesday that South California junior college player of the year Keith Amerson may be leaning toward K-State. Amerson, a 6-foot-4 swing player, attended Santa Monica College. Neither he nor his coach could be reached for comment.

K-State will almost assuredly sign one junior college transfer today in Moberly (Mo.) Junior College's Jeff Wires. Moberly coach Dan Callahan said, via telephone Tuesday, that Wires will sign with the Wildcats at noon.

"That's what Jeff Wires told me," Callahan said.

Wires, a 6-foot point guard, averaged 16 points and four assists this past season, while leading Moberly into the national junior college tournament and a 25-13 record.

"Jeff Wires was very instrumental in taking the Moberly Greyhound team to the national tournament for the past two years," he said. "He is a smart player and he is a very good defensive player, which I know Coach Kruger is interested in.

"He has a lot of character on and off the floor and he knows how to win."

K-State has also reportedly received an oral committment from Miami-Dade Community College shooting guard Jean Douillere. The 6-foot-4 Douillere (pronounced Delaware) averaged 22 points a game this past season.

J.R. Rider, from Encinal High School in Alameda, Calif., signed with K-State during the early signing period in November. However, the 6-foot-5 guard/forward apparently did not make grades last fall and did not compete for his high school team during the past season.

"He still has a lot of work to do," Kruger said of Rider. "He still has time to do the work ... But time is running out."

K-State is also apparently looking at 6-foot-4 McPherson High School product Todd Alexander.

Allen County Community College guard Carl Weldon, who showed a lot of interest in K-State during the early signing period, is apparently leaning toward Seton Hall and Kansas, among others.

However, Weldon's teammate, Ryan Thornton, may be interested in the 'Cats. The 6-foot-6 forward, who averaged 20 points a game last season, is also reportedly looking at KU.

Fite Nite ends with knockout

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

Boxing fans seeking the punishing championship knockout had to wait until the final bout of Sigma Phi Epsilon's 10th Annual Fite Nite Tuesday at Weber Arena, but the crowd was treated to eight other matches that went the distance and saw two fighters repeat as champions.

The host Sig Eps claimed three of the nine division championships, including the first two of the evening. Tom Colgan captured the flyweight crown, winning a decision over Haymaker Hall's John Webb.

Colgan used several strong left hooks to Webb's head during the opening two rounds to force a pair of standing eight counts, then held on in the third to earn the unanimous decision.

Andy Capps won the second title of the evening in the featherweight division, using a late flurry to beat Moore Hall's Bret Kolman. The two went toe-to-toe for most of the fight, but Capps muscled Kolman into his corner in the final minute of the fight, eventually winning a close decision.

Moore Hall's Stacy Sawyer overcame a reach disadvantage to Delta Tau Delta's Brian Graves to earn a victory in the lightweight matchup. Sawyer bullied his way inside on Graves, backing him into the corner at the end of the first round. Sawyer continued to work inside, forcing a standing eight count on Graves near the fight's end.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon's John Walker captured the first of two titles for his fraternity, beating Travis McKenzie of Farmhouse. Like Sawyer, Walker gave up several inches in reach and four or five inches in height. Walker scored several times to the body in capturing the evening's fourth-straight decision.

McKenzie's effort in the tournament earned him the Kelly C. Jackson Sportsmanship Award, in memory of the two-time Fite Nite champion and member of Sigma Phi Epsilon who died in 1983.

In what may have been the evening's best fight, Sigma Nu's Prestin Underwood, the defending lightweight champ, scored a close decision against Sig Ep Steve Neustaedter in the welterweight class.

Neustaedter managed to score frequently in the opening round, then apparently knocked Underwood down, bringing the crowd to its feet. However, the referee ruled Underwood had slipped. Underwood began to gain control in the second round, unleashing a fierce left that sent Neustaedter staggering.

In the final round, Underwood rocked the Sig Ep into his corner with another punishing left, but Neustaedter retaliated with a strong right hook that backed off the Sigma Nu. The judges awarded Underwood a narrow decision.

Another defending champion, Delt Dennis Clausen, retained his crown in the light middleweight class with a controversial decision over Phi Delta Theta's Mike Powell. Powell, who finished second to Clausen a year ago, used the left jab and uppercut effectively throughout the fight, sending Clausen to the canvas late in the first round. The knockdown also bloodied Clausen's nose. Clausen was able to score with jabs to the head, earning a decision from the judges that was met by a chorus of boos from the crowd.

The Delts earned a second straight crown in the middleweight class, as Dane Plummer used jabs and combinations to defeat Mike Booz of Phi Gamma Delta. Booz used a hit-and-move style to stay away from the bulky Plummer, forcing Plummer to cut off the ring in the second period.

Plummer finally caught Booz with a combination in the third, sending Booz to the deck. The Fiji rose to his feet as the final bell sounded, but Plummer nailed down the decision.

SAE Curt Crawford gave his house its second title in as many attempts, winning the light heavyweight crown with a decision over Goodnow Hall's Andy West. Both fighters exchanged several flurries during the first two rounds, with neither able to establish control of the fight.

The fight was headed for a close decision until Crawford caught West in the corner late in the fight with a series of punches to the face. The referee gave West the first standing eight count of the bout as the bell sounded. Crawford's late charge earned him the judges' decision.

Sig Ep Jerry Dixon ended the string of decisions with a second round technical knockout of Haymaker's Todd McLaury. Both fighters opened the bout scoring effectively by landing blows to the head. Dixon took a standing eight count midway through the round, shaking loose a sore left arm. He then used the left with two punishing hooks to McLaury's head as the round ended.

Both fighters continued their powerful punching display in the second round, with Dixon working on McLaury's exposed rib cage. The Sig Ep landed two consecutive blows to the stomach, with the second sending McLaury on his heels and to the canvas. McLaury was counted out, but the official decision had the referee ending the fight with the knockdown.

Both champions and runners-up were awarded medals in their respective divisions. The charity event, which benefits the American Heart Association, had several team and individual awards presented during the evening, including the winner of the 1989 Miss Knockout competition.

An Alpha Xi Delta sorority member was selected Miss Knockout for the second year in a row, as Laura Dunbar captured the title that was won by Sharla Perry in 1988. Dunbar won an all-expenses paid trip for two to Chicago.

Kappa Alpha Theta won the Sorority Support Award and was given $150 by Fite Nite announcer Scott Eilert for its contributions to the event.

Delta Tau Delta captured the Team Trophy Award and a special presentation was made from the American Heart Association to Sigma Phi Epsilon for its work with the organization in the past decade.

Tarkio visits today

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

K-State's baseball team will try to gain a little momentum as they play host to Tarkio (Mo.) College in a doubleheader today at Frank Myers Field starting at 1:30 p.m.

Tarkio, from the Heart of America Conference, is struggling this year with a 6-12 record going into Tuesday's game with Mid-America Nazarene.

"They were very competitive with us last year," Coach Mike Clark said. "We want to set up this weekend."

Clark was speaking of the 'Cats four-game series with Big Eight Conference for Missouri, which starts Friday night in Columbia.

K-State is coming off a 7-5 win over Emporia State Monday. The Wildcats were led by freshman Chris Hmielewski's 4-for-4 day. Hmielewski homered, scored two runs and had two RBIs.

"Chris Hmielewski is a kid we just love," Clark said. "Two years from now he could be all-Big Eight at two positions."

Hmielewski started Monday's game at first base, but has appeared in four games as a pitcher this season.

"We're real excited about him," Clark said. "He is one of the keys to our future."

Freshman Mike Dunaway, got his first start in right field for the injured Bill Barnard and went 1-for-3 on the day.

Jeff Ryan, also a freshman, started behind the plate for Dan Skala. He went 2-for-4 and threw out one of two Hornets attempting to steal.

"We had a couple of players that were frustrated and we wanted to give them a rest," Clark said. "We took a little chance. I said I'm impressed with our freshman class and they responded well. We got picked up by the young kids. They did a nice job. It was a nice team effort.

"It's been a challenge. It's been my toughest challenge coaching-wise in 14 years," he said of his young Wildcats.

K-State is 20-9 for the year and 2-6 in conference play. The next home game for the Wildcats will be Tuesday against Missouri Western.

Olson tops Kentucky list

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Lute Olson appears to be the No.1 candidate for Kentucky's vacant basketball coaching job if the price is right.

Olson, head coach at Arizona, is expected to meet with Kentucky athletics director C.M. Newton this week to discuss the details of the job.

Kenney not in Chiefs' plans

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The last few years it seems one of the big questions as the Kansas City Chiefs looked ahead to their next season was where quarterback Bill Kenney fit into the picture.

This time the answer is simple — he's out of it.

Marty Schottenheimer, the Chiefs' new coach, gave Kenney the news last week after the first day of off-season conditioning drills, but it didn't become generally known until Monday.

Golfers finish 3rd in 27-team meet

By The Collegian Staff

K-State moved up one place during the final 18-hole round at the Missouri Intercollegiate at Tantara to finish third in the 27-team tournament. The Wildcats shot 313 Tuesday to put them at 634 for the two-day tourney, behind only first-place Wichita State, 624, and second-place Missouri, 628.

First-round leader Tennessee-Martin shot 325 Tuesday, then dropped to fourth place at 637.

Before the season started, Bunker said Missouri was picked as one of the top four teams in the Big Eight Conference, while K-State was picked towards the bottom of the league standings, so he had to be happy with his squad's play.

"We played better today," K-State coach Russ Bunker said of Tuesday's performance. "We really wanted to catch Missouri on the back nine and just couldn't do it."

First-round leader J.P. Velasco, of Tennessee-Martin, finished right where he left off Monday with a 73 Tuesday, to give him medalist honors with a score of 150.

K-State was led, individually, by Troy Keller, who shot a 77 on the par-71 course Tuesday to finish in sixth place overall with a score of 156. Right behind Keller were teammates Jeff Sedorcek and Daran Neuschafer.

Sedorcek came back from shooting an 82 on Monday to post a round of 76 Tuesday, putting him in 12th place with a score of 158. Neuschafer, shooting in his first tourney of the season, shot an 80 Tuesday to go along with his first-round total of 79, giving him a 17th-place finish at 159.

Brett Vuillemin shot a 161 and Brad Stephens a 171 to round out the scoring for the 'Cats.

"This sure gives us a good indication of our improvement," Bunker said, "and also something to shoot for at the Big Eight tourney."

The K-State men will be in action again April 27-29 at Northern Illinois.

also receive funding.

"The most prevalent advantage to this is that the additional salary increase is closing the gap with our peer institutions," Hayter said. "We have been below them in the past."

Hayter said teaching and research needs, as well as new programs, have been limited in the past and the program enhancement funds will help develop many areas in need.

"Now we can have programs that we should have had a long time ago," he said.

The Legislature also approved capital improvement funds, which are traditionally granted to regents schools, Hayter said.

These will be used for improvements on handicap access, central cooling and plant science, and will total about $858,000, he said.

between Congress and Bush, barring a compromise while the bill is before a conference committee that will work out minor differences between the House and Senate versions.

Such a deal, however, appears unlikely.

"There isn't going to be a compromise," said Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas. "It's going to be $4.25 an hour and a six-month training wage, period."

Democrats nonetheless called on Bush to accept their proposal.

"If there is any one thing that the 101st Congress must do it is to increase the minimum wage," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, chastising Bush for opposing a $4.55 an hour minimum wage while supporting expanded capital gains tax breaks for the wealthy. "This legislation will be a test of whether we indeed are seeking a kindler, gentler nation," Mitchell said.

The defeated Bush proposal and the amended Kennedy bill contain provisions allowing some workers to be paid a wage below the federal minimum wage.

Bush has insisted that provision extend for six months to all newly hired workers, regardless of prior work experience.

Kennedy, like the sponsors of the House bill, balked at that proposal, but to win the support of moderate and conservative Democrats agreed on a two-month period during which some employees could be paid 85 percent of the minimum wage.

That provision was contained in the amendment, offered by Democratic Sens. Bob Graham of Florida and David Pryor of Arkansas.

Victims of cult sacrifice discovered in mass grave

By The Associated Press

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — Police found a mass grave just south of the Mexican border Tuesday containing the bodies of 12 people who were the victims of human sacrifice by a satanic cult of drug smugglers, officials said.

"It was horrible," Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez told a news conference in this border city. "It was like a human slaughterhouse."

Mexican federal police arrested four people, said sheriff's Lt. George Gavito. Gavito said the suspects were U.S. and Mexican citizens, but did not identify them further.

The dead, found by the federal police, included 21-year-old University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, who vanished during his spring break last month while in the Mexican city of Matamoros, Gavito said.

Kilroy apparently was chosen at random by drug smugglers who hoped human sacrifices would protect them from harm, Gavito said. He was taken after the cult members "were told to pick one Anglo male that particular night," the lieutenant said.

The cult had been involved in human sacrifices for about nine months, he said, and prayed to the devil "so the police would not arrest them, so bullets would not kill them and so they could make more money."

Authorities would not comment on the other victims and would not say whether any were U.S. citizens.

The 12 bodies were found Tuesday morning in a field about 20 miles west of Matamoros, along with evidence of voodoo or magic, Gavito said.

Bills block students from pre-enrolling for next semester

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

The long lines for delinquent fines at registration in January have caused a change in the pre-enrollment process for fall classes.

"For the first time, (students) cannot pre-enroll if they owe a bill to the University," said Donald Foster, registrar. "It is a response to the problem that occurred during spring registration."

Delinquencies caused long lines and computer delays during January's spring registration.

"The change is an attempt to clean up as many delinquencies as humanly possible before the August and January fee payment in Ahearn Field House," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

Too many students and staff were frustrated by the previous process, Bosco said.

"We all realize the problem of delinquencies has gotten out of hand," he said. "Now, while the students are on campus, is the best time to contest delinquencies and resolve them. Consequently, if a student owes the University money, the time to get it cleared up is before registration."

Delinquency payment is not the only change resulting from the problems occurring at registration, Foster said. The hours and days for registration have been changed.

Extended summer 1989 fee payment hours will be from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

"Fall (fee payment) is being extended from two days to three," Foster said. "The number of hours scheduled for registration in the past has stretched us to the limit in the number of students we could handle.

"We learned with spring registration that the computer hardware could not handle the load of registration as it existed," he said. "So we elected to add a day to help prevent problems with the computer."

Foster said students who register at their scheduled time only take 15 minutes to complete the process, if they have no problems with delinquencies or financial aid. But one of the biggest problems occurring during registration is students ignoring the alphabetical schedule and coming in to register the last day.

"In order to help prevent this problem, a warning that a student's class schedule will be dropped if they do not pay fees on their scheduled day has been published in the fall class schedule," he said.

"All of these changes are stopgap measures due to the recognized capacity problem with the computer," Foster said. "Our goal is to enroll and register students in a reasonable time and manner."

Eastern deal ends in impasse with Texas Air

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Peter V. Ueberroth's proposed $464 million purchase of strike-bound Eastern Airlines collapsed over an impasse with its unions and parent Texas Air Corp., the former baseball commissioner announced Wednesday.

"We are extremely disappointed this transaction collapsed last night and is done," Ueberroth told a news conference. "Our agreement with Texas Air is terminated, it's finished, it's over."

His announcement ended a stunning but short-lived effort to buy one of the nation's most unprofitable and strife-ridden airlines, which has been mired in an emotional strike and bankruptcy proceedings for more than a month.

Eastern President Phil Bakes said the Miami-based airline's strategy is to reorganize as a smaller carrier serving 50 percent to 60 percent of its pre-strike schedule of 1,040 flights a day and employing 15,000 to 18,000 people, compared with 31,000 before the strike.

The announcement that the Ueberroth deal had collapsed came following days of intense negotiations that continued Wednesday as a federal bankruptcy judge tried to salvage the sinking deal.

A key issue blocking the deal was whether an outside trustee should be appointed to run the airline until the sale was completed. The union proposal has been opposed by Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Texas Air, who would lose his authority over Eastern under the union plan even if the Ueberroth deal failed.

"The major hurdle I defined as interim management and the bankruptcy process," Ueberroth said. "We were not able to bridge this hurdle although both of us, I think, tried to do that."

Eastern's unions have accused Lorenzo of gross mismanagement and of stripping Eastern of vital assets since Texas Air bought the airline in 1986, and have expressed concern he would continue doing so if left in charge.

Henry Duffy, president of the Air Line Pilots Association, issued a statement from Washington expressing the union's disappointment. He said the problems that caused the strike remained unresolved.

"This is but one act in a multi-act play, and the bankruptcy judge still is running the proceedings," Duffy stated.

"I'm disappointed, to say the least," said Wally Haber, a Machinists union official in Miami. "I can tell you right now, Mr. Lorenzo would have walked away in this deal with a lot more money than he put into Eastern Airlines. Obviously they've got some plans to milk some more out of Eastern."

At Eastern corporate headquarters, management employees gathered around television sets and expressed relief. "I do think there is a certain release of anxiety here," said spokesman James Ashlock.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Burton Lifland met Wednesday with attorneys for Eastern, its unions and the Ueberroth group to try to save the deal negotiated only days earlier, saying it represented a historic opportunity to save one of the nation's biggest airlines.

Any deal required full agreement from Ueberroth, Lorenzo, Eastern's three unions and Eastern's creditors.

Eastern has been flying only a fraction of its schedule since its Machinists union began a strike March 4 that has been supported by its flight attendants and pilots unions.

In a related development Wednesday, a federal judge in Miami upheld the Eastern pilots' participation in the Machinists strike. The ruling by U.S. District Judge Edward Davis seriously hurt the company's effort to get the airline flying again.

Davis said in his opinion there was no evidence the Air Line Pilots Association would have gone on strike if the Machinists hadn't.

Eastern sought bankruptcy protection March 9 because of a cash crisis stemming from the walkout and pressure from creditors. Lorenzo has been trying to sell the airline since and has indicated there have been other overtures.

Trans World Airlines Chairman Carl Icahn, who had been approached by Eastern's Machinists about making a possible offer, issued a statement Wednesday saying he remained interested in Eastern. However, he stated, "although I might be willing to risk my capital in Eastern, I would not be willing to pay it over to Texas Air."

Housing quality examined

Apartments may be found unsuitable

By Deborah Dinges
Collegian Reporter

K-Staters in a rush to find a place to live may settle for apartments considered substandard by the city or the fire department, said Wade Whitmer, director of the Consumer Relations Board and a freshman in public relations.

"Tenants don't know what their rights and obligations are," Whitmer said. "Students who are new or moving out of the dorms and greek houses sometimes get in a panic and don't stop to think about their lease before signing it.

"Most of the student housing has some kind of violation, especially the old ones."

Fire Marshal Larry Wesche said that every year for the past two or three years, the fire department has been inspecting all buildings with three or more apartments.

When the inspections were initiated, Wesche said the fire department had difficulty locating all the apartments. With the new housing appraisal, however, the fire department now has an up-to-date account of the buildings.

Since the fire code inspections started, about 75 percent of houses with violations have been improved, he said.

"The biggest problem is that the occupants tear the apartment up and don't tell anyone, such as taking the batteries out of or breaking the smoke detector," Wesche said.

The lack of proper fire exits is another problem the fire marshal has found. Basement apartments are required to have large windows close enough to the floor for people to crawl out of in case of a fire.

The hot water heater and extensive structural problems with the plumbing have prompted Karen Swank, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and biology, to give 30-day notice to her landlord.

"The overhead sewer pipes in the bathroom have leaked since I moved in at the beginning of the semester," Swank said, and the water heater has no valve release.

"If it gets too hot, it will blow up," she said.

The copper tubing that brings natural gas into the water heater is also in violation of the inspection code, Swank said. The copper reacts with the natural gas, which can eventually cause a gas leak.

Code inspector Sally Schorey said it is difficult to estimate the number of cases of substandard housing in the area because the tenants are unaware of the problems or don't report them.

"I go on complaints," Schorey said. "If there is no complaint to me or the Consumer Relations Board, I can't do anything about it."

One of the more dangerous infractions is carbon monoxide or gas leaks of which tenants are unaware, she said.

Slayings provided 'protection'

By The Associated Press

MATAMOROS, Mexico — Members of a voodoo cult of drug smugglers, arrested in at least 12 ritual slayings, including a U.S. college student, said Wednesday they sacrificed their victims to gain demonic protection from police.

Police dug for two more bodies Wednesday at the ranch where they found the 12 mutilated bodies and said they were seeking a Cuban they believe led the bloody cult.

"We killed them for protection," Elio Hernandez Rivera, 22, of Matamoros, told reporters. He said at a news conference that he shot and killed one victim and decapitated another.

Asked if he regretted the slayings, he said, "Yes, but it's too late."

"Very clearly they believed the human sacrifices and the animal sacrifices put a magical shield around them that protected them from evil or harm, even up to bullets," said Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox.

In addition to the University of Texas pre-medical student, the victims included a Matamoros policeman, a Mexican federal police volunteer, and a 16-year-old, Mexican and U.S. officials said. At least one victim was kidnapped in Brownsville, Texas, in the last month, and as many as three of the dead may be American, officials said.

Contrary to officials' assertions Tuesday, Oran Neck, U.S. Customs chief agent in Brownsville, just across the Rio Grande from Matamoras, said Wednesday there was no evidence of cannibalism.

Felipe Flores, spokesman for the Mexican attorney general's office, also said he knew nothing about reports of cannibalism, although he added that victims' brains were cut out and put on a fire, mixed with blood, herbs, rooster feet, goat heads and turtles.

Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez said cult members removed some victims' vertebrae to use them for necklaces.

Suspects in Mexican custody have told police of 14 human sacrifices, but no more bodies were found by Wednesday night and digging was not resumed, said Juan Benitez Ayala, head of the Mexican Federal Judicial Police.

Mexican officials said five men were arrested in the case.

Mexican police took four of the men to a news conference Wednesday and the four said they killed on the command of a cult "godfather," identified by police as Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, a Cuban national in his late 40s. Police on both sides of the border were seeking him, and police said he may have fled to the United States with a female cult member.

Constanzo killed one of the victims, University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, said another of the arrested men, Serafin Hernandez Garcia, 22, of Brownsville.

'Mercy killings' investigated

VIENNA, Austria — City authorities on Wednesday suspended the head of a hospital department where four nursing aides confessed to at least 49 "mercy killings," and they ordered the exhumation of bodies of several presumed victims.

Dr. Franz Pesendorfer's suspension follows mounting criticism of his refusal to cooperate with police during an investigation last year to find evidence of mass killings at Vienna's Lainz hospital.

Four assistant nurses arrested since Friday have confessed to killing at least 49 elderly patients with overdoses of medicine or by forcing water into their lungs. Most victims were in their 80s.

Newspaper reports say the lives of 22 of the 49 victims could have been saved if the hospital official had cooperated last year, when senior investigator Max Edelbacher said police met "a wall of silence" at the hospital.

AIDS sweeping Latin America

BOSTON — Some Latin American and Caribbean countries may be heading toward an epidemic of AIDS similar to the wave of lethal disease that is sweeping parts of Africa, a federal health expert warns.

AIDS in some countries appears to be spreading quickly from homosexuals to heterosexuals, putting many more people at risk of the disease, said Dr. Thomas C. Quinn of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

He and two colleagues estimate that 2.5 million people in the Western Hemisphere are already infected with HIV-1, the AIDS virus, and 500,000 are likely to be diagnosed with acquired immune deficiency syndrome by 1992.

"We have great concern that we are starting to see a more heterosexual pattern of spread emerging in these countries," Quinn said in an interview. "Once it becomes an established heterosexual epidemic in those countries, it has a potential for rapidly increasing in sheer numbers, like in Africa."

Book returned with $400 fine

CRYSTAL LAKE, Ill. — When a book was returned to the Crystal Lake Public Library 22 years late and worse for wear, librarians had no complaints. Four $100 bills fluttered out, more than enough to pay the fine.

"The book's a bit shabby, but it's back home again," Librarian Arden Perkins said Tuesday.

The book, titled "The Folk Song Abecedary," by James F. Leisy, arrived at the library in a plain brown wrapper last week.

Folded inside was a note from the anonymous borrower.

"This book was removed from your library several years ago. I am returning it with overdue fines and apologies," the note said.

Perkins said that based on the 5-cent-per-day fine the library levies for overdue books, this one must have been checked out 22 years ago, shortly after it was put on the shelves.

Circulation records are not kept that long, so the only clues to the whereabouts of the borrower are the postmark from De Kalb, Ill., and the De Kalb Chronicle the book was wrapped in.

Perkins said the library only would have required the borrower to pay the value of a book, plus $3, but will treat the $400 as a gift.

Soviets to inspect sites

WASHINGTON — Soviet arms control inspectors decided Wednesday to conduct "short-notice" inspections at Cape Canaveral, Fla., and Huntsville, Ala., under terms of the treaty banning medium-range nuclear weapons, the Pentagon announced.

The Soviet inspection teams had arrived in Washington on Tuesday.

Cmdr. Ken Pease, a Pentagon spokesman, said one 10-member team specified a visit to a missile storage facility at the Redstone Army Depot in Huntsville. The other 10-member team asked to inspect Complex 16 at Patrick Air Force Base at Cape Canaveral.

Complex 16 was once used as a launch test center for the Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles that are covered by the treaty.

The Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty authorizes the United States and Soviet Union to conduct 20 short-notice inspections this year as part of the procedures to verify the destruction of all medium-range missiles.

To date, the Soviets have performed 12 short-notice inspections, eight of them at European facilities and four inside the United States.

Sleeping couple kidnapped

MEDICINE LODGE — A Phoenix, Ariz., couple sleeping in a rented truck were kidnapped at gunpoint by two men Wednesday but escaped by jumping from the moving truck.

The alleged kidnappers were caught later in the day.

The woman suffered head injuries and was flown in critical condition to a Wichita hospital. Her husband was treated for abrasions.

The couple, whose names were not released, were sleeping in the truck at a Pratt County lake when two men entered and pointed a rifle at them, said Barber County Prosecuting Attorney Richard Raleigh.

The two men, who are suspects in a string of car thefts, drove off with the couple in the back of the truck.

After the couple escaped, the men abandoned the truck and fled on foot. They were tracked down by Barber and Pratt county law enforcement officers and highway patrol troopers, who used bloodhounds and an airplane during the manhunt.

The men were captured 1½ miles from Medicine Lodge.

Fire kills 3 in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A fire blamed on careless smoking killed three children on the city's east side Wednesday, fire investigators said.

Firefighters crawled on their hands and knees through the smoke-filled house in an effort to save the children trapped in the house but were initially pushed back by heat and smoke.

The children, Adrian Williams, 16, his sister, Anisha, 12, and their younger brother, Virgil, 5, were found on the second floor of the house.

"It always gets to you, especially when they are children," said acting Fire Capt. Patrick Brady, a 17-year fire department veteran. He was one of the first firefighters on the scene of the fire that was reported shortly after midnight.

The children's mother was outside the two-story house when firefighters arrived. "She was calling for her babies," Brady said.

A neighbor tried to prevent the woman, Noba Williams, 36, from going back into the house and one firefighter finally dropped a hose to stop her.

Rick Shepherd, who was sleeping at his grandmother's house across the street from the Williams house, said he saw Williams "in hysterics" trying to get back into the house.

Coelho returns to campus

Anthony Coelho, candidate for vice provost for research and dean of the Graduate School, will be visiting K-State today and Friday to become more familiar with the University and to meet some of the administrators, said Elizabeth Unger, chairwoman of the vice provost selection committee.

Coelho, who believes in having a strong research base for a university, is the leading candidate for the position of vice provost, she said.

"Coelho will have an extremely tight schedule for the next two days, so he won't be available to the public," Unger said.

Candidate to re-visit campus

Lane Marshall, professor of architecture at Texas A&M University, will be visiting K-State this week for the second time. Marshall is a candidate for the position of dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

Marshall was invited back for a second interview by the provost's office. The new dean will replace Mark Lapping, who has resigned the position.

Marshall will be meeting with the dean search committee, faculty and students Thursday and Friday in various meetings. He will also attend the dedication of the J.R. Macdonald Laboratory at 1:30 p.m. Thursday.

Clarification

Faculty Senate only approved recommending to the provost that faculty members be required to include the consequences of plagiarism and cheating on class syllabi. It is not empowered to set such a policy as was reported Tuesday.

President unveils proposals

Bush calls for ban on PAC contributions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush urged a ban on campaign contributions by political action committees and said he opposed federal financing of congressional races Wednesday as he unveiled proposals to tighten ethical rules for Congress, judges and the executive branch.

"We've got to work together to reform a public code of conduct that, at times, appears to be in disarray," Bush said. "And it's not logical or fair — it's both too harsh and too lenient and it elevates detail over substance, precept over principle."

Bush announced his program in a speech to the annual convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. Most of his proposals were embraced in a legislative proposal he sent to Congress or an executive order he signed during the day.

Suggesting a major change in the way congressional campaigns are financed, Bush called for a halt to campaign contributions from political action committees, which pumped nearly $156 million directly into congressional races last year.

"We have allowed our parties to become weakened and overshadowed by special interests, and we can best restore the role of the parties by limiting political action committees," Bush said.

"PACs weaken the parties, restrain competition and deaden the political debate," the president said.

Aside from the $156 million in direct contributions, PACs spent $6.8 million to help specific congressional candidates, but the money went for such expenses as television commercials and mailings with nothing going directly into the candidates' campaign treasuries, according to records at the Federal Election Commission.

Bush's presidential campaign received $862,950 in direct contributions from PACs last year and benefited from millions of dollars the PACs spent independently on its behalf. One PAC alone, the National Security Political Action Committee, spent $8.1 million to help Bush, according to FEC records.

Stopping short of offering a formal proposal, Bush said he would consult with Congress on PAC funds. Brushing aside a plan espoused chiefly by Democrats, Bush added, "I also oppose federal funding of congressional campaigns."

If adopted, the net result of Bush's recommendations would be for congressional races to be financed by private contributions, already limited by law to $1,000 per candidate per election.

Bush urged Congress to eliminate a provision of law allowing legislators to convert leftover campaign funds to personal use, as is permitted for anyone who held office before 1980.

"Political donations should not become a sort of individual retirement account for members of the United States Congress," the president said.

In a question and answer session with the editors, Bush said:

■ He has given "a full accounting" of his role in the Reagan administration's secret program to supply the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Referring to reports about his role, emanating from the trial of former White House aide Oliver North, Bush said, "I don't like reading charges that I happen to feel are untrue but I have to stand on that, and that just goes with the territory."

He said he still considers North a hero based on his decorated service in the Vietnam war.

■ The federal government had moved "much more quickly and more boldly than it gets credit for" in the cleanup of Alaska's oil spill. Nevertheless, he said "maybe I should accept some criticism on whether I should have" sent in federal troops a week earlier than he did.

■ He would not commit himself to veto the Fairness Doctrine if it is reinstated by congressional action. Then-President Reagan vetoed a renewal of the regulation last year and Bush said "I will stand with the previous position" of the Reagan administration.

■ His off-the-record social contacts with reporters were not intended "to seduce the press. We're treating them as human beings."

UPC to 'recycle' records by collecting, selling music

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

The Union Program Council's Special Events Committee is providing students with the opportunity to "recycle your records" with a sale of extra or unwanted records, tapes or compact discs, said Mike Penner, UPC program adviser and graduate student in counselor education and education psychology.

UPC served as a central collection point Tuesday and Wednesday, and will serve as the sales point from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. April 25 and 26 in the Union. The goal of the sale is to give students a chance to sell their extra or unwanted music and to buy music at a low price.

The selection of records consists of both new and old items, priced from 10 cents to 20 cents for some of the singles and around $10 for some of the compact discs, said Stacy Myles, senior in apparel and textile marketing and committee chairwoman. "There are some compact discs for $4," she said.

The students price their own records and each record is marked off a list upon its sale. Students who bring their records in for sale sign a contract in which they agree to pay a 4½ -cent sales tax on their revenues. The sales tax will go to the state, Penner said.

UPC will receive a 15 percent commission on the sale of the records to cover advertising and administrative costs, he said.

The UPC Coffee House Committee conducted a similar sale in 1986. The Coffee House Committee has been replaced by the UPC Eclectic Entertainment Committee, but the collection and sale was picked up by the Special Events Committee, Penner said.

UPC collected 2,000 to 3,000 singles, albums, tapes and compact discs at a table on the first floor of the Union, Myles said.

"The turnout has been very good for the collection," she said. "We have a lot of organizing of records to be done before the sale."

Penner said students who are selling their records can pick up their money and leftover records within a week after the sale.

Macdonald laboratory dedicated

Accelerator dedicated to physics

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

The dedication of the J.R. Macdonald Laboratory at 1:30 p.m. today in Cardwell 56 will officially begin the use of the expanded facility.

The Macdonald Laboratory is the only university accelerator facility in the nation committed solely to atomic physics, said Patrick Richard, lab director.

Events planned for the day include a scientific symposium at 8 a.m. in the Union Big Eight Room and the dedication and tour of the facility in the afternoon.

"We are expecting approximately 50 to 60 scientists from outside the University to be here," Richard said. "Five very prominent scientists, including Val Kostroun of Cornell University and Lowell Bollinger of Argonne National Lab, will be making presentations at the symposium."

The original 9,000-square-foot facility was built in 1969 and was called the Nuclear Science Laboratory until 1979, when long-time professor and lab researcher James Macdonald died of a heart attack at a physics meeting.

Richard said other researchers in the laboratory asked the University to change the name of the laboratory to honor Macdonald.

In 1985, the Kansas Legislature appropriated $1.09 million for expansion of the building, and the facility received a $5.1 million Department of Energy grant for upgrading the 6 million volt tandem Van de Graaff accelerator facility, Richard said.

The expansion adds 6,000 square feet and includes new equipment for the facility, Richard said.

"The reason for the upgrade is to expand the frontier of the research in atomic physics and the ionic collisions we do here," said James Legg, head of the Department of Physics.

Legg said the upgrade will allow the researchers to produce fully-striped chlorine and argon, which is two times more on the periodic chart than what was possible before the expansion.

Richard commended the dedication and hard work students, faculty and staff put into the project.

"Four years ago, we made a commitment to the facility — making this upgrade possible," he said. "Now, it is a reality."

Front line of oil spill still breaking up

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — Aerial surveys showed "significantly less oil visible on the water" after two days of high winds and rough seas broke up much of the Exxon Valdez oil spill, the Coast Guard said Wednesday.

Off the coast outside Prince William Sound, where the tanker ran aground on Bligh Reef and lost more than 10 million gallons, observation flights found little more than patches of light sheen and spots of thick crude mousse, said Coast Guard spokesman Brad Smith.

But state officials disputed that account.

An overflight they conducted Tuesday in poor visibility spotted a medium sheen of oil around Chugach Islands and Barren Islands on the edge of the Cook Inlet, which leads to Homer, Kodiak Island and Anchorage.

"If it keeps moving in the general direction, it's going to get there," said Dan Lawn, a Department of Environmental Conservation official in charge of tracking the oil.

Smith said only small amounts of sheen and frothy mousse were observed in various areas of the southern part of the sound, but some islands and bays remained heavily oiled.

Cleanup operations continued on oil-covered areas like Naked Island, where workers used absorbent pads to scour the coastline, according to the Coast Guard, which assumed management of the cleanup under President Bush's order last week.

However, winds began to shift to the southeast, the National Weather Service said, meaning they could blow oil from the nation's worst-ever spill back toward Prince William Sound.

In other developments:

■ Adm. Paul Yost, commandant of the Coast Guard, was scheduled to arrive from Washington at Elmendorf Air Force Base in Anchorage, Alaska, on Wednesday and fly over the spill area Thursday.

■ The flow of oil from the North Slope has returned to normal, the operator of the trans-Alaska pipeline said.

Senate to vote on resolution

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will vote on a resolution tonight which would request that all fee increases be presented to Senate in order to be enacted.

"If the resolution passes, (it would request that) fee increases must be addressed and evaluated on the floor of Senate," Student Senate Chairman Todd Johnson said.

Johnson said the resolution is being presented to ensure that Senate would be aware of all possible fee increases, such as an engineering fee, which would enable it to review the merits of the fee.

Senate can vote to implement a fee increase or vote to send a fee to student referendum. Fee increases can also be implemented by Kansas Board of Regents without an advisory stand by Student Senate.

In the past, student fee increases have not been implemented without the approval of Student Senate, Johnson said.

Senate will hear first readings on two bills and a resolution.

One bill would establish an ad hoc committee to look into several revisions of the SGA Constitution, one of which could mean a change in student referendum procedure.

"There are several issuses that we need to look into," Johnson said. "For instance, the committee will evaluate whether the idea of a student referendum is a workable one. It will also consider the issue of fair representation in Senate."

The resolution to be heard would recommend that the Council on Parking give students parking access to the lower lot of the Union parking lot.

"Currently the lower lot is all faculty parking," Johnson said. "This summer, parking meters will be installed in the existing student parking on the upper level of the Union lot. This will increase our visitor capacity."

Senate will also hear first readings of a special allocation to fund $663.25 for a Kansas high school leadership conference for student councils across the state.

World peace, caring promoted by charity

The people of the Kansas Humanitarian Aid Campaign have gone a a few steps beyond most charity groups — make that a few giant-sized leaps.

As part of a Nicaragua hurricane relief effort, a school bus and five trucks full of clothes, medical supplies and hand tools left Saturday on a month-long journey that will eventually end in Nicaragua.

Although the effort was designed to aid hurricane victims, some political motivations were involved with the group's activities. But don't assume these people were some "left-wing, hippie leftovers" trying to help the Sandinistas (of all people!).

Their mission's motives were above the politics that are easily categorized as left or right. It was an act with one goal in mind — peace.

Relief organizers are working to change the way our government treats Nicaragua. In other words, their actions are a peace offering to convey a message to the Nicaraguan people that they are not our enemies.

And the response? Bill Dorsett, spokesman for the Kansas Network on Central America, called it "indescribable." The end result was more spirit and enthusiasm for giving than he expected — a "monumental" effort.

Many of the more valuable relief supplies came from hospitals — things that would have otherwise landed in the garbage. Sheets, wheelchairs and even a digital vascular scanner were among the "treasures" the group collected.

Not only did the Nicaraguan relief caravan prove America's trash could be someone else's treasures, it proved that when people's awareness is raised, they are more than willing to help people in need.

Unlike some groups which are only willing to complain about the less than desirable conditions in the world, this group of people was willing to try and make a tangible difference.

Like that old song goes ... hey, "let's give peace a chance."

Children suffer discrimination

Some Things Are Funny Like That
I went to the school yard to play and be happy and the man scowled down and asked WHAT IS MY AFFILIATION and I said I wasn't sick at all and only had one cold once last year
then he said WHERE IS YOUR BUTTON and I said my zipper almost always works but sometimes I forget but I looked and saw it was all the way up and he said LITTLE BOY THIS PLAY GROUND IS FOR BLACK CHILDREN and I said I was Black right on and he said HOW DID I KNOW and I said mister
I'm going just go on home now and I waved at him
goodbye. — Nicki Giovanni

I wish everyone could see the illustration that goes with this poem. A boy is standing proud, dressed in matching jacket and cap. He sticks his chest and chin out, holds his head up, and looks his opponent directly in the eyes.

His expression seems to say, "I don't need or deserve this racism. Get out of my way. I've got better places and people to be with."

No doubt this is a boy showing strength and bravery in the face of racism. When I read this poem I am reminded of the biracial child.

It seems ironic that biracial children face so much racism. After all, everyone seems so concerned about them when they're criticizing interracial relationships.

Commentary

Barbara Baker
Collegian Columnist

We've all heard the criticism. Interracial relationships hurt and confuse the poor children. But we don't think enough about the children to stop the racism against them or their parents.

Giovanni's poem is a wonderful tribute to interracial children because it shows how determined, confident, and secure biracial children can be if their parents have provided an example of confidence, loyality and security within their relationship.

Children pick up their identities through their parents' values and attitudes. If interracial parents have a strong sense of themselves, are committed to their relationship and take pride in their love, no child will be hurt or confused in that type of relationship.

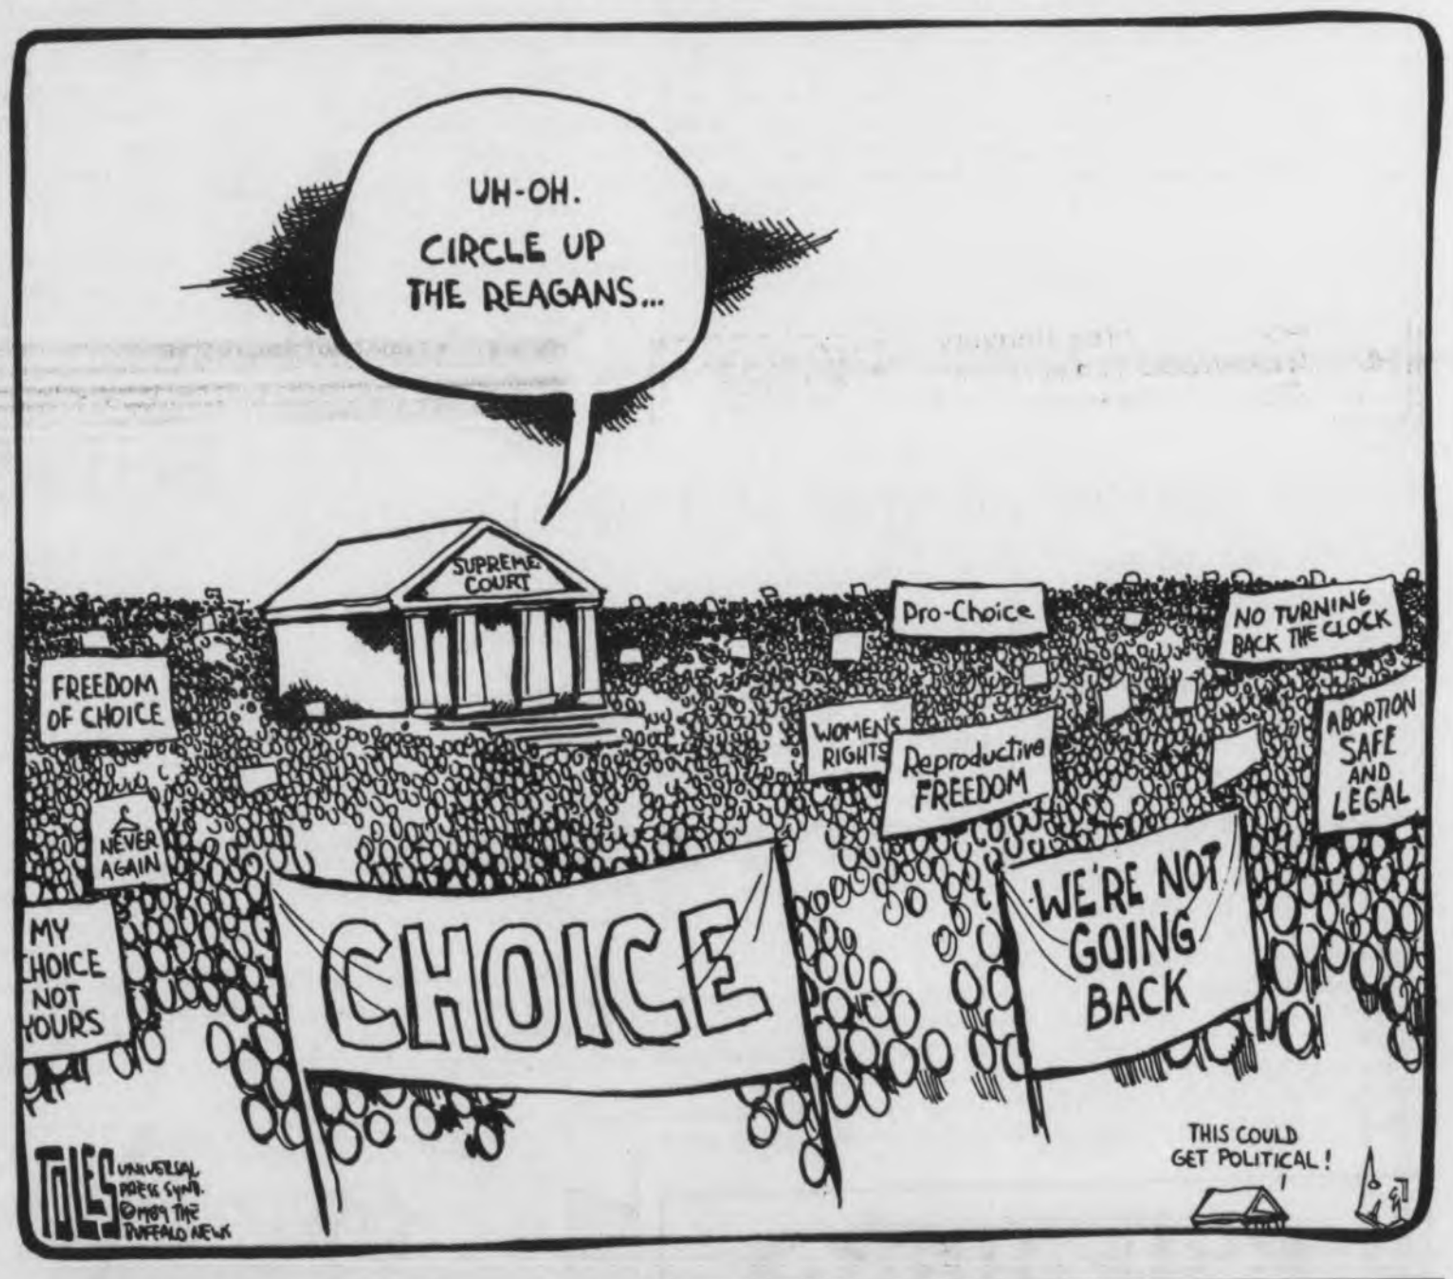
And let's not forget there are some people in the world who came from the same race of parents and they're confused and hurt.

If it is possible, and we all know that it is, for children to pick up racist attitudes from their parents, then why should it be impossible for biracial children to pick up confidence, a sense of self and identity from their interracial parents?

There is also a worry that biracial children have no heritage to learn about. However, it's not impossible for interracial parents to teach their children about the two racial affiliations of the parents.

As a matter of fact, it gives the child a chance to learn about two cultures instead of one. That's more cultures than some children learn about coming from single race parents.

Biracial children also have a rare heritage of their own. They're a part of two races, a part of a new human nation. They represent the way our world should be — a melting pot composed of many different races.



And what are these pure bloodlines biracial children supposely ruin? For example, interracial children are accused of destroying pure black blood or pure white blood.

There's not a medical book or doctor who would honestly testify to different bloods according to race. Everyone has the same red blood in their veins. If this was not the case, there would be separate blood donor mobiles for each race.

There's also no need to worry about interracial relationships and biracial children eliminating single race relationships and children.

From time immemorial, plenty of people believe in traditional, same race relationships. And that's fine. That's their right. But it's also the right of some people to have nontraditional, interracial relationships.

Whether anyone likes it or not, interracial relationships are growing and biracial children are becoming a reality. And make no mistake, biracial children will no doubt be saying, "I don't need or deserve this racism. Get out of my way. I've got better places to go and people to be with."

Parking problem

Editor,

It is impossible to avoid driving around and around in the Union parking lot in desperate hope of claiming a spot. But, good news, folks, the Council of Parking Traffic and police Operations have a solution — parking meters.

Meters are to be installed in the north end of the Union lot (the student-only area). The meters will hopefully decrease the amount of all-day parkers and make room for visitors, short-term commuters and students wishing to run into the Union to purchase a book.

Unfortunately, this solution creates yet another problem. As of now, the students have 552 strictly general student parking spots available. With installation of these meters, that area converts to a general lot, thus decreasing the total to 332 spaces. Considering there are roughly 7,000 student permits issued per year, good luck finding a parking spot closer than the City Park.

Now, let's focus on the faculty's statistics. There are 4,000 faculty permits issued with a total of 1,808 strictly faculty parking spots. The faculty clearly have more spaces available. With that in mind, wouldn't it seem logical, fair and reasonable that the meters be installed in the south end of the Union instead? Why not? They have more spaces to give than the students.

Well, I propose a few solutions. First of all, the parking meters should be placed in the faculty-only lot, leaving the student spaces alone. But if this solution is refused, it is essential that the south end of the Union lot be changed to a general lot or better yet, student-only!

Something needs to be done. I do believe the administration is working on it, but who are they trying to benefit — faculty or students?

Students who pay roughly a minimal amount of $800 per semester are the customers paying for a service from the faculty. Shouldn't the customers be treated with the highest and best service available?

Needs more funds

Editor,

I am writing in response to the inadequate funding our K-State Police are currently receiving. How can the hub of this University be expected to properly police a 644-acre campus with only $25,500 for an operating budget?

To me this seems ridiculous. Sure, people will say, "Why don't they just write more tickets?" but this is not a solution. The campus police receive only a small, allotted portion of the revenues collected from parking tickets. A small portion!

All I ask is that the K-State administration recognize this problem and resolve it before a tragedy occurs ... an accident, a suicide, or even a death. If only one tragedy occurs that could have been prevented through the allocation of more funds to the campus police, the administration will be the one at fault, not the campus police.

Should teach both

Editor,

I would like to address the editorial on the teaching of evolution in our schools.

It seems to me that you sprout in this article exactly what you have claimed of us so-called "Bible thumpers." I personally take offense at your use of language.

However, I would like to see both theories taught and allow people to make their own decisions.

Also, I challenge you to prove, scientifically, that the Bible is false. I can show you where NASA used the Bible to account for time missing in our calendars to send up the first space ships in 1960. Babylon, Er and other great cities and countries which are talked about in the Bible have been proven to exist through archaeological examinations.

Also, some of the evidence that seems to support evolution also supports creationism. Also remember evolution is only a theory, not a scientific fact. This theory seems to prove Aristotle's "Le Naturalis" or the theory of a natural hierarchy which biologists have proven wrong.

So now tell me, is it wrong or right to teach evolution or creation? There are proponents of both and no facts which prove either beyond a shadow of a doubt.

The Bible says not how old the earth is, it says that my time is not your time, one minute to you may be 10,000 years to me.

Not just business

Editor,

In a quote from Friday's "Senate approves divestment," I believe I saw the words, "The issue is investment," used in reference to business interests in South Africa.

And who was it that said this? A senator from the college of business administration.

I wonder if Ivan Boesky said, "Insider trading is not a moral issue, it's business," or if Exxon is saying, "Don't worry about the environment, this is business?"

We can no longer deny the moral and physical impact of business. Let's assume responsibility for our actions.

Divestment immoral

Editor,

Bringing pressure on a foreign government and trying to cause its destruction can safely be called interventionism. Those supporting divestment in South Africa say they have a just cause.

Why is it moral for the United States to try to destroy the government of South Africa, but immoral to have influence with governments in Central America? There is a problem with credibility here.

I remember when the fad was to call for deposing the Shah of Iran. His secret police were guilty of hundreds of killings and brutalities. As we know, the Shah was deposed. Many thousands of Iranians died in the unrest that followed. My point is that large issues take time to solve. Quick solutions usually aren't solutions at all.

A violent downfall of South Africa's government would most surely cause suffering and death. Other parts of Africa have large scale famine and civil war. It is not right that we should try to force South Africa to the same fate.

UPC sponsors contest; photo deadline Friday

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

K-State students, faculty and staff can enter their work in the 14th annual Union Program Council Photography Contest.

All entries will be displayed in the Union Art Gallery from April 24 to May 5.

Those interested have until 5 p.m. Friday to enter their photographs in the contest. Entries are to be submitted to the Activities Center in the Union.

"This gives people a chance to show what they can do and have it be presented in a professional gallery," said Karen Smaldone, UPC program adviser. "It also lets you see what other people are taking pictures of and what you are up against."

The six divisions in the contest are buildings and structures, landscape, flowers and plants, animals, people, and still life and interiors.

Each photo may be entered in one division and any photograph which has been entered before in the contest will not be admissible.

First and second places will be awarded in each division. A cash prize of $10 will go to the first-place winner in both color and black and white photographs. Five dollars will be awarded to the second-place winner in both color and black and white.

In addition, an award for "Best In Show" will be chosen from all first-place winners. Thirty dollars will be given to the best in show in both color and black and white.

"There will also be honorable mentions in each division, but these are at the discretion of the judges," Smaldone said. These awards do not have any cash prizes.

The judging will be done by three people from the Manhattan area who are not associated with UPC.

"Judges will be looking for technical quality, visual design and originality," Smaldone said.

Tammy Eberhart, junior in elementary education, has entered the contest in the building and structure division.

"My photograph is titled 'The Golden Pavilion,'" Eberhart said. "I took the picture when I was an exchange student in Kyoto, Japan."

Eberhart has enjoyed photography since she was young and has wanted to enter this photo in past contests, but kept forgetting to bring it with her to K-State.

Each entry must be accompanied by an entry form and a $2 entry fee. The fee money will be used for the prizes.

"We usually have more than 50 people enter, with most of these entering more than one category or division," Smaldone said.

"In the past, entries have been chosen to be on the cover of the Programmer, and there is a good, strong chance that an entry in this year's contest could be chosen for the next Programmer," she said.

Series begins 10th year

Lectures honor Topeka architect

By The Collegian Staff

The Oscar Ekdahl Memorial Lecture series was established over a decade ago to honor the Topeka architect who has provided leadership in the profession since the 1930s. Since its founding, the series has played host to over 40 guest lecturers.

Susan Haviland delivered the first Ekdahl lecture of 1989, "The Emerald City: An Approach to Reshaping American Cities and Homes for Urbanity and Community," Wednesday in the Union Little Theatre. Haviland spoke to about 150 people.

Haviland, a senior member of San Francisco's Daniel Solomon and Associates, presented a slide show on architectural styles in California. Highlighted were slides from her firm's building projects in Pasadena, Calif.

A native of Leicestershire, England, Haviland received a Ph.D. in psychology at Stanford. She has since been a critic in architecture at the California College of Arts and Crafts and has recently co-authored a book to be published later this year.

The memorial lectures are intended to reinforce and complement the educational programs of the college of architecture and design.

The series has brought practitioners, teachers, critics, theorists and artists to the campus for lectures, consultations with students and faculty, and for short periods in residence.

A superior student at K-State, Ekdahl graduated in 1933. Professional experience after graduation in Texas, Wisconsin and Ohio provided a foundation which served Kansas clients and professional colleagues for more than 25 years.

A selection of Haviland's published work and an exhibit illustrating her work are currently on display in the Weigel Library.

Groups support building schools

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

An overwhelming majority of people at a community forum addressing overcrowding of Manhattan schools on Wednesday voted to support an option calling for the construction of an estimated $8.4 million building for the sixth and seventh grades. The same plan would group the eighth and ninth grades together in Manhattan Middle School.

More than 200 parents and teachers joined members of the core committee appointed by the Manhattan/Ogden USD #383 School Board of Education in discussing possible solutions to the overcrowding problem.

Also present at the forum were representatives from Planning Advocates Inc., the consulting firm hired by the board to determine the need for additional space and equipment based on program needs and projected enrollment trends.

Those who attended the forum formed groups to discuss and vote on two proposals recommended by the core committee and Planning Advocates Inc. as the most feasible in solving the problem.

The option favored by the majority of the groups would mean the loss of the ninth graders at the high school, relieving overcrowding pressure and eliminating the need for building renovation there. The total package, including construction of the new building, would cost $10.6 million.

A second option posed was accepted by only one of the 31 groups. Because a new building wasn't in the plan, the estimated cost was lower ($8.05 million); however, group leaders were concerned about extensive renovations and high school overcrowding.

The groups also said they would support air-conditioning for the high school, which would cost about $1 million.

Bill DeJong, a representative from Planning Advocates Inc., said the firm would take the suggestions raised at tonight's forum to form an implementation plan for the district and move on to the next phase of planning.

"We will start looking at the specifics — what we could do at each of the schools," he said.

The consulting firm considered projected enrollment figures and capital improvements for the schools, including upgrades in build-

Concorde loses part of tail

By The Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — A supersonic Concorde jet carrying 100 Americans dropped a chunk of its tail over the South Pacific Wednesday during an attempt to set a speed record, but it landed safely and passengers were reportedly eager to try again.

The 9-foot tail section of the British Airways plane ripped off about 25 minutes after the plane left Christchurch, New Zealand, for Sydney, 1,000 miles away. Passengers said the plane shuddered, but the craft landed in Sydney about an hour later. No one was injured.

The plane is attempting to set speed records for each of 12 parts of a three-week journey around the world. The passengers, who included commentator William F. Buckley Jr., each paid $39,000 for the trip, which began in London on April 1.

Peter Stanton, an airline spokesman, said part of the rudder disintegrated while the jet was flying at 40,000 feet at about 1,500 mph — nearly twice the speed of sound.

"It experienced a shudder while over the Tasman Sea that was thought to have been air turbulence," Stanton said. "But it was a normal landing; there was no emergency."

He said the control tower told the pilot, Capt. David Leney, that a piece of the tail was missing.

"It wasn't until we got out of the plane and saw the firetrucks and all the press ... that we knew something was wrong," Buckley later told ABC's "Good Morning America."

"About 25 minutes after takeoff from New Zealand there was a large thump," free-lance journalist Sheila Cole-Nilva told The Associated Press. "Everybody looked at everybody else and lunch was served. The stewardesses looked terrified.

"The pilot came on and said there was nothing to worry about and that there was a piece loose on the airplane."

The Cult appeals to 'mainstream audience'

Group releases 4th album

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

After struggling through several personnel changes, The Cult has released its fourth effort, "Sonic Temple." Although it follows in the group's previous paths, the release is obviously a step to appeal to a more mainstream audience.

The Cult's sound has definitely evolved since its earlier works, "Dreamtime" and "Love." Its characteristic guitar-oriented sound has gained an edge, approaching a style more in line with current heavy metal.

Fans who fear that The Cult has compromised its music to join the glut of mediocre heavy metal bands need only listen to the first 10 seconds to be assured that The Cult still sees itself as a force in alternative college radio. With a cry of "This is where it all ends," at the beginning of the album, Ian Astbury, the lead singer, seems to state clearly that the band intends to set its own rules for its music.

Review

The first single, "Fire Woman," the video for which has unjustly been relegated to "Headbanger's Ball" on MTV, sounds reminiscent of the droning "Rain," from the group's second album. It is classic Cult music at its very best. Other songs on the release return to the band's earlier sound, while several others are more in line with the heavier sound that began on "Electric."

"Edie (Ciao Baby)" is a slow song similar to The Cult's "Revolution" or "Sister Moon," but with added keyboards, non-existent instruments on previous albums.

There are several reasons why The Cult has begun to explore other avenues with its music. Besides losing its drummer, The Cult switched to producer Bob Rock, who definitely had some say about how the new album sounds. Another reason is the members of The Cult are maturing. To avoid stagnation, this is perhaps the best method with which the band could approach its music.

One thing that sets The Cult above other bands is the way it lives up to its label as psychedelic rock. All of the group's songs deal with surreal imagery, as the titles reflect. "Sun King," "Automatic Blue," from "Sonic Temple," as well as "Love Removal Machine" and "Peace Dog" from "Electric," are just some of the ways The Cult deals in bizarre images.

For "New York City," a rather atypical Cult song, punkster Iggy Pop was enlisted to help sing. All of the vices of the Big Apple are combined in a rather ordinary picture of a city that drew Astbury into all of the corruption. This song is obviously one of the consequences of the success The Cult tasted after the release of "Electric."

Despite this, The Cult's music is still basically intact. Any song that is a casualty of The Cult's bout with fame is more than adequately covered up by the couple of real Cult gems on this album. "Soldier Blue," a sort of celestial warrior, is definitely as good as any song the band has ever written.

The release got its name from the lyrics, "Medicine Train," which could have easily have been on "Electric," or perhaps even "Love," and not sounded out of place. "Sonic Temple" is a classic name for a Cult album, seeming to capture the essence of the music in two words.

Perhaps the song that is the largest deviation for The Cult is "Wake Up Time For Freedom." One can almost picture some pop heavy metal band singing a song like this.

So, after a long dry spell, The Cult has finally produced a release that seems destined for popularity. Any true fans will definitely hope that it fails in order to steer the band back in the direction in which it began.

'Dead Calm' plot fails to be believable

By Tom McLaughlin
Collegian Reviewer

The last decade has seen the production of lots of psycho murderer films and sequels, and a decline in the sophisticated film genre of horror.

"Dead Calm," directed by Phillip Noyce, is a film that reaches to redefine horror to modern audiences. Unfortunately, the film overreaches the fine line of horror with its sensationalism and tendencies to ignore probability and believability.

The film introduces us to Rae Ingram, played by Nicole Kidman, who awakens suddenly from a violent dream which hauntingly recounts her son's violent death.

James, played by Sam Neil, Rae's husband and an experienced Navy man, is immediately by her side calming her. By sailing on their private yacht 1200 miles from civilization, the two hope to find solace in the acceptance of their son's death.

A black schooner, off in the distance, serves as a plot thickener. Hugh Warner, played intriguingly by Billy Zane, is a passenger from the schooner who is taken in by the Ingrams.

James, who sends Warner to rest, unrealistically leaves his wife alone with the sleeping stranger, tells her to get the gun, and rows to the mysterious ship which is, not surprisingly, full of mangled corpses.

Review

He quickly jumps into the dinghy and races back to save his wife from inevitable danger. Fitting into thriller formula, and just as unbelievably, he is just seconds too late.

As James attempts to grasp the ship, Warner bursts out of his cell on their yacht and drives away leaving James stranded. James swims back to the sinking schooner which is appropriately dubbed "Orpheus."

James battles nature on the sinking schooner, and Rae battles her psychotic captor, in an effort to be reunited with each other.

Billy Zane delivers a novel performance by creating the preoccupied sociopath, a character study which is hard to not watch. Sam Neil's performance is admirable as the driven husband.

More often than not, though, the film lacks believability.

Contrived seems to be the best word to describe the movement of the script's dramatic action and characters.

Not to be misunderstood, though, the film has its merits in attempting to rekindle sophisticated horror, as opposed to the overt and more common genre, terror.

DWI penalty increases; victims' rights expanded

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden Wednesday signed into law seven bills, including one that will increase the penalty for people who accidentally kill others while driving drunk, and another intended to expand the rights of crime victims.

The first bill will make aggravated motor vehicular homicide while driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs a Class D felony, punishable by one to 10 years in prison. Presently, it is a Class E felony, which carries a sentence of one to five years.

Aggravated motor vehicular homicide while driving recklessly or while fleeing a law enforcement officer remains a Class E felony.

The governor also signed a bill that will require county prosecutors to notify victims of crimes of an inmate's parole hearing at least one month before the hearing. The Kansas Parole Board will be required to consider comments from the victim and the victim's family before making a decision on parole.

The Department of Corrections also must notify victims of an inmate's release if the crime of which he or she was convicted was violent.

Florida, California stars sign with 'Cats

Basketball players commit

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State received its first official basketball committment Wednesday, when Santa Monica College's Keith Amerson signed a national letter of intent to play for the Wildcats next season.

Wednesday was the first day of the spring signing period, which runs through May 19.

Amerson was the California Association of Community Colleges' player of the year this past season. The 6-foot-4 guard/forward averaged 13.2 points a game last season and led his team in rebounds with 7.8 per game.

Santa Monica coach John McMullen said Amerson's 13.2 point per game average should not be discouraging, because he played on a team that averaged 90 points a game. Santa Monica had seven players average between nine and 17 points a game.

McMullen also said that Amerson, who played small forward at Santa Monica, can either establish an offensive position inside or go to the perimeter. His play is tough on the defensive end.

"He is a tremendous defensive stopper. He's a guy who can guard anyone between 6-3 and 6-6," McMullen said. "He's not a reacher or a gambler like a Mookie Blaylock, but his strength is that he takes pride in stopping players from scoring or doing whatever the other guy likes to do best."

Amerson helped Santa Monica win the West State Conference championship with a 13-0 record, while the squad finished 32-4 overall.

In addition, the Wildcats received one oral committment when Miami-Dade North Community College's shooting guard Jean Derouillere signed.

Derouillere averaged 21.3 points a game at Dade North this past season while leading his team to a 21-6 record en route to a berth in the Region 8 junior college tourney. Derouillere was named MVP of that tourney his freshman season, in which Dade North went 28-1.

"He's (Keith Amerson) a tremendous defensive stopper."

Santa Monica men's basketball coach

Last season at Dade North, Derouillere hit 58.5 percent of his field goals and 43.2 percent from three-point range.

November signee J.R. Rider from Ecinal High School is apparently trying to better his academic standing. Rider failed to make grades during his senior year at the Alameda, Calif., high school and did not play basketball during his senior year.

But, according to a report expected to be released in today's Topeka Capital-Journal, Rider's former high school coach, Dan Johns said, he is attending Island High School in the Oakland area.

Island is a school devoted to students who lack the units to graduate from high school.

K-State's other oral committments are expected to sign today. Moberly (Mo.) Junior College guard Jeff Wires was supposed to sign Wednesday, but Coach Lon Kruger and his assistants were busy on both coasts and Kruger is reportedly going to stop by Moberly today to ink Wires.

K-State is also reportedly in the running for South Plains (Texas) Junior College forward Keith Stewart. The 6-foot-8 Stewart was apparently leaning toward New Orleans until he recently change his mind due to unknown reasons. He has expressed an interest in K-State, said South Plains coach Ron Mayberry.

Boxing champ dies at age 63

CULVER CITY, Calif. — Sugar Ray Robinson, a five-time middleweight champion considered by many boxing experts to be the greatest pound-for-pound fighter ever, died Wednesday at Brotman Medical Center. He was 63.

"It appears to be of natural causes," said Los Angeles County coroner's spokesman Bob Dambacher. The coroner's office was involved because it had been some time since Robinson had seen his doctor, Dambacher said.

Robinson, born Walker Smith in Detroit, won the welterweight title in 1946. He went on to win the middleweight title an unprecedented five times from 1951, when he knocked out Jake LaMotta, to 1958, when he beat Carmen Basilio.

He lost only 19 of his 202 professional fights.

Sooner testifies in rape case

NORMAN, Okla. — An Oklahoma football player told a judge Wednesday he witnessed the sexual assault of an Oklahoma City woman by teammates Nigel Clay, Bernard Hall and Glen Bell in an athletic dormitory Jan. 21.

Clay, Hall and Bell are accused of first-degree rape in the alleged gang assault. Hall and Clay also are accused of two counts of furnishing liquor to a minor.

Jimmy Fennell testified in the third day of a preliminary hearing for the three former Sooners. Special District Judge Gary Purcell will decide if the three should stand trial on the charges filed against them Feb. 10.

Fennell admitted to District Attorney Tully McCoy that he originally told authorities he knew nothing about the alleged rapes, but said he testified at the urging of friends who said it was the right thing to do.

Humphrey chooses NFL draft

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Bobby Humphrey, saying the pressure was "getting a little mind-boggling," announced Wednesday that he is giving up his final season at Alabama to make himself available for the NFL supplemental draft in July.

The all-time leading Alabama runner said he has no preference which team he plays for "just as long as the team pays money."

Humphrey is the latest in a series of players to opt for the pros rather than stay at school.

Barry Sanders, the Heisman Trophy-winning running back from Oklahoma State, received special approval from the NFL, required because he is a true junior. He will be available for the regular April 23 draft.

Quarterbacks Steve Walsh of Miami and Timm Rosenbach of Washington State missed the filing deadline for the regular draft, and will be available for the supplemental draft.

Ryan sets Rangers' record

MILWAUKEE — Nolan Ryan allowed one hit in eight shutout innings and struck out a team-record 15 batters Wednesday night as the Texas Rangers beat the Milwaukee Brewers, 8-1.

Ryan, who has pitched a record five no-hitters, did not give up a hit until Terry Francona singled in the eighth after a walk to Glenn Braggs. Ryan retired the next three batters.

Reliever Craig McMurtry gave up a run on three hits in the ninth.

Ryan, 42, raised his all-time strikeout record to 4,798. He surpassed the Texas single-game mark of 14 strikeouts by Bert Blyleven and Jim Bibby, the only two Rangers to pitch no-hitters.

Ryan, who has never pitched a perfect game, did not permit a runner until Robin Yount walked on a 3-2 pitch with two outs in the seventh. The walk came after Yount's catchable foul popup fell between two fielders.

Wildcats sweep doubleheader

By The Collegian Staff

K-State swept Tarkio College in doubleheader action Wednesday at Frank Myers Field, but it wasn't pretty.

The Wildcats managed to hold off two Tarkio comeback bids in winning both ends of the twin bill, 5-3 and 4-3.

"We really had the opportunity to play a lot of people," Coach Mike Clark said. "We didn't do a lot of things wrong, but we didn't create a lot.

"We played a lot of kids that have got to get ready for some situations that could come up in the Missouri series."

K-State took a 5-2 lead into the seventh inning of the first game with Greg Laddish on the mound in relief of Mike Hedrick.

Santiano Dyer walked to start the two-out rally, went to third on Eric Powell's single, and scored on Randy Heller's single, with Powell going to second.

That was all for Laddish, and Clark called on bullpen ace Bill Schafer to close the door. Schafer yielded a single to Craig Larscheid, the first man he faced, to load the bases.

Schafer squelched the rally by striking out Mark Moses on three straight curve balls, with Moses chasing the last one low and away in the dirt for strike three.

K-State broke a 2-2 tie in the bottom of the sixth with three runs.

Bill Barnard reached on an infield single with one out, and went to second when shortstop Xavier Acosta threw wild to first trying to throw him out.

Greg McNamara, running for Barnard, scored on Kevin Kaufman's double to put the Wildcats on top, 3-2. Mike Rosenboom followed with a double of his own, scoring Kaufman.

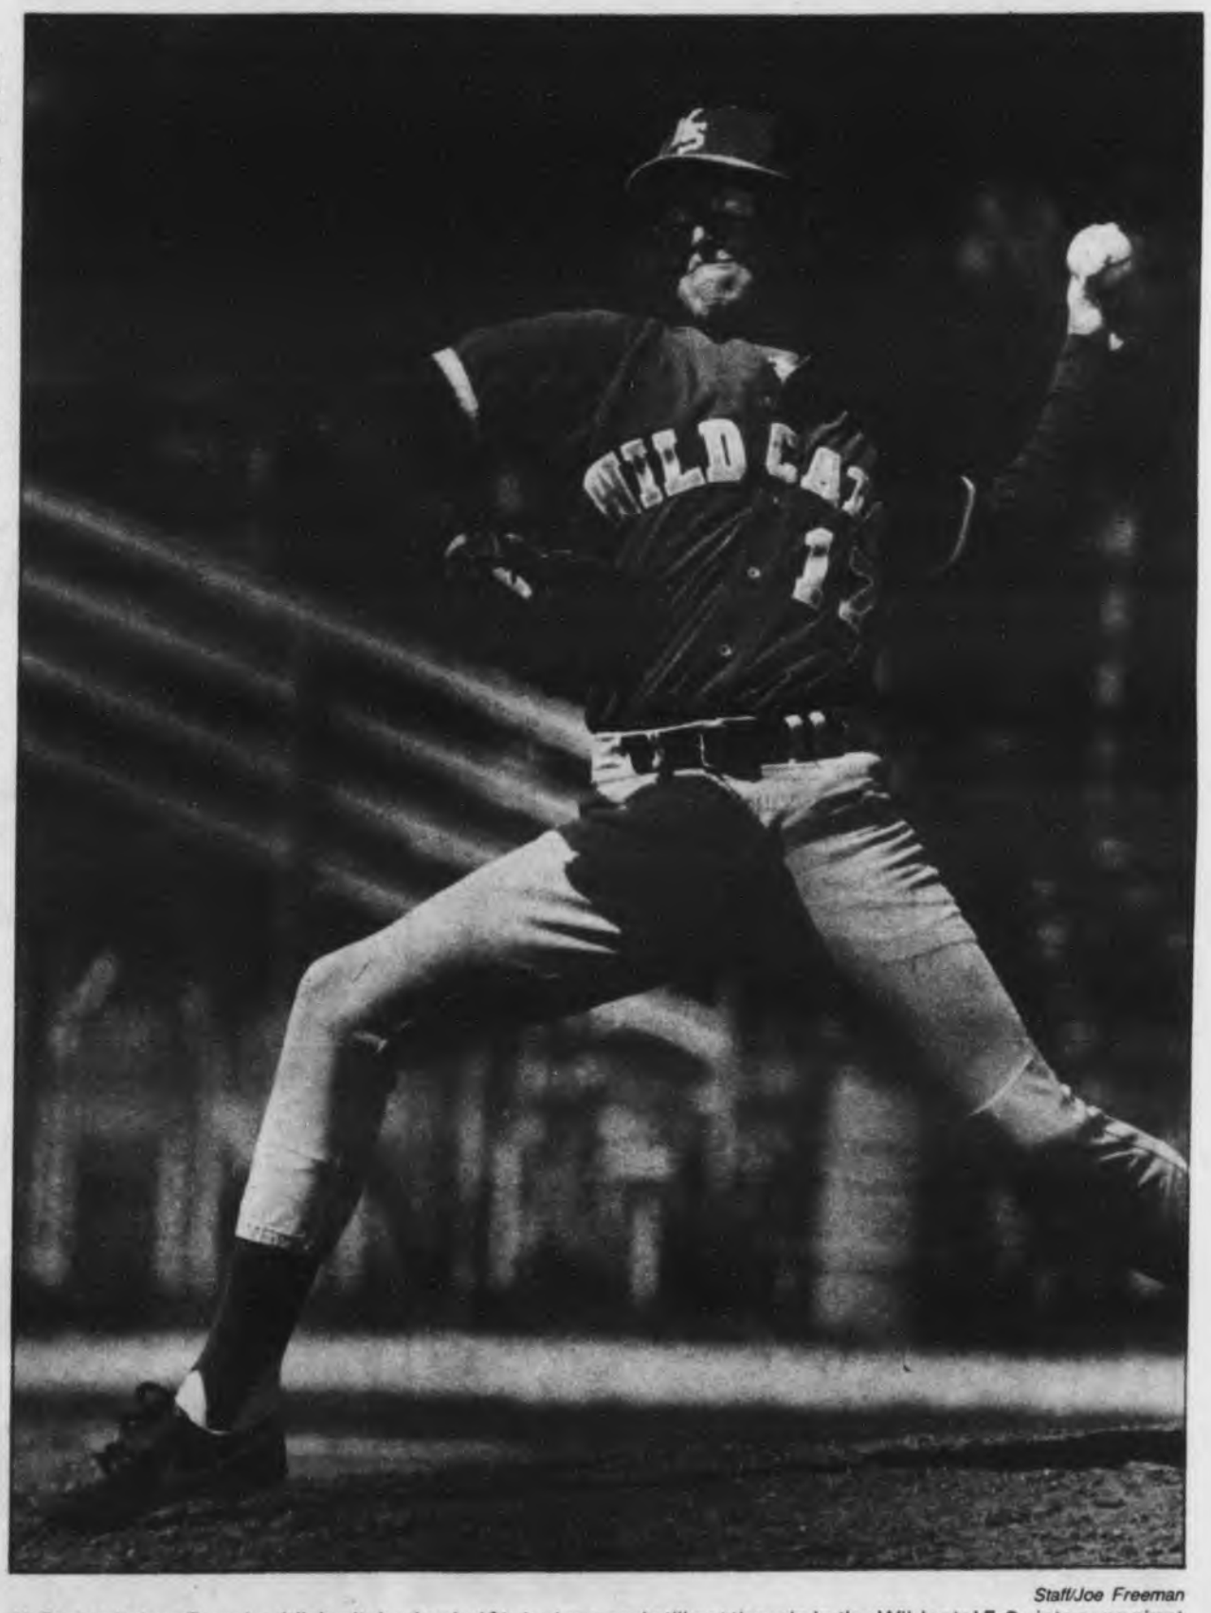
Dan Skala's single moved Rosenboom to third, and he scored on pinch-hitter Chris Hmielewski's sacrifice fly to center, giving the 'Cats their 5-2 lead going into the seventh.

Hedrick pitched the first five innings for the Wildcats, leaving with the score tied at 2-2. He gave up five hits, two runs (one earned), struck out three and walked one.

Laddish picked up the win, moving his record to 2-0. Schafer picked up his fourth save for his work in the seventh.

K-State rode a three-run third inning to pick up the win in the second game.

Brad Rippelmeyer led off the inning with his second home run of the season to left field for a 1-0 lead.



With one out, Skala walked, and Matt Marino's single to right moved him to third. With Marino running, Ron Bradshaw grounded out to second, scoring Skala. Had Marino not been running, it probably would have been an inning-ending double play. Instead, Russ Ringgenberg singled to score Marino and give the Wildcats a 3-0 lead.

Tarkio trailed 4-2 when they threatened in the sixth. Heller singled with one out and went to second when Monte Miller reached on an error by third baseman Rippelmeyer.

Ryan Eberly followed with a single to left center field. Heller tried to score but was gunned down when Ringgenberg threw a strike to Skala at the plate for his second assist of the game and the third out of the inning.

K-State pitcher Greg Laddish pitched only 1⅔ innings and still got the win in the Wildcats' 5-3 victory against Tarkio during the first game of a doubleheader Wednesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

Taxes due Monday; IRS issues reminder to file by deadline

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

For those people who have not filed their income tax returns yet, the Internal Revenue Service is issuing a reminder that all tax forms are due April 17 and careful reading of the forms can avoid errors.

"If you know you are not going to make the deadline, you must file for a four-month extension," said James Manuszak, IRS public affairs officer.

Manuszak said a special extension form 4868 must be filled out and postmarked by the April 17 tax deadline. The form includes six mathematical questions concerning the individual's tax situation that must be answered correctly.

"Verbal answers such as "don't know," or "information not available," will void the request," he said.

Manuszak said a certain percentage of people always get stuck with a bill they can't handle and they panic. The IRS advises them to file the return anyway.

"Attach a note explaining your situation or do something to show good faith," he said. "The penalties for late filing or non-filing are much more harsh than late payment."

People in this situation will be contacted by the IRS within two months, Manuszak said.

One of the most common last-minute errors seen by the IRS is with the standard deduction. He said many college students are prone to making errors on this portion of the form due to personal exemptions.

"Students who are at school and can still be claimed as dependants of their parents are not entitled to their own personal exemptions," Manuszak said. "If parents are eligible to claim their children, they are required by law to do so."

Gil Gillispie, owner of the H&R Block district office in Manhattan, said common problems in the Manhattan area include tax building on pensions as well as standard deductions.

This year, Gillispie said, another problem has been the sale of mutual funds.

"This happens when people don't know their dividends," he said. "When they come to us this late in the year it becomes a very complicated process."

Gillispie said his office handles in excess of 3,000 tax returns annually and the week before the deadline is always the busiest.

Manuszak said a lot of the errors seen by the IRS service center in Austin, Texas involve carelessness and returns filled out in a hurry. Forms filed without a signature are one example.

"A one-day sample from the service center showed 48 percent of all forms sent back that day were sent back because of no signature," he said.

In general, Manuszak said most mathematical errors are correctable by the office, but a tax form cannot be processed without a signature.

The service center has received about 676,000 federal returns from Kansas, out of an expected 1,030,000. He said nearly 400,000 refunds have been processsed, returning about $300 million to the state of Kansas.

Cocaine treatment increases

More addicts are seeking help for abuse

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The cocaine business is growing — not only for the dealers but for health-care workers trying to get addicts off the drug.

Although alcohol continues to be the most abused drug in both Missouri and Kansas, the number of people seeking help from cocaine abuse has increased.

There now are about 50 drug-abuse treatment centers in the Kansas City area, including the Shawnee Mission Medical Center's addiction recovery unit.

When the suburban hospital opened the unit in 1977, almost all the people seeking help were alcoholics, said Mike Hill, unit director. Now, one-third of the inpatients are on cocaine, one-third are alcoholics and one-third are addicted to a combination of alcohol and other drugs.

Cocaine addicts need treatment centers because willpower alone is usually not enough to get a person off the drug, Hill said.

"To just say 'no' after a person has become addicted is unrealistic," he said.

In a facility, the recovering addict learns to cope with the craving for cocaine. Elements in the treatment include having other reforming addicts around to encourage each other, living in a structured environment and having no access to drugs. Medication can be given to reduce craving without producing a high.

For those who can't afford the cost of treatment — which averages $4,000 to $14,000 in Kansas City for inpatients and $900 to $3,300 for outpatients, depending on its duration — there are publicly funded treatment centers.

But there is a waiting period for those facilities — six weeks in Missouri and three weeks or more in Kansas.

That, says Sharon Buchanan-McClure, a spokeswoman for the Missouri Department of Mental Health, is a problem.

"Here's someone who has finally admitted he has a drug problem and he's come to us, and we have to say 'Come back in six weeks,'" she said. "That is the devastation of that number."

Missouri, using $9 million in state funds and about an equal amount of federal money, helped treat 21,300 people for drug dependency, including alcoholism, in 1988, Buchanan-McClure said.

Kansas spent at least $8.8 million in state funds and $4.5 million in federal funds to treat 15,000 people in 1988, said Mike Flyzik, of the state's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services department.

Officials in Missouri and Kansas did not have figures on the number of people seeking help solely for cocaine addiction, but they said it was climbing.

The number of treatment facilities has also grown.

In Kansas City alone, the number has doubled in the past four years, said Cecile Vanthullenar, of the Kansas City office of the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse.

In Kansas, there were about 185 registered treatment facilities in 1985. In 1988 there were 300.

Unlike Kansas, no licensing of the facilities is required in Missouri, so officials could give no figure on the number of facilities in that state.

Health care experts attribute the increase mainly to a perception that there's less of a stigma associated with people seeking help from alcohol and other drug abuse.

Although the private and public treatment programs have helped thousands, they have not stemmed the increase in people newly addicted to cocaine.

The popularity of crack — an extremely addictive form of cocaine — in some of Kansas City's impoverished neighborhoods has driven up the crime rate, as addicts steal to support the habit.

Jeffrey Bushur, who heads Jackson County's five-person drug prosecution unit, said the use of crack in Kansas City has "exploded." Kansas City police have filed 250 crack possession cases so far this year, compared to 180 for all of 1988 and 50 in 1986, Bushur said.

The county prosecutors will stop their practice of routinely plea bargaining a cocaine possession case and settling for probation and court-ordered rehabilitation. Instead, they will begin pressing for prison terms for repeat offenders, Bushur said.

Andrew O'Donovan, of Kansas Drug Abuse Services, said there is no easy way to eradicate drug abuse.

"A lot of cocaine use in the inner city is related to poverty and lack of opportunity," he said. "A lot of people are making big money selling this stuff, or ending up getting shot or in jail.

"It's a terribly difficult thing," he said. "I should have answers, more than anybody, but I don't."

Test proved pipe cause of explosion

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Kansas Corporaton Commission official said Wednesday it appears from metallurgical tests that a March 29 natural gas explosion at a Topeka home, which killed one woman and critically injured her son, was caused by a crack in a cast-iron pipe.

KCC spokesman Steve Menaugh said the head of the commission's pipeline safety division, Glenn Smith, witnessed the tests performed Tuesday in Washington, D.C., by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"It would appear from what he saw our original thoughts were correct," Menaugh said. The NTSB will send the KCC copies of its reports in a few weeks, he added.

Hal Hudson, spokesman for Topeka-based KPL Gas Service, which owns the line, said the utility also had an official witnessing the tests, but he was required by NTSB to sign a statement that he would not release any information about the tests.

"I cannot comment on the NTSB (tests) because I have no information," Hudson said.

The explosion in the southeast Topeka home killed Sarella Ellis, 75, and injured Hayward Ellis, 55. He remains in critical condition at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City.

Hudson said utility investigators gained access to the house on Monday to begin their own inquiry.

"We're attempting to gather any additional information," Hudson said.

Applications for semiautomatic rifles increase

Demand grows with import suspension

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Close to 1 million new semiautomatic assault-style rifles could flood the United States if the Bush administration decides to end its suspension of such imports.

Gun importers have applications to bring in 965,000 of the weapons pending at the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, according to spokesman Dick Pedersen.

The import suspension was imposed March 14 after public and police outcries over the increased use of weapons such as semiautomatic versions of AK-47s and Uzi carbines in drug-related violence, and the January slayings of five schoolchildren in Stockton, Calif.

The suspension covered some 400,000 weapons, including about 300,000 for which import permits already had been approved. Last week, the administration expanded the suspension to cover 240,000 separate weapons.

"We noticed the increase in these showing up in crimes, an increase in demand, and we reacted to it," Pedersen said. "The main thing is that we might be nipping the semiautomatic assault-type rifle in the bud rather than have millions of them flooding in here."

Nevertheless, gun importers are continuing to submit applications, he said Tuesday.

"It appears there have been a lot more applications that came in after the ban," Pedersen said.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is required by law to permit imports only of weapons suitable or adaptable to "sporting purposes," and it is studying the use of the semiautomatic rifles to determine how they are being used. The review should take two to three more months.

Despite the uproar over such weapons, FBI crime statistics reveal that most murders by firearms are still committed by people wielding handguns. Of the 17,859 murders committed nationwide in 1987, 10,556 were committed with firearms, of which 7,807 were handguns, according to the FBI.

Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Con Dougherty says that increasing numbers of powerful and sophisticated handguns such as the 9mm semiautomatic, particularly guns such as the Uzi pistol, are being confiscated during arrests.

Nevertheless, Pedersen said it is extremely unlikely that the current import suspension on rifles will be expanded to any handguns.

"Handguns are used in sport, in target shooting, extensively," Pedersen said. "That's negligible as far as assault weapons are concerned."

Many local and federal police agencies have recently begun to arm themselves with foreign-made 9mm semiautomatic handguns, he said.

It would be up to Congress to make any changes in the availability of such guns, he said.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, has introduced a bill that would place some of the same restrictions on both semiautomatic machine-style pistols and assault-style rifles that are now imposed on automatic weapons, including FBI background checks on purchasers and fingerprinting, but not the $200 fee charged to owners of machine guns, according to the senator's spokeswoman, Nancy Coffey.

Among the semiautomatic handguns that would be restricted if Metzenbaum's bill passes are the Uzi pistol, the Ingram Mac 10 and Mac 11 and the Tec 9 and Tec 22, she said.

About 231,000 foreign handguns, including semiautomatic weapons, were imported in 1986, the last year for which Pedersen had data. There was no breakdown for the number of semiautomatic handguns, he said.

Soviet Georgia's demands rejected

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev appealed Wednesday for calm in Soviet Georgia but rejected the demands of local nationalists and blamed them for igniting lethal strife he said had damaged his drive for reform.

"The interests of the working people have nothing in common with attempts to sever the existing ties of friendship and cooperation among our peoples, (to) dismantle the socialist system in the republic and push it into the slough of ethnic enmity," Gorbachev said.

They were the Soviet leader's first direct public remarks on the unrest since at least 19 people were killed Sunday in a clash between pro-independence activists and security forces.

The official Tass news agency carried excerpts of Gorbachev's remarks. It said his appeal was published in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital and the site of Sunday's clash.

The summary of Gorbachev's remarks blamed "actions by irresponsible persons" for the loss of life, apparently exonerating soldiers and police from any official blame.

In the city of 1.2 million, 900 miles south of Moscow, strikes continued and funeral services were planned for those killed. The Georgian Communist Party chief tendered his resignation, a Soviet spokesman said.

Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, an ethnic Georgian, met with almost 200 Georgian nationalists, human rights activists and strike organizers in Tbilisi trying to establish concord, but the Wednesday meeting ended after nearly three hours when many participants walked out, Moscow activist Alexander Podrabinek reported.

Abbie Hoffman dies at age 52; autopsy to be performed today

By The Associated Press

NEW HOPE, Pa. — Abbie Hoffman, a Chicago Seven radical who founded the Yippie movement of the 1960s and wrote "Revolution for the Hell of It" and "Steal This Book," was found dead in his home Wednesday night, authorities said.

Hoffman, 52, who once tossed dollar bills onto the floor of the American Stock Exchange to disrupt business, was found around 8:15 p.m., fully dressed under the covers of his bed, said Solebury Township Police Chief Richard Mangan.

Hoffman's body was found by a neighbor, said Bucks County coroner Dr. Thomas J. Rosco. There was no apparent cause of death and Rosco would not say whether any drugs or alcohol were found at the scene.

Rosco said he would not speculate on the cause of death.

Michael Waldron, who found Hoffman's body, told police Hoffman had been depressed due to an auto accident he had a few months ago, Mangan said.

Mangan said there was no suicide note and no signs that would suggest suicide, and an autopsy is scheduled for this morning.

Hoffman, a native of Worcester, Mass., rose to prominence with the Chicago Seven, a group of radicals who stood trial on charges of conspiring to disrupt the bloody 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

The others of the Seven were Thomas Hayden, Jerry Rubin, David Dellinger, Reynard C. Davis, Lee Weiner and John Froines.

The 4½-month-long trial's theatrics featured wild-haired defendants and a 74-year-old judge Julius Hoffman who ordered Bobby Seale, a former Black Panther leader, bound and gagged in the courtroom.

Seale's trial later was severed from the others.

Hoffman and four others also were charged with crossing state lines with intent to riot. They were acquitted of conspiracy but convicted of the second charge. The convictions eventually were overturned.

During a reunion of the Chicago Seven last year, Hoffman characterized himself as "an American dissident."

"I don't think my goals have changed since I was 4 and I fought schoolyard bullies," said Hoffman, who named one of his three children "America."

Two years ago, Hoffman was arrested for the 42nd time while protesting CIA recruitment at the University of Massachusetts. Hoffman, Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter, and 13 others eventually were acquitted of trespassing and disorderly conduct.

Hoffman, whose given name was Abbott, was born Nov. 30, 1936.

He received a bachelor's degree in psychology from Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., in 1959 and got his master's degree in graduate school at University of California at Berkeley in 1960.

Housing

Whitmer said when the board receives a complaint or conducts an inspection, he passes this information on to Schorey. After a 14-day notice by the renter, if no improvements are made, the site will be inspected. If infractions are found, Schorey may bring it to court action or, once again, inform the landlord of the infraction.

"Usually they will fix it at this point," Schorey said.

If no good faith effort has been made, the renters may choose to pay their rent into an escrow account or break the lease, she said.

Rent money placed in an escrow account will be used only for repairs of the apartment and is refundable if a good faith effort has not been made in three months.

Schorey said substandard housing is something the city needs to be concerned about with the large student population and the lack of housing around campus.

Whitmer said the board is attempting to establish a renter's permit requirement.

The proposed permit would affect all Manhattan landlords wishing to rent space and would be reissued every year.

"Most people don't complain," he said. "They live with it until they can't stand it before they seek help."

Whitmer expects to see more people opening their garages and basements to renters if the predicted increase in enrollment continues.

"People just aren't aware of their responsibilities as renters and landlords," Whitmer said.

other men, all Matamoros residents, were being detained pending the filing of formal charges of murder, kidnapping, possession of weapons and crimes against the state, said Jose Silva Arroyo, narcotics supervisor for the Mexican Federal Judicial Police in Matamoros.

Constanzo apparently introduced a sort of voodoo or black magic to the area, Neck said.

The ritual "has overtones of a religious cult that has been exported out of Cuba and Haiti as 'Santeria,'" Neck said, based on feathers and other evidence of rituals found at the ranch and the Matamoros home of a woman also sought by police.

The Mexican attorney general's office said Costanzo is believed to have fled into the United States. Mattox said investigators believe the cult had 10 members.

The 12 bodies were found Tuesday in graves in a field about 20 miles west of Matamoros by Mexican officials on a routine drug search.

Some victims were shot in the head, and others appeared to have been slain with machetes or sledgehammers, Neck said. Authorities said they also found candles and kettles full of body parts.

Cult members were bringing about 1,000 pounds of marijuana a month into the United States, Mattox said.

seventh in relief of Dave Christensen, and didn't retire a hitter. He promptly walked the lead-off hitter, Powell, and gave up a single to Acosta, with Powell stopping at second.

That was enough for Clark, and he brought in Jim McClellan. Kip Steinmetz pinch hit for Moses, and laid down a sacrifice bunt which was fielded by Rippelmeyer. He went to first and the baserunners moved up to second and third with one out.

Dyer grounded out to second baseman Bradshaw, scoring Powell and cutting the lead to 4-3. But McClellan recorded the final out for his second save of the season. Christensen got the win in his first start of the season. He allowed seven hits and two runs in his six innings of work. He struck out one and walked none.

Rosenboom and Skala both went 3-4 in the games, and Kaufman was 2-6.

"Kevin Kaufman hit the ball real well, and Rosenboom swung well," Clark said. "They both played aggressively and executed well."

Jeff Troll was 2-6, and Rippelmeyer went 2-3 in the second game, including his second home run in the last six games.

"He hit the ball well again today," Clark said of Rippelmeyer. "He needs to work on his consistency. He has a lot of potential. He was thrown right into the frying pan.

"We have all the faith in the world that he will continue to develop. He has tremendous power, he's just learning how to turn on pitches," Clark said.

"That comes with experience," he said. "He got cautious, maybe too cautious But he's got good power. He can hit the ball out of the yard."

ing systems and asbestos removal, DeJong said.

Additional options that have been considered by Planning Advocates Inc. include the use of the Farm Bureau Building for school space and a partnership with K-State that would allow students to take advanced classes at the University.

"To modify the Farm Bureau building would cost more than building a new school," DeJong said. "It would require major renovation just to get within the compliance codes for schools."

DeJong said a K-State partnership hasn't been fully considered yet, but it has been said that "where the student goes, dollars follow," meaning the proposal might benefit the University more than the district schools.

Terry Arthur, core committee chairman, said the forums are instrumental in the school board's decision concerning the solutions for the overcrowding problems.

"I'm glad that we had this amount show up so we can get a better idea what the community wants for the schools," Arthur said.

Soviet ships hit by Syria, 7 injured

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Two Syrian helicopters rocketed two Soviet navy vessels in the Mediterranean this week, injuring seven Soviet sailors, one critically, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov reported Thursday.

Gerasimov said Syria apologized for the attack and that a preliminary investigaton indicated the helicopter pilots attacked in error.

The military newspaper Kraznaya Zvezda identifed the badly wounded man as E. Shkitchenko and said, "There is little hope to save him."

Gerasimov told a news briefing the attack took place at 10 a.m. Tuesday 35 miles off the Syrian port of Tartus.

The two injured seamen were taken to Tartus, where the Soviets have maintained military facilities since 1969.

"Two helicopters with Syrian markings attacked two Soviet auxiliary vessels with rockets, namely a sea tugboat and a divers' boat in the Mediterranean Sea," he said.

Gerasimov did not say what type of helicopters were involved or give details of the attack.

According to an initial probe into the incident, the attack was a result of "erroneous actions of one of the Syrian helicopters," Gerasimov said. "The Syrian side expressed regret at the accident and offered its official apology."

He declined to say if the official apology was made in Moscow or Damascus.

The Soviet news media soft-pedaled the incident with Syria, its staunchest ally in the Middle East. Damascus keeps close relations with Moscow, its major arms supplier.

The attack was first reported in a three-paragraph item in the world news roundup of Krasnaya Zvezda on page three. The official Tass news agency carried a two-paragraph dispatch on Gerasimov's remarks. The government newspaper Izvestia did not mention the incident.

The submarine-tracking ship Kraszny Kavkaz and the cruiser Leningrad, on a routine patrol in the eastern Mediterranean, hurried to the aid of the attacked vessels.

New Wildcat chosen for emblem

Football logo adopted to show change in spirit

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

Don't tell Assistant Athletic Director Chris Peterson that the newly adopted football logo resembles the one used by the Iowa Hawkeye football program, which previously employed Coach Bill Snyder, unless you want an earful.

"People around here take offense to that," Peterson said. "If Bill Snyder would have come here from North Dakota, nobody would have said (anything)."

The new logo, which features a profile of a Wildcat head bearing a ferocious look, is part of an attitude change the athletic department is attempting to project as Snyder becomes the fourth coach in five years to take a shot at restoring a program which is winless in its past 27 games.

The new Wildcat, designed by local illustrator Tom Bookwalter, replaces a logo used by K-State since the mid-1970s and is already on display on a wall outside the visitors' locker room at KSU Stadium. Bookwalter has done work for ad agencies throughout the country, including projects for the National Football League and National Basketball Association.

"I called him up and he said he'd love to do it," Peterson said. "What would cost a corporation or a business $25,000 to $30,000 a year in art work, he's doing for the K-State Athletic Department for gift-in-kind."

Peterson said he is doing marketing work to have the logo displayed on billboards across the state, hoping K-State fans will immediately identify with the new symbol.

The logo will appear on K-State football helmets this fall as the team will change from its all-purple look of a year ago to silver helmets with the purple Wildcat. Snyder said the decision to change the emblem was not his own.

"(Bookwalter) came through the first time and did some things and nothing jumped out at anybody," he said. "He came back with some nice ideas and I let our football team look at them and we went from there.

"There's a lot of Wildcats across the country. We wanted something that was different and unique and when you look at it, you don't have to read whether it's K-State or Kentucky or someone else. We wanted something that when you look at it, you can say that this is Kansas State football."

Each time a customer shows "Purple Pride" by buying a K-State-endorsed product, revenue is also generated for University scholarships.

The revenue comes from a licensing fee charged by the University to manufacturers of products bearing the K-State insignia, said John Fairman, assistant vice president of University relations.

Manufacturers pay 6.5 percent of the total volume of the products produced at the wholesale cost. The manufacturer then bills the fee into the production cost.

Fee payments are totaled and recorded to the University budget by quarters, Fairman said. The licensing fee payments began in 1983 with $21.53 received for the first quarterly payment.

The University will usually keep up to a total of $10,000 per fiscal year from the proceeds for University promotional activities such as the University's 125th anniversary, he said.

The remainder of the funds are divided equally between the athletic scholarship fund and the general student scholarship fund handled by the financial aid office.

"Until last year, no money received from licensing fees went to scholarships."
—John Fairman assistant vice president of University relations

"Until last year, no money received from licensing fees went to scholarships. Almost everything went back into advertising," Fairman said. In the past fiscal year, $7,500 went to scholarships.

"This year we have taken in $23,808, with one quarter (payment) left to go," Fairman said. "Out of that, $13,359 has gone into scholarships. We have already taken out $10,000 for promotion, which was a portion of each quarterly payment.

"As a result of eliminating the exemptions, we are moving toward the possibility of realizing $100,000 a year from the licensing fee within the next two to three years."

When the University began implementing the licensing fee, area retailers who sold K-State products were exempt due to their longstanding support of the University, Fairman said.

The practice of exempting local retailers was discontinued because it was not fair to other businesses not receiving exemptions, he said. When the University asked those retailers with exemptions to pay the fee, there was no animosity and no major concerns were expressed.

He said this was because "the vast majority of the money collected (from the fee) goes to student scholarships."

Fairman said there are no blanket exemptions, adding the only group with an exemption is the Alumni Association. With this exemption policy, officials are able to see what money K-State should have received from the fee.

Area retailers selling K-State products have to pay a licensing fee said Bob Etherton, manager of Wildcat Spirit in Aggieville.

"When we began, we were exempt from (the fee). We've been here for 15 years. We got a letter from K-State that said we had to start paying the fee," Etherton said.

Questions raised in Senate on fair representation issue

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

Student Senate heard first readings of a bill that would establish an ad hoc committee to consider possible revisions of the Student Governing Association Constitution and by-laws, but not give it authority to consider the issue of fair representation in Senate.

Student Body President Laurian Cuffy, who wanted representation to be included in the bill, questioned its purpose.

"The subject of representation is a subject that concerns the student body as a whole, and (Senate Operation Committee) felt that it (would be) best addressed by a committee of students," said Lisa Rephlo, Senate Operations Committee chairwoman. "We felt that the representation issue was part of Laurian's campaign, and we didn't want to steal it from him."

"We felt that Laurian should have the opportunity to form a committee to look into representation first, and then if he didn't, we would," Engineering Senator Greg Weisenborn said.

Cuffy, expressed his concerns about the establishment of two committees.

"Resources, in terms of interested individuals, are diluted if you have two committees. I felt that the (Senate Operations) committee should have consulted with me before it wrote the bill," Cuffy said. "Specifically, Senate representation in itself was never a campaign promise of mine."

Weisenborn said in the five-hour meeting Thursday night that Senate representation was a "very volatile issue, more than this committee can handle."

"Considering a change of representation could bring down a lot of other more important changes that need to be made," he said.

In other business, Senate passed a resolution requiring that all groups seeking fee increases present them to the body.

"I think that a presentation should be made to Senate so that we can be aware that a fee is being thought of," said Todd Giefer, architecture senator.

Senate almost unanimously approved a resolution requesting the Council on Traffic Parking and Police Operation make the lower end of the Union parking lot accessible to students. The student parking in the upper area of the lot will be converted to parking meters beginning next fall.

In allocations, an amendment was defeated that would have increased the International Coordination Council's budget for printing. The council would have used the money to purchase and distribute stickers promoting internationalism.

"The stickers end up everywhere but where you want them to," said Chris Kern, architecture senator. "I don't like them, and hate to see them clutter up campus."

"The world is getting smaller and we will be faced with associating with people of other backgrounds," Cuffy said. "The stickers allow the council to send international messages."

Admirer lunges for princess

CRAMLINGTON, England — A 57-year-old man who grabbed Olympic sprinter Florence Griffith-Joyner in a passionate embrace last August lunged at Princess Diana when she visited this town northern town Thursday.

Edward Adcock, a carpenter, said he meant no harm to the 27-year-old princess when he jumped over railings as she spoke to a crowd outside a workshop for the mentally handicapped.

"I am sorry if I caused her any upset because I have always admired her enormously," he said. "I might have been in the process of trying to give her a hug. She is attractive and I fancy her, but I didn't realize it would finish up this way."

In August, Adcock grabbed the American sprinter from behind as she peeled off her track suit after winning a race in Gateshead. He was not charged.

Adcock wonders how his workmates at a building site will regard his latest caper. "They pulled my leg a lot over the Flo-Jo business," he said.

One person clearly was not pleased.

Hetty Adcock, the carpenter's 85-year-old mother, broke into tears when she heard the news and cried: "Oh no! Not again!"

Lawsuit dismissal sought

RENO, Nev. — An attorney for the rock band Judas Priest is seeking dismissal of a lawsuit that claims the British group's heavy metal music led two youths into a suicide pact.

Suellen Fulstone of Reno said in a motion filed Wednesday that the band could be held liable in the case only if the courts created a dangerous exception to First Amendment rights for subliminal messages.

"The implications of any such exception are altogether frigid," she said. "The very fact of this lawsuit has had an improperly inhibiting effect on creative work. It should be the last of its kind."

Fulstone argued in the Washoe District Court motion that words that are heard subconsciously should have the same constitutional protection as any other printed or spoken words.

A lawsuit against Judas Priest and CBS Records claims that the words and subliminal messages on the band's "Stained Class" album motivated James Vance and Raymond Belknap of Sparks to attempt suicide in 1985. Belknap shot himself to death, but when Vance fired, the shotgun slipped and ripped his face apart. He died in November.

Smithsonian to get Concorde

WASHINGTON — A Concorde, the world's only supersonic airliner, will be given to the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum under an agreement to be signed Sunday between the museum and Air France.

The Smithsonian said the gift will be made within the next decade as some of the planes, which began commercial service in 1976, are retired.

More than 203 feet long, the Concorde will occupy a prominent space in the museum's annex, due to be built at Dulles International Airport about 20 miles outside Washington. The air and space museum is the city's biggest tourist attraction.

Patent race hinders research

NEW YORK — Universities are racing to cash in on cold nuclear fusion with a haste that shows how scholarly research often is tinged by big business.

A broad patent on cold nuclear fusion could be worth billions of dollars if the invention turns out to provide a new way of producing cheap, clean and abundant energy.

But the lure of money inhibits exploration of cold fusion claims as leading researchers withhold information in order to protect their patent positions, lawyers and scholars said Thursday.

"There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that once you dangle out that pot of gold called a patent it causes people to publish less and disclose less," Donald Chisum, a patent expert at the University of Washington, said this week.

Scientists trying to test the cold fusion claims announced at a news conference last month have been stymied because the two researchers have withheld important details of their work.

The University of Utah applied for three patents even before the March 23 news conference featuring its own B. Stanley Pons and his co-investigator, Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southampton in England.

Massachusetts Institute of Technology said this week it has applied for patents on work done by a researcher, Peter Hagelstein.

Principal smooches pig

ST. JOHN — It wasn't love at first sight, but it made for good reading. Klon Matthews, principal at St. John Elementary School, kissed a pig on the roof of the school building.

Matthews was living up to his end of a bargain he made with the students several weeks ago. He told them to read a lot of books and he would sit on the roof and kiss a pig.

Matthews also moved his desk to the roof of the school building.

"I've been on the roof for all the classes," Matthews said while on the grade school"s roof Wednesday afternoon. He waved to a crowd of students, teachers and passersby.

Boos from the students forced him to remove a pair of wax lips. After three quick kisses. He told the students, "I've done my job. Now you do your job."

"Keep reading," they shouted back.

The 220 children took home "pig slips" which parents signed when a book was completed.

A "pig thermometer" in the hallway kept track of the number of books read. On another chart, there was a ladder and a picture of Matthews. Students moved him up the ladder as they neared their goal.

Man kills companion, self

WICHITA — A 20-year-old man killed his 19-year-old companion and then himself following a Wednesday night argument, leaving their 2-month-old daughter unattended in a southeast Wichita apartment, police said.

The victims were identified as Santiago Urquieta and Robin Kilpatrick. Their bodies were found when a friend of Urquieta's arrived to take him to work Thursday monring, said Detective Capt. John Hershberger of the Wichita Police Department.

Hershberger said the infant was taken into protective custody.

Students compete for squad

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

Thursday night, Brandeberry indoor complex rang with the cheers of the 1989-90 cheerleader and yell leader tryouts.

Scott Johnson, cheerleader adviser for the K-State Cheerleader squad, said about 30 women and 15 men participated in the tryouts for the varsity, junior-varsity and Willie The Wildcat positions.

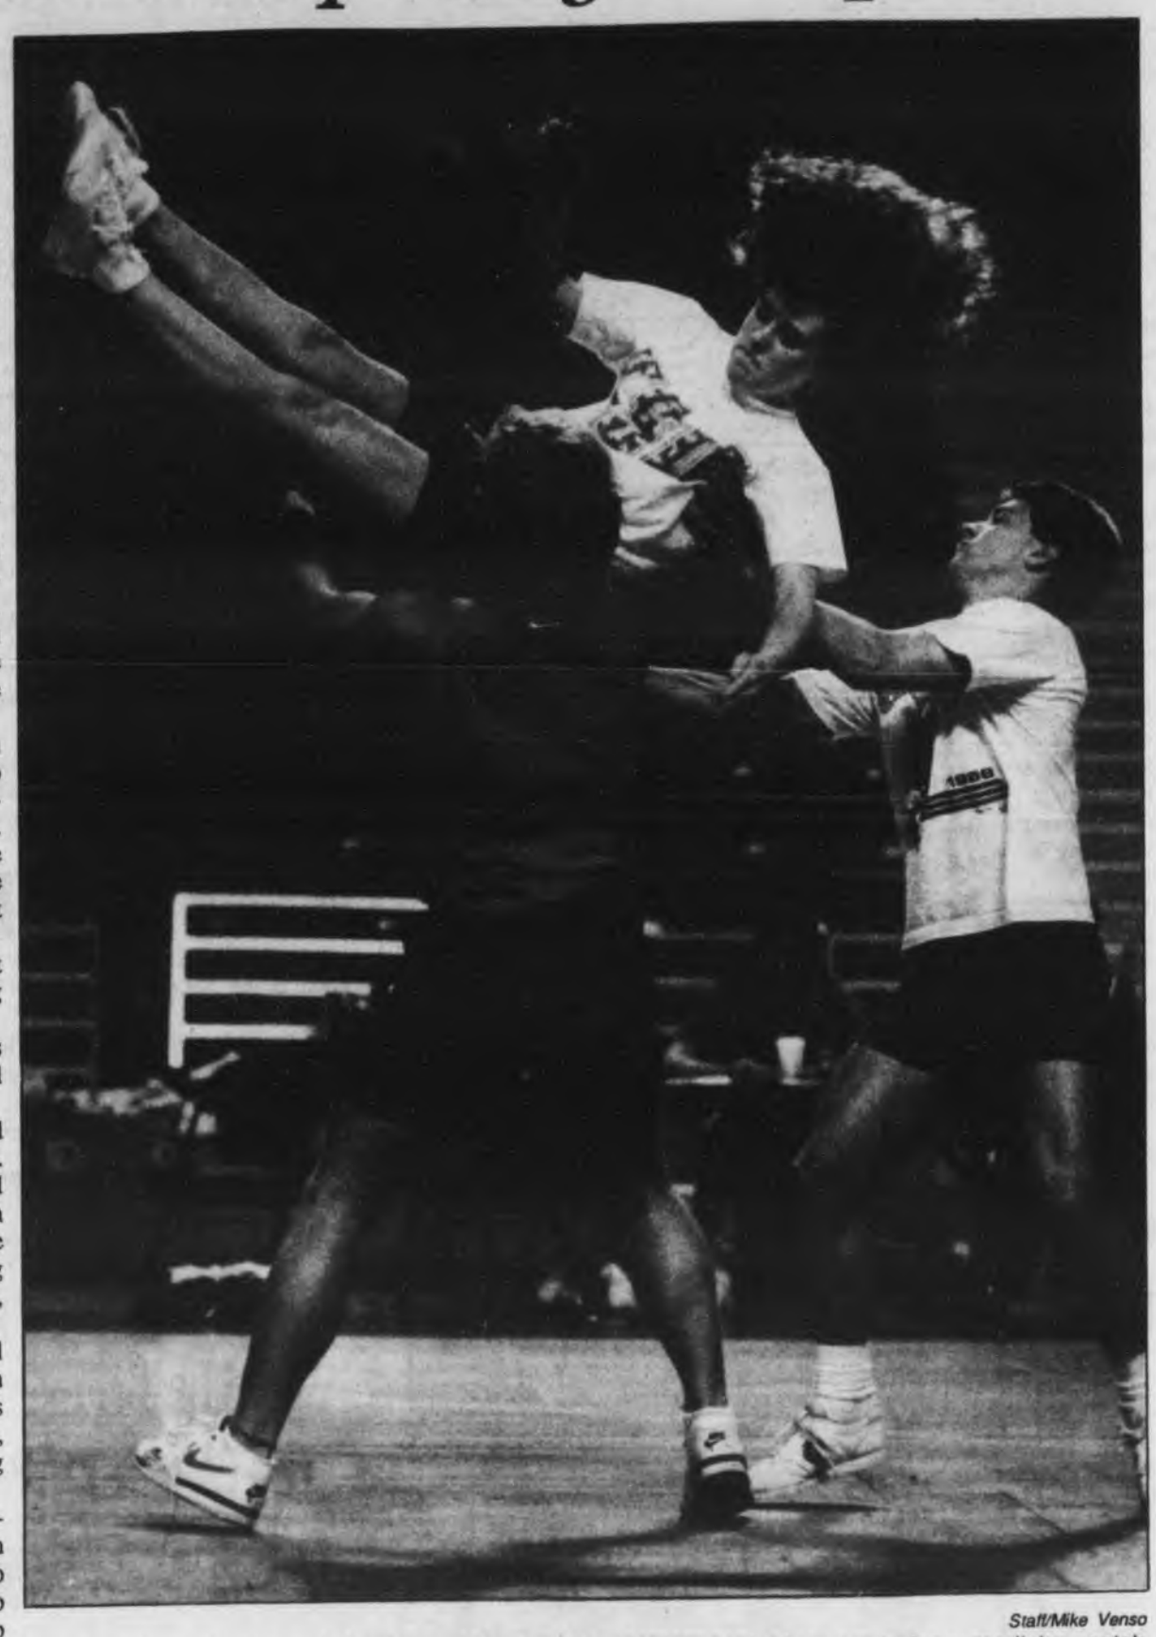
"A lot of the judging is based on general appearance," Johnson said. "The women are judged on jumps and tumbling, a fight-song routine, double stunts (partner stunts) and a dance routine.

"For the men, a lot of it depends on jumps and tumbling, a fight-song and double-stunts," he said.

Other considerations, Johnson said, are eye-contact, smile and the ability to cheer in front of large groups of people.

"Willie traditionally has been fairly tall, not because he needs to be tall, but because of the proportionality of the head," Johnson said. "Other important things Willie must be able to do are entertain the crowd and portray ideas without using words.

"Willie isn't a man trying to act like a wildcat, he's a wildcat trying to act like a man," he said.



Johnson said cheering requires intense physical and mental demands.

"They're physically exhausted and it takes a lot of time," he said. "When we get into the fall, they'll be practicing at least two hours a day, five days a week. The game days themselves can take a big amount of time after we travel, warm-up and perform."

Mike Whitney, junior in physical education and last semester's team captain, said the squad's members plan on two hours of practice a day, Saturdays and one hour of working out in the gym each day.

"Something people don't understand is that you have to come in there with the physical strength to hold somebody, and the agility to balance somebody on top and keep your own balance," Whitney said.

Hispanics promote cultural activities

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

April was dubbed "Mes De La Raza Hispana" — Month of the Hispanic Race — as an attempt to increase appreciation and awareness of the Hispanic culture at K-State.

Hispanic Awareness Month is sponsored by the Puerto Rican Students Organization, Mexican American Council of Students and the Office of Minority Affairs, said Diana Caldwell, coodinator of minority student development.

"It is the first attempt by the two predominant Hispanic groups to bring about an overall campus awareness of their culture," Caldwell said.

The month is highlighted by cultural exhibits and displays in the Union, and an open pig roast and pot-luck dinner Saturday evening at the Internationial Student Center.

"The students have been wanting to do something for a long time," she said.

Josie Bernal, president of MACS and senior in graphic design and art education, said the project has been in the planning stages since last semester and originally started out as a week-long event.

"We're trying to see if we can get a tradition going," Bernal said.

"K-State suffers a little by not being as cultural as a lot of other colleges in the country," Bernal said.

Caldwell said there have been segmented attempts to bring culture to this community, but "nothing like this."

"The (Hispanic) students wanted to educate the other students on a different level aside from the academic exposure," she said.

A big event for the month is the University Luncheon lecture April 25 with Alicia Cuaron, president of Cuaron and Gomez Corporation Inc. of Denver, Colo., Caldwell said. Cuaron will speak on the future of Hispanic students in the year 2000.

"By the year 2000, one-third of our nation will be comprised of minorities. There should be some special preparations by minorities ... to be prepared for their (entrance) into the American society in large numbers," Caldwell said. "These students need to develop leadership skills to meet that demand."

Student Senate more than resume filler

Commentary

Paige Nichols

Collegian Columnist

Editor's note: Paige Nichols is a former K-State student.

On April 6, Student Senate passed what was probably one of the most important bills to come before it in many years: the Student Funds and Ethical Responsibilities Bill. The vote on this bill, which calls for the divestment of student monies from companies doing business in South Africa, was nearly postponed indefinitely after hours of debate because some senators claimed they did not have enough information to make a proper decision.

One senator even went so far as to declare that voting on the bill would be deciding foreign policy and therefore "out of (Student Senate's) jurisdiction."

These complaints need to be addressed in the context of what happened that night, as well as what we ought to expect from senators supposedly democratically elected to represent students.

To begin with, deciding how to invest student monies cannot possibly be considered out of the jurisdiction of Student Senate. As for the claim that it is out of line for students to make choices concerning foreign policy, I wonder how this senator proposes we vote for our national representatives if we do not understand and evaluate the domestic and foreign policies for which candidates stand.

In addition, the K-State Catalog defines one of the objectives of the educational program as: To "comprehend and evaluate the processes and institutions in society at home and abroad and develop a dynamic sense of personal responsibility as effective citizens in a democratic society."

It is with this goal in mind that student senators should address issues such as divestment. We tend to speak of leaving college as entering "the real world," without realizing that we're in that real world now and our actions here affect real people around the globe.

The University is an integral part of our country's system and by taking responsibility for our investments — regardless of their size — we are not only making a statement, (although it should be noted that a statement itself is a form of action) we are acting as effective citizens in that system.

The only way that divestment is going to help bring an end to apartheid in South Africa is if enough individuals and organizations pursue it. And with the action taken by Student Senate, K-State has joined a world-wide campaign to end foreign investment's support for this senseless and inhumane system.

This said, I would like to suggest that many of the senators shirked an immense responsibility by not preparing for the consideration of this bill. Members of the ad hoc committee assigned to this issue presented senators with a 41-page report at least a week in advance of the debate. This report examined divestment from a host of angles and contained a page and a half of references.

Nevertheless, when authors of two guest columns published in the Collegian the day of the debate presented their opposition to divestment during Senate, not one senator (other than those who were members of the ad hoc committee) referred to the report as a means of rebutting these individual's arguments.

Instead, the attending guests heard cries of "I'm so confused!"

Rather than demanding sources by which to evaluate the information presented, senators attempted to delay (perhaps indefinitely) making a decision on the grounds that there was just not enough information available. On the contrary — too much information was available and the complaining senators lacked the critical skills necessary to interpret and judge it for what it was worth.

It seemed obvious these senators had never faced conflicting information. So, their only means of handling it was to display confusion or attempt to dismiss the individuals supporting the bill (rather than their reasons for that support) by accusing them of being "biased."

Although it was never clarified just what this "bias" might be, opponents of the bill presented "evidence" later shown to be misleading (or simply untrue) giving just cause for the suspicion of their motives.

When asked what his interest in the issue was, one of these individuals claimed he was only concerned about South African blacks.

Interestingly enough, this same individual spent a great deal of time at an information table in the Union earlier in the week arguing that this bill would call for divestment from companies that give research grants to the University, therefore endangering K-State's research options. (Never mind that universities which have divested have found otherwise; the point is, this individual obviously had concerns other than those he claimed).

Members of the ad hoc committee, the Students for Educational Awareness, the Black Student Union, the African Student Union and other individuals who attended that Senate meeting to support this bill have every reason to be insulted and appalled at some senators' attempts to delay its passage.

We would like to think that senators take their positions seriously enough to read the material they intend to debate, rather than resorting to ad hominem arguments that only discourage student involvement in Senate.

The senators who did make an effort to weigh the evidence presented and reach an informed conclusion are greatly appreciated and should stand as an example for those less willing to approach this issue intelligently.

It's about time student senators quit seeing Senate involvement as a good resume builder and accept the real responsibilities the job entails.

Approval of MOE funds vital for institutions

In the style of Alfred Hitchcock, the large audience was kept glued to the edge of its seats. The suspense built. It seemed as if the rapidly unfolding scenario would never end. Just when things looked as if they were all wrapped up, there would be a new plot twist to complicate matters. Then finally, at long last, just before the closing curtain of the Kansas Legislature, the Margin of Excellence plan was approved.

And the collective audience gave a sigh of relief and sat back in their seats. The suspense was over.

Ever since June, when the regents approved the original proposal for this year's portion of MOE, students, faculty and administrators alike have been waiting for the final approval from the Kansas Legislature.

And at long last it is here. Saturday, the Legislature finally approved full funding for all Kansas Board of Regents schools. The song and dance routine is over. Almost.

Final distribution of the funds has yet to be decided, however K-State can rest assured that the end result will help to bring it more in line with its peer institutions.

The three-year MOE plan will give 100 percent funding to the base budget increase and 100 percent funding to mission-related enhancements at regent institutions.

For K-State, that will mean approximately $2 million added to the salary budget for faculty members. This is a much needed boost that will help K-State retain its current faculty, as well as attract the quality instructors that are so needed to sustain and improve the University. While previously K-State was much lower in faculty salary wages than its peer institutions, the increase will bring it up to standards so that it may be able to offer competitive salaries.

Despite this and the additional funding for capital improvement, K-State can't let this be the final act in the funding show. MOE is just the scene in what should be a continuing program of funding improvements for regents schools in Kansas.

Should apologize

Editor,

It's still unclear to me what it takes to be moral and who determines the goals of morality. I am referring to Don Rollin's column, "Divestment, sanctions immoral," which appeared April 6.

I find that text very embarrassing at a time when the song of the day in America is human rights. There are a few concerns, of many in that text, I want to raise and would appreciate if the author could clarify them to the public.

First, since when did Chief Buthelezi become an economic index in Africa to claim that no such vibrant economy has been achieved elsewhere in Africa? And what is his definition of such an economy anywhere?

Secondly, Bishop Tutu represents 12 percent or less of the blacks. So what?

By the author's figures, James Ngoya, president of the 100,000-member South African Black Taxi Association, represents only .42 percent (100,000 of 24 million) of the blacks. Chief Buthlezi's tribe represents just 3 percent of South African tribes. Put the motion on the table, who wins?

The biggest error Rollins has made, and he needs to apologize to the African states, is to claim that "The rest of Africa depends very strongly on South Africa for economic, social and political support." Such a statement not only shows how biased he is, but how ignorant he is about the African continent.

Africa has 54 countries. The Organization of African Unity member states do not have diplomatic relationships with South Africa because of the apartheid regime. In what ways and through what channel does South Africa support these countries?

One incurs pain when medication is received through the syringe. Such pain is short-lived or even painless when relief is anticipated. So too is the South African blacks' situation. Remember that until a grain of wheat dies, it cannot grow.

We are all aware of the North-South wars in this country. It took blood and life to end slavery in this country and to regard the black race as human. We all hail Martin Luther King Jr. as a national hero today.

The South African blacks have one last sacrifice to make and this is the hour.

Finally, even in this country, 100 percent of the people never vote yes. Why are the blacks in South Africa the only exception? Beware of those sponsored by companies doing business in South Africa who make statements similar to those quoted by Rollins, for the devil too, uses the Bible to justify his position.

Revenge pointless

Editor,

I have been a contributing member of Greenpeace since 1979. Although I admire most of the organization's efforts, even it is a little misguided at times. Take for instance its boycott of tuna.

Yes, I'll agree that dolphins are intelligent creatures, and I know it's a tragedy that any of them have to die so we can eat tuna. In essence, we've made dolphins into the horses of the sea: beautiful to look at, intelligent and trainable, and, in some cultures, a faux pas to consume. But they, like horses on land, are not an endangered species.

This is unlike the ugly, more cumbersome and less intelligent sea turtles, which are an endangered species. More sea turtles — two to three times as many — die in shrimp nets every year than dolphins do in tuna nets. But has anyone boycotted shrimp?

There is an expensive fishing net — the Turtle Excluder Device (TED) net — which allows nearly 97 percent of the turtles to escape and avoid drowning. With modifications it can probably be used in tuna fishing to save dolphins.

But, instead of constructively helping shrimp and tuna fishermen by helping them to buy these lifesaving nets, we as a nation react with righteous venom and refuse to buy their products, hoping this will teach those vultures who ravage our seas a lesson.

It's just too bad so many Americans are set on revenge and not on cooperation.

Resents quotes

Editor,

As a journalist myself, I really resent being misquoted by another journalist (Collegian, April 6, Page 6). I did not say "This campus is very conducive to learning. It's quite stimulating ..."

Instead, my exact words to Carrie Law were, "This campus atmosphere is very conducive to creativity. It's very stimulating ..."

Neither did I say "... the facilities are quite good, really," which sounds dreadfully patronising. Law seems to think she can make things up, or change important little words to suit herself. It's a good thing, it seems to me, that she's decided that her future work lies in the realms of industry or business: we're looking for accuracy in my field.

Physicians suffer due to insurance crunch

Medical liability premiums 'eroding' doctors' services

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

Family physicians are feeling the effects of the medical liability crises in Kansas, but ironically, so are insurance companies.

"Medical liability and the increase in liability premiums are eroding services, specifically obstetrical care, that family physicians have provided in the past for their patients," said Dennis D. Tietze, director of the Kansas Academy of Family Physicians.

Ted Fay, attorney for the Health Care Stabilization Fund, said the underlying cause of high liability insurance rates for physicians stems from the large amount of losses occurring in malpractice settlements and judgments.

"Courts instruct juries and juries follow the instructions," he said. "The jury tries to decide the fairest award, but sometimes courts award great amounts of money for pain and suffering."

Health Care Stabilization is only making enough money to pay the salaries of its employees, a characteristic common to most medical malpractice insurance companies, Fay said.

"The doctors pay our salaries from their premiums, but the losses are so high that we don't make a profit," he said. "We will probably be about $50,000 under budget this year."

Insurance companies aren't trying to cheat physicians by charging them with huge amounts of liability, Fay said. In fact, the state Insurance Commission regulates the companies' rates.

"Because Kansas is a prior approval state, companies cannot increase rates without permission from the Insurance Commission," he said. "They must file a rate application and show statistics that prove the necessity to raise rates."

He said there aren't many medical malpractice insurance companies that want to come into Kansas because there isn't any profit here.

He said other health care providers such as pharmacists sometimes pay only $150 for the same amount of coverage which costs an obstetrician/gynecologist $70,000 because "pharmacists don't have any losses."

Larry Moeller, chief of staff at Lafene Student Health Center, said liability insurance almost doubled between August and December.

"I put three take-home checks aside just to pay for the privilege of practicing in Kansas," he said.

Moeller said the Kansas Legislature is in the process of approving Senate Bill 67 that would grant Lafene the right to use its monies to pay for doctors' liability insurance. This bill would apply to all state universities.

"(The bill) has already been approved by the Board of Regents and almost by the Legislature," he said.

The bill is awaiting approval by Gov. Mike Hayden, Moeller said.

"If he vetoes the bill, then all but about two doctors will leave Lafene and move to a state with lower insurance rates," he said.

Tietze said that according to a KAFP survey, obstetrical service is eroding in rural areas.

"There are only 18 obstetricians practicing in western Kansas," he said.

Doctors in western Kansas are so scarce that some women need to drive five hours for obstetrical-gynecological care, Moeller said.

"I would never want to get pregnant in western Kansas," he said.

According to the KAFP, from information gathered in 1987, 49 percent of family physicians are no longer providing obstetrical services.

"What has us most concerned," Tietze said, "is the number of family physicians who have quit delivering babies over the past few years, specifically from 1987 to 1988. Approximately 82 family physicians have quit providing obstetrical care for their patients in the course of this one-year time period."

The survey indicated that urban-based family physicians have the flexibility to refer an obstetrical patient to an obstetrical-gynecological doctor if they have decided to discontinue obstetrics.

"The issue of health care dislocation and access to care for our patients in Kansas is our principle concern," Tietze said.

Fay said the brightest light for hope in eliminating this crisis falls on a Kansas Supreme Court decision.

"The Supreme Court may allow the Legislature to exercise its traditional role in regulating public policy," he said. "It gives the Legislature the opportunity to solve the problem as it develops. The courts don't have the time to do this. We hope this would stabilize rates and keep them from going up as fast they are."

Tietze said, "It is imperative that we adopt legislation that will change some of the trends that we have observed in surveys. If this malpractice crisis continues, we will all be the victims based on inaccessibility to qualified comprehensive health care."

Products raise funds

Association reinforces links

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Calling itself the "friend-raiser of the University," the K-State Alumni Association is selling school spirit via K-State-endorsed products.

A fund-raising idea that began two years ago is bringing money to the Association through the sale of a variety of items — from paperweights to grandfather clocks.

According to Amy Button Renz, associate director of the Alumni Association, 12 different items are advertised in the K-Stater, the association's monthly publication.

This year's list includes a glass paperweight, two varieties of watches, a license plate, a Willie The Wildcat miniature pewter figurine, a key chain, a barbecue apron, two sizes of purple Wildcat napkins, a writing pen, a windsock, a desk lamp, and a grandfather clock with the University seal on the pendulum.

"Any income generated from merchandise goes back into programming for activities the association would be involved with," Button Renz said. "It is just treated as income to assist in alumni activity expenses."

The money received from product sales goes into the Alumni Association budget and is evenly distributed for alumni activities such as recruitment, class reunions, Homecoming, alumni medallion and fellows awards, and K-State regional alumni clubs.

Jeanine Lake, Alumni Association membership assistant, said products are offered primarily to alumni but can be purchased by anyone.

Button Renz said the K-Stater usually runs two or three different ads per issue, but future issues may contain as many as three to six ads for products, which are available throughout the year.

The magazine is sent to every member of the association throughout the nation and overseas. The association has 27,895 members, ranking first in membership percentage in the Big Eight Conference.

"Our purpose is to provide a two-way communication link between the University, our alumni and friends," Button Renz said. "We like to keep the alumni and friends informed and interested in the continued development of K-State.

"We hope to produce a small brochure with the list of products available."

The brochure will be sent to a sampling group of alumni throughout the United States, Lake said.

Button Renz said the association does pay tax on any unrelated business income, including merchandise. The association must pay tax on net profits received from all product sales.

This year, to date, the association has made a net profit, prior to taxes, of $10,585, said Doug VanFeldt, director of business affairs for the association. A minimum tax rate of 15 percent will be paid after the overhead allocations are taken from net profits.

Button Renz said the association has an agreement with the University allowing it to offer up to 12 different products per year to be exempt from the licensing fee. The association is allowed to sell 12 items without the imposition of the licensing fee, but any additional items would require the licensing fee be paid.

A licensing fee is charged to all manufacturers of University-endorsed products. The fee is 6.5 percent assessed to the wholesale cost of producing the item on the total volume of products.

The association is exempt from the licensing fee due to an appeal made to the University, said John Fairman, assistant vice president of University relations.

"The association is getting the product without the manufacturer passing on the licensing cost," Fairman said. "The Alumni Association came to us with special needs in that they felt they would have problems in selling products. They said it would drive up the price to the point where products wouldn't be sold."

The association must renew the agreement annually and it will always be for a limited number of products, he said. The association is getting the product at a lower cost because the manufacturer is not passing on the licensing cost. However, Fairman said "the products are not ones otherwise sold in the Manhattan area."

"Anything we offer is exclusive," Button Renz said.

Individuals contact the association with projections on how a product would do in this area, she said.

Fee

Wildcat Spirit prints its own products with K-State logos, a practice requiring it to pay the fee. Etherton said K-State provided him with a 1989 Directory and Buyers Guide for Officially Licensed Products. The licensing company produces the guide of officially licensed companies producing products using university names and logos.

Etherton said the association does not give his store direct competition.

"Nobody is in direct competition," Etherton said. "No store is directly set up to be strictly K-State. There is some competition but most all stores carry different items."

International Collegiate Enterprises Inc. is a licensing company which audits manufacturers that produce products for more than 100 universities names or logos, including K-State.

ICE audits the manufacturers to ensure that each university has received appropriate reimbursements for the use of its name and logos. ICE collects the quarterly payments from the companies and reimburses each individual university for its share.

Manufacturers must apply to ICE for approval to produce products for the institutions. Approval involves signing a contract which states that the manufacturer must meet quality standards established by the industry, whatever the product may be.

Fairman noted items in the contract, such as the manufacturer's agreement to pay 6.5 percent of the cost of the product for use of the university name or logo and that it will submit a sample of the product for the university's approval before production begins.

"They investigate all companies using university names for logos to insure we receive the royalities due to us from the products," Fairman said.

As an example, Fairman said an item costing a manufacturer $10 to produce in wholesale cost will be increased in price by 65 cents with the additional 65 cents going to the university.

There are three areas of protection the licensing fee provides, Fairman said. First, it gives an opportunity to determine if the use of the University name is in good taste. Second, there can be product quality testing in all items produced.

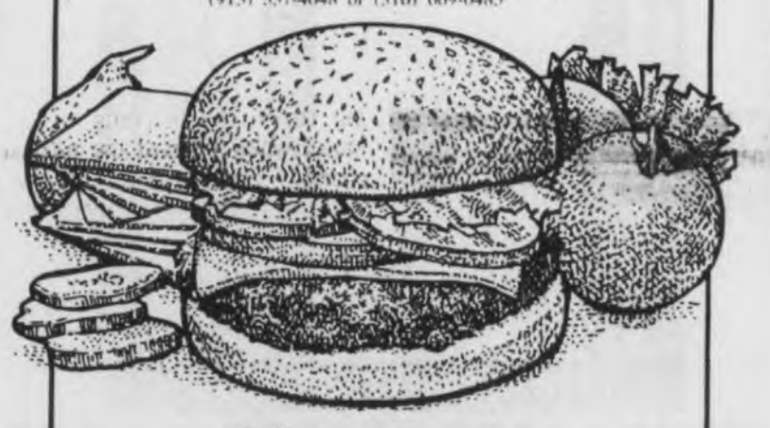
"We don't want to come across with the wrong image," he said.

The third area is protection against unauthorized people using the K-State name and protection from fraudulant activites involving the University, Fairman said.

"We ask people — students, alumni — to purchase products that have a licensing tag on them," Fairman said. "We also ask them to inform us of those products that don't have the tag so that our licensing company can check them out."

An officially licensed product will have a white oval tag with red and blue letters around the outside reading "officially licensed collegiate products." Tags are either sewn or stuck on all official products. Customers may ask merchants for a licensed product and usually the merchant will know whether it is, he said.

"We've had less than 10 students or alumni who have called or come by my office to indicate they saw a product that was really poor," Fairman said.



"All we have to know is the name of the company and ICE can investigate," he said. "ICE will then reimburse (the University) for the sales of those products that they have produced with our name on it."

Ken Lang, director, leads the Little Apple Barbershop Chorus in the basement of the First Christian Church during practice on Thursday night. The group will perform Saturday at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

The chorus, as part of the warm up exercises, prepare their voices and stretch their muscles before actually singing. Assistant director Don Thompson leads the stretching.

Singing barbershop style

By Nancy Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

"I was lying in bed one morning (in 1975) listening to the radio, when I heard the neatest sound," said Myron Calhoun, associate professor of computer science.

The sound he heard was the music of a barbershop quartet.

Calhoun is now the president of Manahattan's Little Apple Barbershop Chorus, an organization dedicated to the preservation of barbershop music.

The all-male chorus, which has about 40 members, is a chapter of the International Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America. The S.P.E.B.S.Q.S.A was founded in 1938 in Tulsa, Okla. and with 38,000 members, is the largest fraternity of singers in the world.

"At the time the society was founded, the government was giving agencies all kinds of initials, so the man who founded it (the society) gave it the long list of initials as a spoof," Calhoun said.

"(The Little Apple Chorus) has been in existence for approximately 12 years," said Patrick Caffey, publicity officer and, Manhattan businessman. "We were first called the Tuttle Aires, (named) after Tuttle Creek, then the Grain Belters, then the Quad County Chorus and finally the Little Apple Barbershop Chorus."

The Chorus has members from not only Manhattan, but from Clay Center, Ft. Riley, Holton, Westmoreland, and Palmer.

"People come a long way to sing with the chorus," Calhoun said.

The Chorus has a wide variety of members, including businessmen, young boys, students, professors, and retirees.

The society's service project benefits the Institute of Logopedics in Wichita, an organization dedicated to correcting speech defects.

"I believe that last year the society raised approximately $7,000 (for the institute)," Caffey said.

Pete Cooper, front, and Jim Lindquist sing Thursday evening.

Barbershop music can be traced to the 1800s. It has a basic harmony in four parts. There is no accompaniment, something unique to barbershop music.

"Barbershop or barbershopping is one of the two truly American music forms. The other is jazz," Calhoun said. "It originated in about 1870-90. Men used to gather in barbershops and when enough men got together, they would sing."

One of Norman Rockwell's more famous pictures depicts barbershop quartets. It pictures two customers with shaving cream on their faces and two barbers with brushes in hand, singing in a quartet.

"We receive most of our music from the international association," Caffey said. "It is usually of a wide variety of music, although some may have the same style. Most are not old songs. The majority of the music we are doing now is Irving Berlin's."

The Chorus' programs consist of chorus singing intermixed with quartet singing. The chorus usually sings for about 20 minutes and then the various quartets step out and sing.

The chorus has performed at various churches, the Manhattan Town Center, McCain Auditorium, rest homes and will be traveling this summer for the third time to Berchard, Neb. for a town festival, Caffey said.

According to Calhoun, despite the fact that most of the Chorus members are very dedicated, the turnover rate for membership is high.

"It is a constant burden to keep membership up. We probably lose seven to nine members a year, with the University and Ft. Riley," Calhoun said. "For example, we sent a young man to Harmony College (week long course in directing and arranging music.) He came back with a lot of great ideas, but a month later he got a job offer and was gone. We need to get at least 10 to 12 new members a year to stay even. But, we would love to get 20 to 30 or even 40 new men in the Chorus."

Harmonizing acts to perform Saturday

By Nancy Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

Manhattan's Little Apple Barbershop Chorus will present an evening of barbershop music at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

The 40-member, all-male chorus is a chapter member of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America.

The headlining act for the evening will be the Chicago-based Schizo-Phonics.

The Schizo-Phonics is a comedy quartet, said Patrick Caffey, publicity officer for the Little Apple Chorus. They not only sing but do it comically.

Tivoli, a Sweet Adelines quartet from the Kansas City, Mo. metropolitan area, will also be performing Saturday evening. Sweet Adelines is the female version of a barbershop quartet.

The Little Apple Chorus' section of the program will be "A Tribute to Irving Berlin," featuring Berlin's songs barbershop-style.

"I have an enthusiasm for the Barbershop Chorus because they have such a good time (singing)," said Richard Martin, director of McCain. "They really want to infect the audience with their love of the singing (of barbershop music). It does bring a great deal of pleasure to people. It is interesting because it brings people from all professions together to sing."

This will mark the second time the Chorus has performed at McCain.

The Chorus usually draws a good crowd and it is possible that the performance may sell out, Martin said. The people at McCain, he said, are glad groups such as this have the opportunity to perform in an acoustically sound facility such as McCain.

During the program, the Little Apple Chorus will present its annual Award of Harmony. This award is given to a civic-minded person who has promoted non-musical harmony within the community.

This year's recipient is Harriet Mitchell Stewart, a 94-year-old Manhattan resident.

Tickets are $7 at the door or $6 in advance.

Site to honor military women

Professor chosen to help design national cemetery

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

Not just anybody can decide what will be built at one of the United States' most sacred sites — Arlington National Cemetery. But La Barbara Wigfall, assistant professor of environmental design, is not just anybody.

Wigfall, who was honored in 1986 as one of the 10 most outstanding young women in America, has been selected as one of eight jury members for the national design competition — Women in Military Service for America Memorial.

"It's a serious business — at least it is to me," she said. "I'm still in awe of the chance to be able to honor my country like this."

The project, which will honor women who served in the military from the days of the Revolutionary War through the present day, is the first national memorial recognizing the contributions of women to the nation, Wigfall said.

"This promises to be a very significant competition" and perhaps an even more significant project, she said.

Gregory Hunt, co-manager of the competition and professor at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in Blacksburg, Va., wrote to Wigfall that, "The site itself demands a sensitive response to a number of design considerations, and I know of no other location in Washington that requires such a thoughtful interrelationship of architecture, urban design, landscape architecture, history and art for a memorial site.

"It is for this reason that we are attempting to assemble such a panel of varied and distinguished professionals for the competition jury."

The jury, which will meet June 8-10 in Washington, D.C., is responsible for selecting the best one to three architectural designs for the memorial, Wigfall said. The jury consists of four men who are all designers, one female artist, three women who represent the military, and Wigfall, preservationist and urban designer.

Following the jury's decision, another committee will finalize a workable design from the jury's selection which will become the memorial.

"It's a serious business — at least it is to me," she said. "I'm still in awe of the chance to be able to honor my country like this."

—La Barbara Wigfall assistant professor of environmental design

Wigfall said the process is similar to the Vietnam Memorial selection process, in which more than 1,000 entries were submitted.

"With only eight people to make the decision, and given our diverse backgrounds, it will be difficult to come up with a winner," she said.

Wigfall, a native of Washington, D.C., was recommended for the position by John Spencer, a colleague from Hampton Institute in Hampton., Va., and an unknown member of Congress.

"(Spencer) said he thought I was someone who could deal with the heavyweights," she said. "He said I wasn't someone who would melt in the heat of pressure and that I know how to argue my point. He saw that as my strength."

She views being from Washington, D.C. an asset.

"I don't know if I'm capable of doing the job, but I'm certainly familiar enough with the site," she said.

Since receiving the appointment, she's traveled to Arlington Cemetery twice to photograph and walk the site.

"Gregory Hunt told me he feels that I know the site better than (those in charge of the project)," Wigfall said.

The committee which selected the jury was looking for a woman and a designer who had experience in urban design and preservation, she said.

"Both urban design and historical preservation are my strong points," she said. "So it wasn't difficult for me to make the argument with them that, 'OK — I'm your girl.'"

Wigfall said her view of historical preservation is different from most in the field. She supports preserving not only the physical environment, but also the socio-cultural character of a region.

"A lot of people deal with just a building or structures — physicalness," she said. "On the other hand, I deal with preservation in a much larger sense, in terms of whole communities and landscape.

"So when considering this project for Arlington National Cemetery, you have to look at the whole site, and it takes someone who is sensitive to that."

Wigfall said the memorial will be different than any other memorial ever constructed.

"Historically, most memorials are statues or walls," she said. "This, on the other hand, is space — underground space."

Most of the memorial will be located underground and will consist of a computer reception room with photos and records of service of all registered women. Presentations depicting the history and contributions of women to the military will be in the auditoriums, Wigfall said.

The entryway to the building will be incorporated into existing Arlington gate area at the end of the entrance to the cemetery.

Construction is scheduled to begin by the summer of 1991.

"The memorial is especially important to me since it's for women," Wigfall said. "I really appreciate the hardships these women went through to contribute to this country. I think it's about time they receive this recognition."

Administrators appointed to board for minority study

By Michael Nichols
Campus Editor

Two K-State administrators have been appointed to the Brown Foundation Board, established by the family of Linda Brown, a plaintiff in the historical Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education lawsuit.

Emmet Wright, head of the Department of Curriculum and Instruction, and Anne Butler, director of educational support services, will work on issues affecting equity in education and problems affecting minorities and underrepresented groups in education.

Wright, who chairs the research committee for the board, said the committee is looking at research needs and trying to develop an agenda.

"(The committee) is developing a foundation for expansion on research on desegregation," Butler said. "We are also trying to determine stipends for research on desegregation."

Butler said the key issues the committee is addressing include a continued study on matters of desegregation, the shortage of minority students going into teacher education, and the development of a scholarship program.

Wright said the board will award scholarships indentifying the efforts of minority students and other underrepresented individuals. The Foundation will solicit scholarship funds from corporate sources and individual contributions.

"The scholarships will depend on how successful fund-raising efforts are ... determining the number and amount of awards," Butler said.

The board is also compiling a collection of materials from the Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case, Wright said. These materials will be available to scholars researching the case.

"We are collecting documents and personal correspondence ... even non-print kinds of things, like videos or newscasts," Wright said.

Kruger signs Wires; 1 scholarship left

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State men's basketball coach Lon Kruger announced the signing of Moberly (Mo.) Junior College point guard Jeff Wires to a national letter of intent Thursday, bringing the number of Wildcat signees to three.

Wednesday, the first day of the spring signing period, K-State signed two junior college guard/forwards in Santa Monica (Cailf.) College's 6-foot-4 Keith Amerson and Miami-Dade North Community College's 6-foot-5 Jean Derouillere.

K-State has one scholarship remaining and is apparently in the running for 6-foot-6 forward Kent Bennett of Manual Arts High School in Los Angeles. He is also considering Texas-El Paso.

"We're still working on that," Kruger said.

Kruger has said he does not expect to announce any more signings this week, but "hopefully" will have another next week. The Los Angeles Times reported in its Thursday edition that Bennett's high school coach Randolph Simpson said Bennett had already signed with the 'Cats.

Bennett was an all-Southern California selection, who averaged 20 points and 11 rebounds a game for a team that went 26-2 last year. Manual Arts was ranked No. 1 in California and No. 5 in the nation at different times last season.

K-State could have another scholarship available due to the academic woes of November signee J.R. Rider of Encinal High School in Alameda, Calif. Kruger said that, right now, it looks as if Rider will attend a junior college.

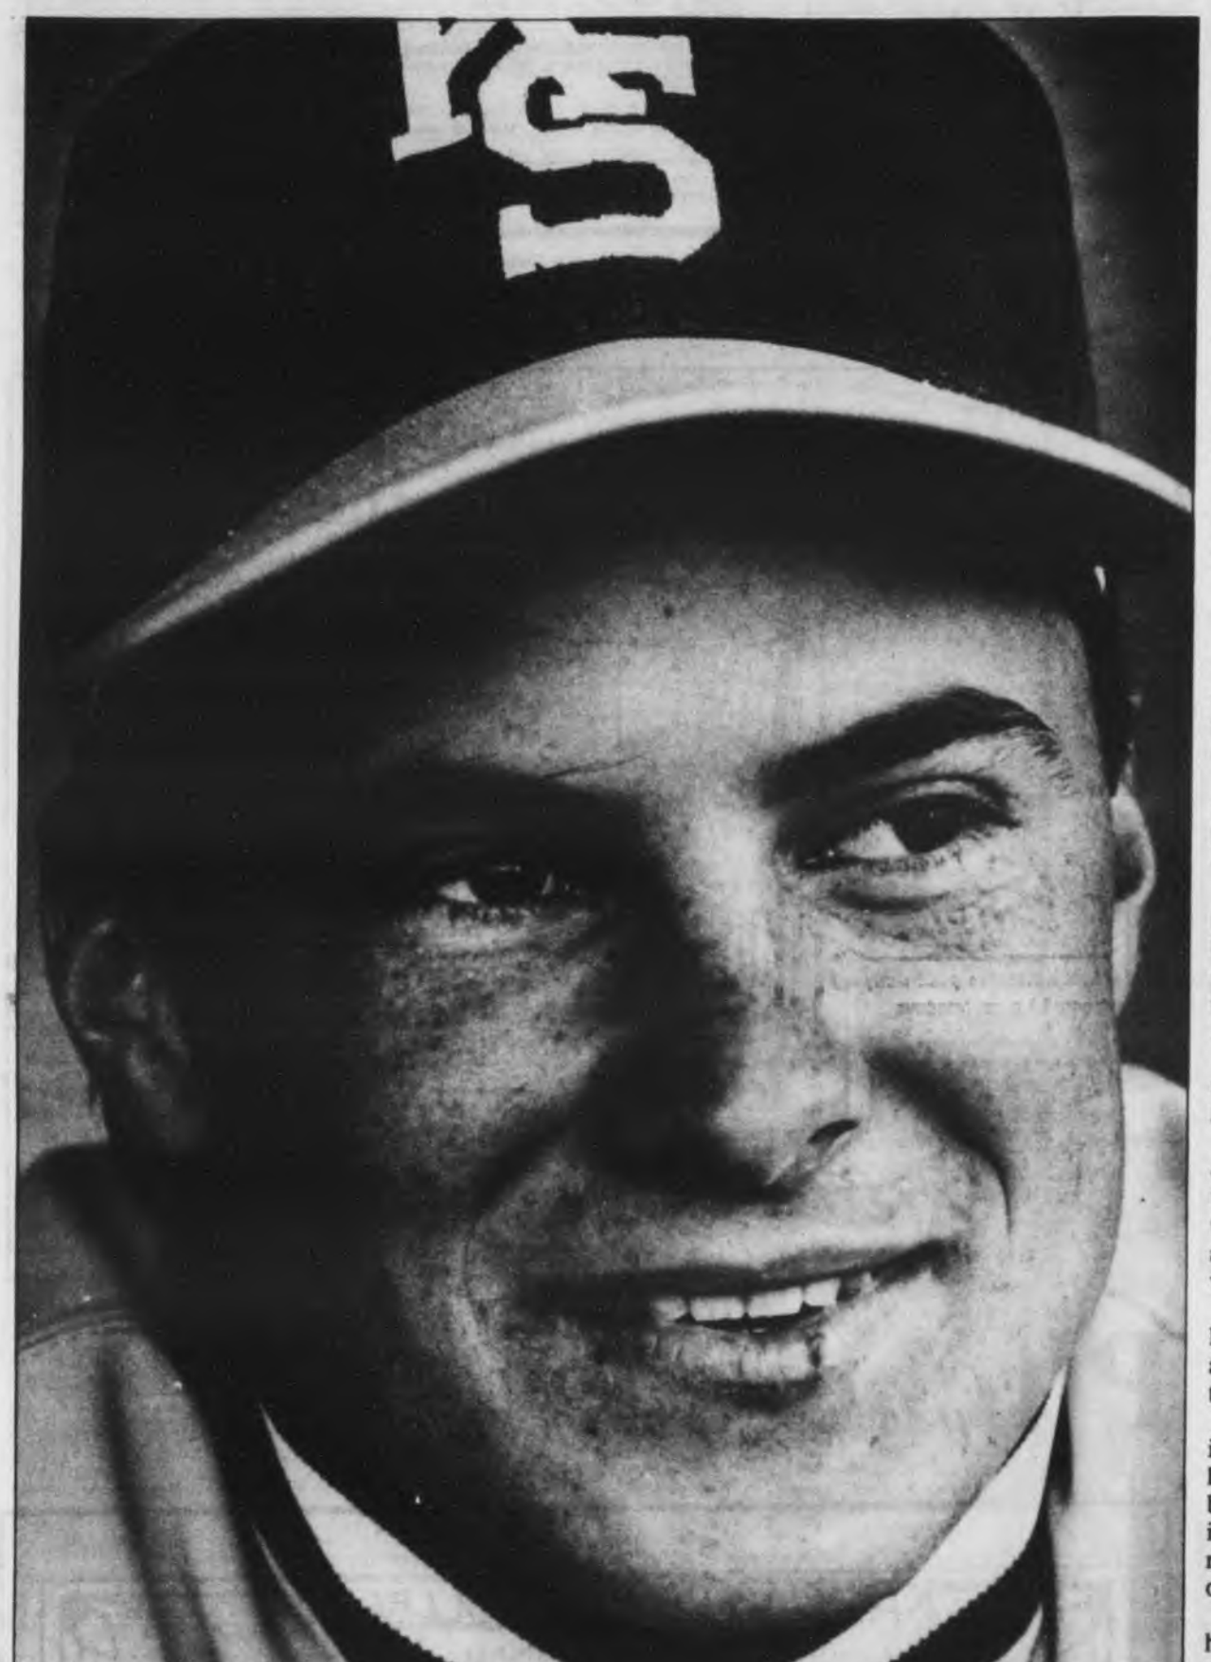
"He just has not done what he needed to do academically," Kruger said, "and, of course, that would free up another scholarship."

Thursday's signee, Wires averaged 16 points and four assists a game for Moberly and helped lead the Greyhounds to two consecutive national junior college tournament berths.

"Jeff's speed and quickness will be a plus," Kruger said. "He's able to play both the point and the off-guard positions. He is a very good athlete who can shoot the ball very well."

K-State was probably not considered by many to be in need of guards, but Kruger said the guard label behind the names of Amerson and Derouillere can be a bit misleading.

"The two are very capable of going inside," Kruger said. "We play three or four perimeter players a lot of the time anyway and this just gives us really good depth."



Kruger also said the availability of inside players played a role in his recruiting efforts.

"You always like to get big people," Kruger said, "but there aren't a lot available and a lot of them signed in November.

"We're happy with the kids we did get. We just wanted to get the best athlete that could shoot the ball well. That is always a goal of ours."

Missouri was the only other Big Eight school to announce a signing. The Tigers landed home-town prospect Todd Satalowich of Columbia's Rock Bridge High School. Satalowich, a 6-foot-8 center, averaged 19 points and 9.5 rebounds a game last season and was named second team Missouri Class 4A and the MVP of the North Central Conference.

Kansas signed point guard Adonis Jordan of Los Angeles last fall, and is courting Prat Community College's 6-foot-8 power forward Sean Jamison.

Staff/Greg Vogel

Wildcat pitcher David Hierholzer has become the ace of the K-State pitching staff this season. He is 4-1 and his 3.48 ERA is sixth in the Big Eight. The team is second in the league with an ERA of 4.80.

Hierholzer becomes staff ace

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

One of the main reasons the K-State pitching staff is second in the Big Eight Conference in ERA has been the pitching of junior David Hierholzer, who has turned into the club's ace.

"He's been doing a real good job," Coach Mike Clark said. "He's been our most consistent starter, no question."

Hierholzer is 4-1 on the season in seven appearances, six of which have been starts. He leads the club with three of the team's five complete games. In his one relief appearance, he recorded a save.

"My concern is that he is hitting the mitt," Clark said. "To throw strikes is my main concern. A complete game is just a plus. He's been doing a great job."

Hierholzer entered the week sixth in the Big Eight with a 3.48 ERA. He has registered two complete game wins over Top 20 teams this season.

He defeated San Jose State, 4-3 in the Pepsi Me-'N-Ed's Classic in Fresno, Calif., and was on the mound when K-State snapped a 12-game losing streak at Oklahoma with a 12-1 win.

Hierholzer said he gained a lot of confidence with his win over San Jose State.

"After San Jose State, I didn't question my ability because I beat them," he said. "That was partially the reason I came out the way I did against North Carolina (a 7-6 K-State win)."

Hierholzer was handed his only loss of the season last weekend against Kansas, 4-3, but recorded his third complete game.

He gave up a grand slam home run in the first inning to Dan Benninghoff, but allowed only two Jayhawk baserunners the rest of the way, retiring 18 of the last 20. At one point, he retired 17 of 18 batters, and allowed only four hits.

"I really wanted to beat KU," Hierholzer said. "The first inning I just wasn't into it.

"They got a couple of infield hits, and I threw a pitch I may not have been wanting to throw," he said. "After that I settled down. Overall I am happy with it."

Hierholzer believes the starters are throwing well right now, and receiving the needed help from the bullpen.

"We've been pretty consistent. We've thrown consistently well," he said. "The only times we have given up a lot of runs have been on bleeder hits. No one has really gotten shelled like last year."

Hierholzer feels he is in the kind of groove right now where he can get everyone out he faces.

"Just like a hitter (gets in a groove), a pitcher feels he is unhittable," he said. "The other team can get a guy on and you know he won't score. If you can get two strikes on a guy, he's out. I can throw him a pitch he doesn't want to hit."

Hierholzer likes K-State's chances against Missouri this weekend. He will pitch the first game of the doubleheader Saturday.

"We've beaten Missouri once already this year," he said. "I don't think they are as good as last year, but they will come after us. It's early in the season. We are both shooting for a playoff spot."

Hierholzer is encouraged with his progress in the season and hopes it will continue.

Wildcats to open series at Mizzou

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

K-State will try to break out of its slump in the Big Eight baseball season with a four-game weekend series beginning tonight against Missouri in Columbia, Mo.

K-State is 2-6 in the Big Eight after losing three of four on the road at Oklahoma, and three of four to Kansas at Frank Myers Field last weekend.

K-State and Missouri have met once this season in the Pepsi Me-'N-Ed's Classic in Fresno, Calif. The Wildcats broke a five-game losing streak against the Tigers, winning 6-5.

"They are a competitive ballclub," Coach Mike Clark said. "They have a rich baseball tradition.

"They have real good starters. That is probably the strong point of their team."

K-State is 22-9 on the season and has won three straight games, beating Emporia State Monday and sweeping a doubleheader from Tarkio (Mo.) College Wednesday.

Missouri is also 2-6 in the conference after losing three of four at ninth-ranked Oklahoma State last weekend. Mizzou picked up its only victory of the series when Mark Pothoff tossed a five-hitter at the Cowboys. The Tigers opened the Big Eight season by dropping three of four to Iowa State in Ames.

The 'Cats are hoping to return Bill Barnard to the outfield for the series. He missed most of the KU series with a bruised foot and the offense sputtered without Barnard and Sean Collins in the lineup.

In the Wildcats' 6-5 win over Missouri in Fresno, senior Jeff Peterson went 8⅔ innings, allowed five earned runs and picked up the win. Bill Schafer came in to get the final out, to notch his third save of the tourney, setting a tournament record.

K-State will send Jim Haller, 3-2, to the mound for the first game Friday at 7 p.m. David Hierholzer, 4-1, and Peterson, 4-2, will start the doubleheader Saturday beginning at 5 p.m. Jim McClellan, 2-3, will get the call in the final game of the series Sunday at 12:30 p.m.

K-State is back at home with a doubleheader Tuesday against Missouri Western. The first game is slated for 3 p.m.

Track squads travel to Nebraska invite

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State track coach John Capriotti will not be too worried about team scores Saturday when his squad competes at the Nebraska Invitational.

The meet will be the last of the "tune-up" meets, and Capriotti will just be looking for his athletes to improve upon what they have already done this season. K-State is preparing for what Capriotti calls the "big meets" coming up, which include the KU Relays, the Drake Relays and the Big Eight Conference meet.

"Scoring won't really be that much of a concern this weekend," Capriotti said. "We're not going to run people in a lot of races and we're not worried at all about the team scores. We're not going to kill our people."

Host Nebraska will be competing along with Missouri, Wyoming, Kansas and possibly Minnesota.

Standout sprinters Markeya Jones and Ray Hill will be running in their first open events of the outdoor season after suffering hamstring injuries at the end of the indoor schedule. Both will run the open 200 meters and also compete on their respective 4x100-meter relay teams.

"Both Ray and Markeya have trained really well," Capriotti said. "They're looking real good as far as health is concerned and they've worked real hard to rehabilitate their legs. I expect them to both have good races."

Javelin thrower Greta Semsroth is the only Wildcat that has qualified for the NCAA Outdoor meet. Her throw of 172-11 at the KSU Invitational not only qualified her for nationals, but also broke the K-State record.

"I think in the next few weeks, as soon as the weather permits, we'll have some qualifiers," Capriotti said. "When the weather gets better, a girl like Kim Kilpatrick should qualify right away."

Kilpatrick set two meet records at last weekend's Washington State triangular. She won the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.2 and then proceeded to win the 400-meter hurdles in 1:02.11 minutes. She also helped the women's 4x100-meter relay team to a victory with a time of 45.66.

Capriotti said that Brad Speer (high jump) and Dan O'Mara (shotput and discus) are getting close to qualifying in their respective events,

Crew squad at Topeka today

The K-State crew club will be in action today and Saturday at the President's regatta at Lake Shawnee in Topeka.

Today's heats start at 1:30 p.m. There will be 51 qualifying heats today and 48 final heats Saturday. Saturday's opening ceremonies will begin at 8 a.m. and the raced are slated for 9 a.m.

Last year, K-State's men's 2,000 meter and the women's 400 meter eights both won gold medals.

Bietau signs 2 tennis recruits

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau opened the spring signing period by gaining two Kansas recruits. Angie Gover, from Topeka West High School, and Suzanne Sim, of Shawnee Mission West High School, will be joining the squad next fall.

Gover is ranked ninth in the Missouri Valley and No. 153 among the nation's high school juniors and seniors.

Sims is ranked seventh in the Missouri Valley and No. 145 in the nation.

Ruggers at home against KC

Despite lingering bumps and bruises, the men's rugby team expects to be able to put up a fight Saturday against the Kansas City Blues.

"When it comes to fitness we'll be a little bit better than theirs," said Coach Dan Blea, scrum half. "The thing that's trouble for us is experience."

The A side will play at 1:30 p.m. and the B side at 3 p.m. The field for both games is on Highway 24-East just west of Dick Edwards Ford.

At 11:30 a.m., the women's rugby team will take on Pittsburgh State for their second match this year. Earlier this year, the newly formed womens team beat Pittsburgh' A side.

Netters to compete in final home match

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

This weekend marks the last home match for the Wildcat tennis team, as it takes on Colorado on Saturday at the L.P. Washburn tennis courts. K-State hopes to improve its record to 2-2 in the Big Eight.

The Buffs finished fourth in the Big Eight conference last year, and finished at 20-7 on the season. Colorado lost five letterwinners at the end of 1988, and return only three, all of which are seniors. The team is also just settling in under first-year coach Tom Ruse.

Even with all of the changes, Coach Steve Bietau is taking into consideration Colorado's reputation for being a consistently good team, and said the Buffaloes look strong again this season.

"They've always been an upper division team for as long as I've been coaching at K-State," he said. "We're expecting a tough match."

However, he said judging from the results of the 1989 season to this point, the Buffaloes may not be as powerful as conference rivals Kansas or Oklahoma.

As always, the netters are going into the weekend with a cautious attitude, with Bietau stressing the importance of giving each match an equal amount of respect.

At this point, positions on the Wildcat lineup are firmly set, as a player must win a minimum of four matches at a single position to be considered for a seed in the Big Eight tournament. Marijke Nel remains in the top spot at No. 1 singles, followed by Helen Schildknecht, Sara Hancock, Valerie Rive, Thresa Burcham, and team captain Annika Emtell. The doubles teams will stay with Schildknecht and Hancock at No. 1, Nel and Rive at No. 2, and Burcham and Emtell at No. 3.

The 'Cats are coming off possibly the biggest victory in their 12 year history, defeating Oklahoma, 5-4, Monday. Bietau said that even though it felt great to win, the task at hand is to get focused in on the next match. The team did get a break Tuesday with a day off.

Colorado's No. 1 doubles tandem of Rene Marshall and Karen Myers is ranked No. 26 in the nation.

After this weekend, the 'Cats only have two matches remaining before the Big Eight tournament in Oklahoma City, April 29-30. They go to Iowa State April 23 and finish conference play at Nebraska on April 24.

Architect: Renovations increasing

By Robert R. Short
Staff Writer

Despite a slowdown in construction since the late 1970s, career opportunities in architecture-related fields remain strong because of renovation and planning projects, said a professional architect.

"We are sensing a real softening of the market," said Cary Goodman, partner in Howard Needles Tammen & Bergendoff, a prominent architectural and engineering planning firm in Kansas City, Mo.

"This is a trend we are seeing nationwide," he said. "We are in a cooling-off cycle, but planning is strong."

Because of the high cost of new construction, many businesses are renovating existing structures or planning now for future projects, Goodman said.

"People will spend a lot of money in planning for when money comes available," he said.

Goodman visited Manhattan on Thursday to attend the dedication of the J.R. Macdonald Laboratory and visit other departments on campus.

Goodman's firm is working on a number of large projects, including a 30-story office structure near downtown Kansas City and an addition to the St. Francis Regional Medical Center in Wichita. Goodman said his company is involved in several different areas of engineering and architecture.

"Because of our diverse practice, we have a strong sense of what is going on in the marketplace," he said.

Kevin McDonald, a principal architect with Howard Needles, said many school districts are expanding to meet the needs of growing student populations. Educational needs have become "one of the biggest sources of income" for many architectural and planning firms.

Kansas City's school district has 34 architecture firms working with restructuring and planning expansion for the district.

"Many of our educational facilities have been left to deteriorate," McDonald said. "Many districts closed buildings in the early '70s" and are now ready to reuse those facilities.

Goodman said he encouraged architectural engineering students to look for a firm that will challenge them in their daily routine.

"We look for the best and the brightest," Goodman said. "We work very hard at hiring new kids every year."

Small firms do not always present the best career opportunities, he said. Larger firms offer the diversity necessary for employees to migrate to the field in which they do their best work.

Goodman said K-State's architectural engineering department is providing the profession with many well-prepared professionals.

"I have always been extremely impressed with the students coming out of K-State," Goodman said. "I never look at transcripts, I look at portfolios. The (students from K-State) are graphically competent and their design work is excellent.

"The school of architecture has a very intense program. I encourage students to look for a firm that will offer them a good, solid, professional program."

Authorities confirm bald eagle nesting

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State wildlife authorities confirmed this week the first recorded nesting of bald eagles in the state's history.

"We have had nesting in all the surrounding states, but we have had no known successes in the state's historical record," said Ronel Finley, state supervisor for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Manhattan.

Wildlife experts estimate that as many as 500 bald eagles spend their winters at Kansas reservoirs, where they eat fish and crippled waterfowl.

However, as spring approaches, they generally fly north to lakes in Minnesota and Canada to raise their young. The birds also nest in the Rocky Mountains and Alaska.

"There are so many little hidden things that people don't see. We practice until we can get those little things to stick."

Johnson said the cheerleaders and yell leaders will probably perform at nine football games, 15 basketball games and various 'Catbacker functions.

"Then we'll go to about another two or three dozen appearances like pep-rallies," he said.

The full squad, 14 members and Willie, perform at football games, but only six perform at away basketball games.

"Six is a traditional number, and it's sort of a gentleman's agreement with the other schools," Johnson said.

He said cheerleaders and yell leaders get credit for their efforts. Although no classes are required, many on the squad take a tumbling class to help with many of the "stunts."

"We get around $7,000 to $8,000 through the athletic department, and then in the past, we've usually raised another $7,000 to $8,000 on our own," Johnson said. "Next year our budget might be raised, so we won't have to raise as much on our own."

"We are, by no means, resting for this meet," Capriotti said. "We will train right through it and then we will start to cut back next week.

"This meet will be really competitive and we're looking for the weather to cooperate and getting the opportunity to get in some good competition."

Next week, the Wildcats will be at the KU Relays. The decathalon starts Wednesday while the running events begin Friday, with finals for most events Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

An allocation of $663.25 to fund part of a student leadership conference was approved.

Mad rush at match kills fans

By The Associated Press

SHEFFIELD, England — Lawmakers Sunday demanded changes in stadium designs, including a ban on anti-riot fences, after a mad rush at a soccer match trapped thousands of fans behind one of the steel barriers. At least 94 people died.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher visited Hillsborough stadium and promised a public inquiry into Saturday's disaster, which turned a soccer cup semifinal between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest into a nightmare.

The investigation was expected to focus on why so many fans were still outside as the match began and on allegations that many entered the sold-out stadium, which has a capacity of 54,000, without tickets or with forged tickets.

In Liverpool, the Roman Catholic cathedral was filled to overflowing for a requiem Mass for the victims — most of them from the northwest port city. The Anglican cathedral's bell tolled 94 times to mark the deaths.

Survivors broke down in tears as they described watching children die and people hit each other in the frenzied fight to survive Britain's worst sports disaster.

Steve Ellis, a photographer, said he could hear and see children screaming as they were pressed into the fence.

"More were coming in from the back, pushing forward. ... I can still see the young lads behind the fence shouting, 'Save me!' I'll never forget it until the day I die," he said.

Seventeen-year-old Wayne Adams said he was about five rows from the front of the crowd. "I realized it was serious when I saw one of the lasses standing near me just turn blue in the face. She went down. She was dead. That was it," he said.

Police defended the decision to open 16-foot-wide steel gates outside the stadium just as the match between the Liverpool and Nottingham Forest teams began. Last-minute arrivals then poured into a central standing-room-only section, pressing those already inside against the steel mesh fence.

The sturdy 10-foot-high fence, angled in at the top to stop people from scaling it, prevented them from escaping over the top to the field. Some were crushed to death. Others suffocated or were trampled trying to fight

"Let me win, but if I cannot, let me be brave in the attempt." — the Special Olympics Creed

The words of the Special Olympics Creed recited by every athlete set the stage for this year's Area 3 Kansas Special Olympics Spring Meet held at K-State Saturday.

"The inspiration of these Special Olympic athletes in giving their all to compete is the reason why a majority of the volunteers and onlookers are out here," said Brian Smith, coordinator of volunteers from Farm Bureau Insurance Cos.

Smith and about 100 other volunteers — including members from six different sororities and fraternities, local busineses and the K-State football team — participated in the 5th annual Area 3 Meet.

"Volunteers are the only way we are able to do these meets," said Deb Engstrom, meet and Area 3 director. "They help run the events, get athletes to and from activities, and give hugs and smiles to competitors giving their best effort.

"This year we have the largest number of athletes in the meet's history," she said. "Last year we had about 149, this year 187."

Athletes from seven teams competed in track and field, aquatics and weightlifting, Engstrom said.

"This is our first year for weightlifting," she said.

The athletes come from teams throughout northeast Kansas, she said. Area 3 is one of 12 areas in the state, and encompasses all of northeast Kansas except Kansas City, Kan., Lawrence and Topeka.

"The meet is a qualifier for athletes planning to compete at the State Special Olympics in Wichita this June," she said. "This year's meet included area teams from Manhattan, Junction City and Wamego, and teams from Atchison, Holton, and Leavenworth County."

This year's meet was not only the first for weightlifting, but it was also the first year for a number of the volunteers.

"This is our first year as an organized group," said Smith, president of the Triangle Club — a social organization at Farm Bureau Insurance in Manhattan.

"It is going to be an annual event for us," he said. "It's a lot of fun."

Joe´ Albright, sophomore in leisure studies, said this was her first year participating.

"I presently work with the special populations groups for Manhattan Parks and Recreation and decided to come out and help," she said.

"It's fun to be around Special Olympians," Albright said. "They're a blast. They are so cheerful and happy about the opportunity to compete."

Seeing the athletes compete brought tears to her eyes, Albright said.

"We often think we have problems, but seeing these people come out here and compete — dealing with their physical and mental handicaps, makes me feel that my problems and difficulties are small," she said.

Athletes competing in this year's meet ranged in age from eight to over 60. The oldest athlete, age 63, was Junior Steere from Junction City.

"I train by going out for a walk every morning," said Steere, who competed in the softball throw and 50 meter dash. "I'm real proud of my finishes. I'd like to frame the ribbons I won."

Steere won a first in the 50-meter dash with a time of 12.8 seconds and a fourth place in the softball throw.

Fighting rages in Lebanon

Spain's ambassador, 17 others killed

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Spain's ambassador to Lebanon and at least 17 other people were killed Sunday in fierce artillery exchanges between Christians and an alliance of Syrian and Moslem gunners, police said.

Ambassador Pedro Manuel de Aristegui, 61, died while undergoing surgery to remove shrapnel fragments that hit his head when an artillery shell blasted his villa in the Christian suburb of Hadath east of Beirut, police reported.

Police said his Lebanese father-in-law, poet Tewfic Youssef Awwad; and one of Awwad's daughters, Samia, and a Lebanese bodyguard were killed when the shell exploded.

The envoy's Lebanese wife, Jomana Awwad, was seriously wounded and his 2-year-old son Diego suffered unspecified injuries, police reported. Earlier reports said Jomana Awwad was killed.

De Aristegui had served in Lebanon since June 1984. He was kidnapped and briefly held shortly after he took up his Beirut assignment and told an interviewer recently: "If you're afraid of death you should leave this country."

In Madrid, Spanish Foreign Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez said Spain would not close its Beirut embassy. He said Spain has "an international role of the first order" in Lebanon.

Police said at least 17 people died in the ferocious 18-hour blitz that raged from dusk Saturday to mid-afternoon Sunday. They said at least 90 people were wounded.

That raised the casualty toll from 40 days of fighting to at least 234 killed and 847 wounded.

A police spokesman, who cannot be named under standing regulations, said the artillery and rocket duels were among the most intense in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war.

He said that at one point shells were "falling like rain" around the hilltop presidential palace in the Christian suburb of Baabda, where Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun lives, and the nearby Defense Ministry in Yarze, his headquarters.

Shells also exploded around the homes of the U.S., French and Egyptian ambassadors in Christian east Beirut. No casualties were reported.

Police said state-run Radio Beirut in west Beirut's Hamra district went off the air when Christian 155mm shells destroyed its transmission aerial.

The shellfire also started fires in the nine-floor Information Ministry where the radio station is located.

The ministry is next to the office of acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss, head of the Moslem Cabinet vying for power with a Christian military government led by Aoun.

Other Christian shells crashed close to the offices of The Associated Press and United Press International news agencies, as well as the French news agency Agence France Presse and the London-based Reuters agency in west Beirut.

The office of Italy's ANSA agency in the Moslem sector was damaged by shrapnel. None of the staffers at the five wire services were injured.

The shelling reached a crescendo at midafternoon, following an abortive call for a cease-fire at noon.

Several Christian howitzer salvos exploded around Hoss' house in the Aishe Bakkar district and near the state-run Channel-7 television station in the Moslem sector. Police said Hoss was not hurt.

The fighting has raged since March 8 between Aoun's forces, estimated at 20,000 mostly Christian troops, and an alliance of Syrian troops and militiamen of the Druse Progressive Socialist Party.

It erupted after Aoun blockaded militia-run harbors along Lebanon's

IRS: Many delay filing until midnight deadline

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seventy-five years after the nation was introduced to Form 1040, Americans are closing another return-filing season with several million taxpayers apparently putting off the chore until the Monday midnight deadline.

The Internal Revenue Service promised that its walk-in offices would remain open on the final day until every taxpayer with a question was served. The Postal Service went out of its way to receive returns and make sure they were postmarked before midnight.

Taxpayers were given an extra two days to file because the April 15 deadline fell on Saturday. Residents of New England and most of New York state have until Tuesday midnight because Monday is a legal holiday, Patriot's Day, in Massachusetts, site of the IRS service center that receives returns from those states.

Neither the IRS nor the Postal Service had a firm estimate on how many people delayed filing until the last day. The IRS said only that it expects to receive about 18 million returns this week, which would include those filed over the weekend. About 14 million reached the IRS last week.

The tax agency projects more than 109 million returns will be filed this year — but not all those will meet the deadline:

■ Around 6 million couples and individuals will take four-month extensions, to Aug. 15, by filing Form 4868 along with a check for the taxes they estimate they owe. The extension is only for filing — not for paying.

■ A sizable number of the 650,000 Americans living and working abroad qualify for automatic two-month extensions without filing any special form or paying estimated taxes.

■ Some taxpayers don't operate on a calendar year and, thus, have different filing deadlines.

■ And some will simply miss the filing deadline, despite the fact that such tardiness can bring a penalty for not filing on time — even if there is no tax due — and additional and more severe penalties for not filing and paying on time if there is tax due.

"Of the 109 million-plus returns anticipated this year, we expect about 100 million will file during the regular season," said IRS spokesman Frank Keith.

When the first individual returns were filed in 1914, they numbered only 358,000, identifying as taxpayers or dependents considerably less than 1 percent of the population. The returns covered taxes totaling $28 million, a figure so insignificant by modern federal standards that it would show up as an asterisk in budget documents.

The returns being filed this year represent more than 90 percent of the population and will reflect taxes of about $425 billion.

The 1988 returns are the first filed under the three-tax-rate structure that was enacted as the keystone of the 1986 tax overhaul. Those three rates — 15 percent for all the taxable income of the majority of taxpayers, 28 percent for most others, and 33 percent for a relatively few — represent one of the few significant tax-law changes from last filing season.

Nevertheless, an IRS sampling

Few support prime minister

TOKYO — Results of a nationwide public opinion poll indicate support for Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita has fallen to less than 4 percent, a report said Sunday.

Only 3.9 percent of 1,000 people polled by the Kyodo News Service on April 13 and 14 said they support the prime minister, while 87.6 said they do not, Kyodo reported. The remaining voters polled had no opinion.

Of those who said they did not support Takeshita, 40.3 percent cited inability to trust him as their reason. Just over 23 percent said their lack of support followed a widening political scandal, while 11.9 percent expressed dissatisfaction with a controversial new sales tax backed by the Takeshita administration.

In the scandal, about 160 politicians, businessmen and bureaucrats were offered bargain-priced unlisted shares in the real estate subsidiary of Recruit Co., an information-publishing giant, and then reaped handsome profits by selling the shares after it went public in October 1986.

Earthquake rocks China

BEIJING — A powerful earthquake destroyed 30 homes in a remote village in southwest China early Sunday, and an official report said at least four people were killed and five injured.

The exact number of casualties was not known because communication with some towns in the area was broken, the state-run Xinhua News Agency said.

The quake, which measured 6.7 on the Richter scale, struck at 5:34 a.m. near the town of Batang, which is close to Sichuan province's western border with Tibet, the State Seismological Bureau said.

Over the next seven hours, more than 1,000 aftershocks were recorded, five measuring above 4 on the scale, Xinhua quoted provincial scientists as saying.

The affected region of Sichuan is a densely populated rural mountain region.

More cult victims found

MATAMOROS, Mexico — Authorities discovered two more bodies Sunday buried on a collective farm two miles south of a ranch where 13 victims of a cult of human sacrifice were found last week.

Investigators said it was possible the victims found on the collective farm were killed by the same cult suspected of performing human sacrifices on the 13 discovered at Rancho Santa Elena, about 20 miles west of Matamoros.

Acting on a tip from some children, a 77-year-old man led police Sunday to the common grave in a clearing in an orchard on the farm, Ejido Santa Librada, federal police group chief Martin Elias Salazar told reporters.

The children had told the man, Hidalgo Castillo, that they had seen some people burying a body in an orchard last October, Salazar said. Castillo's son, Moises, 52, had disappeared last May. Salazar said Castillo had discounted the children's tale until the 13 bodies were dug up.

The stacked bodies of the two men appeared to be those of adults, investigators said. Neither had been positively identified as of Sunday night.

Officials disinterred the second body just before sunset Sunday. Salazar searched through the pockets of a pair of black pants found on the second body and discovered 3,000 Mexican pesos and a $5 bill.

Asked if the bodies found Sunday appeared to be related to the ones found on Rancho Santa Elena on Tuesday, Salazar said it was possible but too early to know for sure.

Woman awarded $9.5 million

CHICAGO — A jury awarded $9.5 million to a woman who was left severely brain damaged after undergoing an abortion at Illinois Masonic Medical Center.

Shelby Moran, 50, who now lives in a suburban nursing home, underwent the abortion in January 1978.

The mother of five and former manager of the Oak Lawn Elks Club suffered brain damage as a result of a reaction to a drug used in the abortion, the Cook County jury decided Friday. The drug caused her heart to stop, which cut off oxygen to her brain, her attorney said.

The court assessed the damages among the hospital; Dr. John J. Barton, chief of obstetrics and gynecology; and Upjohn Co., maker of the drug.

She was given the drug while about four months pregnant after an unsuccessful tubal ligation.

Concert provokes hysteria

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — What seemed to be a mysterious illness that affected student musicians and triggered the evacuation of 2,500 people from a concert hall was a case of mass hysteria, authorities said.

Eighteen youngsters fainted or developed nausea, dizziness or headaches Thursday during a performance of the 40th annual "Stairway to the Stars" student concert, produced by the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District.

But Fire Chief William Pajaras said Friday that blood tests revealed no cause of the illnesses and no toxic fumes or other factor could be found at the civic auditorium.

"It's tough to make it look like you're not ridiculing the kids, but the mind can really play tricks," Pajaras said.

District Supervisor Eugene Tucker suggested the youngsters were "reacting to heat and stress and general anxiety from earlier in the day when one or two youngsters fainted."

Benton's work featured

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Thomas Hart Benton was remembered throughout Kansas City Sunday, where several events commemorated the artist's 100th birthday.

Officials at the Nelson Gallery opened a huge retrospective of Benton's work, and fans cut cake and drank toasts to the artist on the gallery's lawn. There was a more spirited celebration at a bar in Westport, and an exhibit of Benton family portraits opened in the Crown Center Shops.

The activities remembered an artist whose grass-roots popularity may still outstrip his critical acceptance.

Henry Adams, the curator of the Nelson retrospective, said those who continue to lambaste Benton "are just hanging themselves."

"Benton is still speaking to a large crowd," Adams said.

An estimated 4,000 to 5,000 people toured the exhibit at the Nelson, where almost 90 paintings spread across five galleries.

They saw paintings dating from Benton's days of experimentation with modern abstract techniques, two complete mural cycles and several works in the style that established Benton's reputation. Balloons, music and birthday cake under a tent on the lawn of the Nelson added a festive touch to the day.

Adams, also the author of a new interpretive biography of Benton, said the exhibit addressed the question of "whether art is for the elite, or whether you can have a serious art that speaks to the people as a whole."

Lesson No. 2
How to ruin a new suit:
Don't buy a new shirt and tie to go with it.
So you spend hundreds of dollars on a really handsome suit. Nice fabric. A color that makes your eyes sparkle. It fits your body perfectly.
But you hate to spend additional money on a new shirt and tie to go with that suit.
You say, "I'll just wear that white oxford cloth button-down-collar shirt I wore for high school graduation, even though the collar is a little frayed and it has a ballpoint pen mark on the pocket."
Do yourself a favor. Go all the way, just this once. Buy a shirt and tie to go with that new suit. You deserve it.

Derby Days raise $300,000 for charity

Kappa Kappa Gamma members Lisa Stang, freshman in apparel and textile marketing, and Heather Downs, sophomore in elementary eduction, remove the clothes of Sigma Chi member Kevin Fox.

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

More than 200 women cheering for others whose heads were buried in pans of whip cream while searching for eggs provided an example of a typical event in the final day of the Sigma Chi Derby Days on Saturday.

Sigma Chi Fraternity raised more than $3,000 during the annual week-long Derby Days competition, said Rob Harsh, sophomore in industrial engineering and co-chairman of Derby Days.

Proceeds of Derby Days go to the Cleo Wallace Center for Children in Broomfield, Colo. The center is one of the few centers created solely for the treatment and rehabilitation of children with minimal brain damage, Harsh said.

"We had a good time and were very successful," he said.

The Gamma Phi Beta sorority finished first, Chi Omega second, and Pi Beta Phi third. Points were collected by eleven sororities participating in a volleyball tournament, dance contest, a T-shirt sign-in, and seven events on Saturday: Donut Dash, Beer Bat, Strip-A-Sig, the Egg and I, Egg Smash, and Dec-a-Sig.

Alpha Chi Omega member Krista Saltzman picks up the last innertube in the doughnut dash.

Angie Dunshee, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management and a Gamma Phi participant, said Derby Days brought her house closer together.

"I was thrilled that we got first," Dunshee said. "All the games were so close. When they announced our house (had won) we knew we had met our goal. It was a great feeling."

The Donut Dash consisted of a relay with 4-women teams, with each team member running down the lanes and picking up and placing an innertube around her waist until all team members had run.

During Beer Bat, teammates ran down the lane, placed their foreheads on the end of a bat and spun around four times, and returned to the starting line.

Strip-A-Sig and Dec-A-Sig consisted of participants racing to undress and dress their designated Sigma Chis.

Before the Egg Smash began, coaches had eggs placed on their foreheads. Their partners, armed with only newspapers, sat atop their coaches' shoulders and guarded the eggs from other competitors.

"It was a blast to experience the unity of a team and know the money goes to a common cause," said Lisa Rock, junior in journalism and mass communications and Chi O member.

Graduate professors win awards

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

Recipients of this year's Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Awards are Margo Kren, associate professor of art, and Gerald Reeck, professor of biochemistry.

The awards, which have been presented for over 30 years, recognize distinctive graduate faculty members at K-State, said Robert Kruh, dean of the graduate school.

A bound citation presented at commencement by President Jon Wefald and $1,500 are included with the awards, Kruh said.

Wefald decided the recipients needed more exposure on campus, Kruh said, and as a result the recipients present lectures of work they have done followed by a reception. One lecture is in the spring, the other in the fall.

"I'm delighted, thrilled and very honored by the award," Reeck said.

He was especially pleased by the award because this is the first time someone in his department has received the award.

"I think it is a reflection of the great job the head of the department has done," Reeck said. "It is a terrific statement of what he has allowed the individual research faculty to do."

He said the award is an honor to the entire laboratory.

Reeck said one of the most important aspects of his career is the training of students, which makes receiving the award this year so important.

"This year the committee specifically sought out the opinion of former students. I was especially thrilled to get it when comments of former graduate students were sought out," Reeck said.

Reeck joined the faculty at K-State in 1974. He received his bachelor of science from Santa Pacific College (Seattle) in 1967 and his doctorate from the University of Washington in 1971.

Reeck also served as a post doctoral research associate at the National Institutes of Health. While at K-State, Reeck received a research career development award from 1978 to 1983.

Kren is a painter and has done both abstract and realistic work, in addition to oils, acrylic and lithographs.

Receiving awards and recognition is something Kren is becoming accustomed to. Among others, she has received the Governor's Art Award and an award from the National Endowment for the Arts.

She has been the president of the Kansas City Artist's Coalition, and is listed in Who's Who in American Art. She also attended Yaddo, a prestigious artists colony.

Kren received her bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin in 1966. She began teaching at K-State in 1971. Kren received her

'Ville raises its head again after near death

I remember the night Aggieville died. It didn't occur to me until late that evening that it was the end, but thinking back, it seems obvious now.

It was late fall, 1986, and the Wildcats had just won the last football game they would win for a very long time. Students, soldiers and other joy seekers, immersed in the spirit of victory as well as in spirits, were running through the streets like pagans in heat.

Random beer bottles and cans arched through the air, catapulted by riot-loving cranks. Assuming the missiles flew shy of the windows they were drunkenly intended for, they either hit the ground or kissed fellow celebrators on their temples.

Then suddenly, as if by the hand of an overlord with a sick sense of humor, the crowd saw the car. En masse, they surged toward the small, gold Volkswagen bug. The brutes rocked the piece of fine Nazi engineering back and forth and back and forth, building to an orgasmic flip. Then the fire.

I watched it all from behind the then-Mannequin's plate glass window. Though I was underage, I had taken advantage of the pandemonium to slip into the drinking establishment.

Sipping my Seven and Seven, I sensed the oddness of it all. Only a pane of glass stood between me and those liquored-up natives. That was enough.

They went on with their Aggiefied saturnalia, occasionally threatening to break the glass and force those of us in the drinking gallery to join in the ceremony. But they didn't. And to escape the sacrifice in the streets, one needed only join us on the other side of the window.

Commentary

Chad L. Sanborn
Collegian Columnist

Can you believe I was actually going to waste your time with that crap? I remember when I was a freshman, listening to upperclass geeks talk about how Aggieville "just isn't as good as it used to be."

Despite the fact they spent four of seven nights a week there, the only compliment they could muster was, "Aggieville is dead."

A few days ago I was strolling into the 'Ville. I was standing in front of what used to be a fun place to throw up, Dark Horse, and facing the soon-to-be-nonexistant Woody's Men's Shop.

"Aggieville's dead," I mumbled, not realizing the pact with myself I had just broken.

"Wait one damn minute," I said to no one but myself. "You're just giving up."

Indeed I was wrong. OK, so maybe the mall has hurt the businesses in the 'Ville, but that doesn't concern most of us. We can always motivate out to the mall or to Wal-Mart to pick up what we need and watch welfare mothers beat their kids.

But the 'Ville is alive and well when you look at the situation, while keeping in mind what it is all about. That is to say, a place to meet people and get stinking drunk.

Probably the biggest damage to the 'Ville came in 1985 when the change in the drinking age took effect. Until then, part of the fun had been watching the freshmen — newly freed of the chains of parental tyranny — react to so much alcohol in one place. Fights, vomit and quarters games are a wonderful recipe for fun.

But things seem to have slowed down. But maybe it's me who's slowed down.

For instance, I'll bet you two 40-pound bags of Hill's Science Diet dog food that you can't find another place where bars serve 50 cent kamikazes or even 25 cent well drinks. Hell, a lousy Black Label beer will cost you $5 in the Big Apple.

More importantly, the true measure of the 'Ville is not "Can you drink?" (Because you can drink anytime, even after 7 p.m. on election day.) but rather "What is there to do?"

Plenty, babe, and most of it takes place in one building.

Some people know it as Charlie's Partydome, while others still call it Mannequin's. Some people who have been around here too long call it The Avalon. No matter your nomenclature, the place has turned into a potpourri of entertainment. (I'm trying to write this column without using the already overused term "eclectic." You're welcome.)

Its last incarnation was Mannequin's, an alternative little bar where there was a definite scene. So maybe the owners used to collect all the twenties for cocaine and refuse to pay the bills, it was still a great place. It was kind of cold and the bartenders couldn't make change for anything over $10, but the place was a blast.

That is, until two of the three owners took all the money and skipped town on the night of the second riot. The night the car flipped and burned. The night I thought the 'Ville died.

Now students have taken it upon themselves to fulfill our need for action.

Every so often alternative bands give night-long samples of what's going on in music just outside the range of the droll Q104. But you say you don't like to mess with black clothes and Manhattan High punks slam-dancing? (if they can catch up with each other.) No problem.

Check out the hip-hop nights. They got this guy named Phil who knows his way around a turntable and the place is not well lighted so most people don't laugh at the white people who try to dance, because they can't see them.

And of course the fine members of our fine greek community occasionally have their really fun parties there.

Therefore I was wrong, the 'Ville is not dead, thanks to the many greedy but fun-loving students with the brains and testicular fortitude to throw around a little venture capital.

And most of the fun takes place in the building where I thought I saw Aggieville raise its ugly head for the last time. Mercifully, it was not so.

New fee payment plan more beneficial for all

The long lines and hours of frustration at fee payment and registration will hopefully be prevented, provided the registrar's new plan is adhered to by the portion of the student body that owes the University money.

The registrar's office has acted in response to the registration fiasco in January, when students were surprised to find that before they could enroll for the spring semester, any delinquencies owed to the University had to be paid.

The surprise led to some angry and frustrated students spending up to two and three hours standing in lines to pay off delinquencies and fees.

The registrar's office is now requiring students to pay all debts owed to the University before they can even pre-enroll. This measure is intended to prevent the registration ruckus from happening again as well as to make payment of fees a more "enjoyable experience."

The reaction and responsiveness of the registrar's office indicates that maybe the ears in Anderson Hall are not always closed to student protests.

Many students complained, not only to the registrar, but also in letters to the editor of the Collegian and to registration officials at the time.

The registrar's measure could have other positive impacts in addition to easing the process of registration. Perhaps students will realize more financial responsibility and take care of their campus indebtedness sooner. Then maybe financially disabled campus services like Lafene Student Health Center and Farrell Library will generate more money and decrease their accounts receivable.

After what students had to go through in registration last semester, the idea of paying the bills sooner should sound more appealing than a two-hour wait in line at registration next fall.

Senate democratic

Editor,

My perception of the Student Senate debate on the question of South African divestment differs from that of Collegian Columnist Scott Miller.

To be fair, it must be noted that no Student Senator expressed support for the apartheid system of government. In fact, both sides made it very clear that they were opposed to it. The argument was over whether or not divestment would accelerate the breakdown of apartheid. The majority finally decided that it would and voted to divest.

Also to be fair, many of the senators expressed themselves clearly, occasionally with great vigor, and some were simply eloquent. There were moments when the collective body was moved to stunned silence at the passionate expression of a point of view.

Democracy in action can be a scary thing. Winston Churchill once said that democracy was a terrible form of government, but nobody had thought of anything better.

It certainly isn't a very efficient form of government. Any one of the senators could have decided the issue in about nine minutes rather than in the nine hours that it took. But, in a democracy, our elected representatives share in decisions.

Everyone in Student Senate had an opportunity to be heard, and to express their point of view. Maybe some even learned to appreciate another point of view. Ultimately Senate voted to divest, 27-14, with 4 abstentions.

Did extremists monopolize Student Senate as Miller claims in his headline? I don't think so. Both sides received equal time; both sides debated vigorously; both sides seemed (for the most part) gracious over the results. At 3 a.m. I was ready for it to be over, but at the same time, pleased to be a part of the process.

Theory invalid

Editor,

Scott Miller, in his April 7 editorial "Academic freedom battle still being fought," makes an excellent observation concerning the religious doctrine of creationism. The attempts by the Christian community in this country to incorporate the teaching of the Old Testament into the science curriculum of public schools is a very serious threat to the quality of public education, and should not be taken lightly. The teaching of such garbage as scientific theory is not outrageous, as Miller put it, it is criminal.

Sadly, creationist thought finds acceptance because people with little or no elementary scientific training and who are not acquainted with the essential nature of science make up a large part of the general public.

In July 1988, a telephone survey for the National Science Foundation was conducted by Jon Miller, director of the Public Opinion Laboratory, at North Illinois University.

He observed that when 2,041 adults, 18 years or older, were asked 75 questions on basic science, approximately 95 percent were, in Jon Miller's words, "scientifically illiterate."

It is natural, of course, to be attracted by the mysterious and the sensational. Thus it is not surprising that religious doctrine in general attracts people who prefer emotional stimulation to analytical thought. Religious teaching of any kind stifles the development of critical thinking patterns in the developing mind and seriously compromises the use of reason.

In general, religion can be considered a psychological crutch that replaces self-discipline, responsibility for one's actions, and rational doubt. To put it bluntly, a religious person must check in his or her head at the door before entering a house of worship.

Religious "morality" is even more insidious. Reason is the faculty that enables people to identify and integrate the facts of reality. Rationality is the commitment to reason, to the sustained use of one's mind. A rational person's foremost concern is the truth. The virtue of rationality thus entails intellectual independence and the willingness to assume responsibility for one's beliefs and actions.

On the other hand, the primary virtue of religious morality is obedience. This is the meaning of faith. Faith means acting without critical deliberation, acting without regard for the natural consequences of one's actions, and acting because it is demanded of one by an authority (i.e., Jesus Christ, Mohammed, or the Ayatollah Khomenei).

When the evidence for creationism has been subjected to the tests of the scientific method, it has been found invalid. Most religious authorities fall back on the claim that their so-called sacred books are inspired.

The insightful words of the atheist freethinker, Robert Ingersoll, are quite fitting at this point: "Now they say this book (the Bible) is inspired. I do not care whether it is or not; the question is, 'is it true?' If it is true, it does not need to be inspired. Nothing needs inspiration except a falsehood or a mistake."

Other Perspectives

Just when you thought you'd heard it all, the state of Oklahoma came up with a surprising winner.

Oklahoma has mandatory student-teacher ratios of 21-1 in grades one through three and 25-1 in grades four through six. If school districts fail to meet the ratios, they are fined.

It was reported Thursday that the Norman school district will be fined $47,470 for non-compliance, with the total across the state at $2.5 million. The money will be withheld from the budgets of districts not in compliance with the guidelines and distributed to the districts that are in compliance. That is brilliance.

The districts that obviously need more money to comply with guidelines will be fined — the districts that have money to hire enough teachers and expand their buildings to house the students will be rewarded. Robbing from the poor to give to rich is a philosophy that needs to be carefully reconsidered by the Legislature.

Group works to raise awareness

Commentary

Mike Krueger
Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Mike Krueger is a senior in speech.

The International Conference on the Environmental Future concluded in 1980 that "There is now a high probability, almost a certainty, if the world continues as at present that within 50 years there will occur, exceeding past ecodisasters, the greatest catastrophe in the history of the world."

This might be a worldwide famine or war, which could destroy civilization and nature. Or it might be a combination of effects caused by unwise actions. But there is also the possibility that such a catastrophe can be averted if the right decisions about the environmental future are made.

Clearly decisions made now and during the next 30 years will determine the future of mankind and the world.

You might be saying to yourself right now, "So? I'm not destroying the ecostructure and I can't do anything about it. Schmucks at places like Exxon hire drunks to pilot ships and wreck the ecological system. I don't do it and I cannot stop it."

How wrong you are. If you eat at McDonalds's, use Styrofoam cups from the Union or elsewhere, throw away glass, aluminum or paper instead of recycling, eat beef or any number of other things, or litter, you are contributing to the degradation of the environment.

There is a new group on campus, as yet without a name, that is a spin-off of Jeremy Rifkin who came to this University for a convocation lecture. It is a group designed to enhance environmental awareness, provide education and promote action to help save the environment. It has several objectives.

The first of these objectives is to try and get people to recycle goods. A prototype recycling program has been set up in Nichols Hall and elsewhere to save on the amount of trash put out by each person on campus.

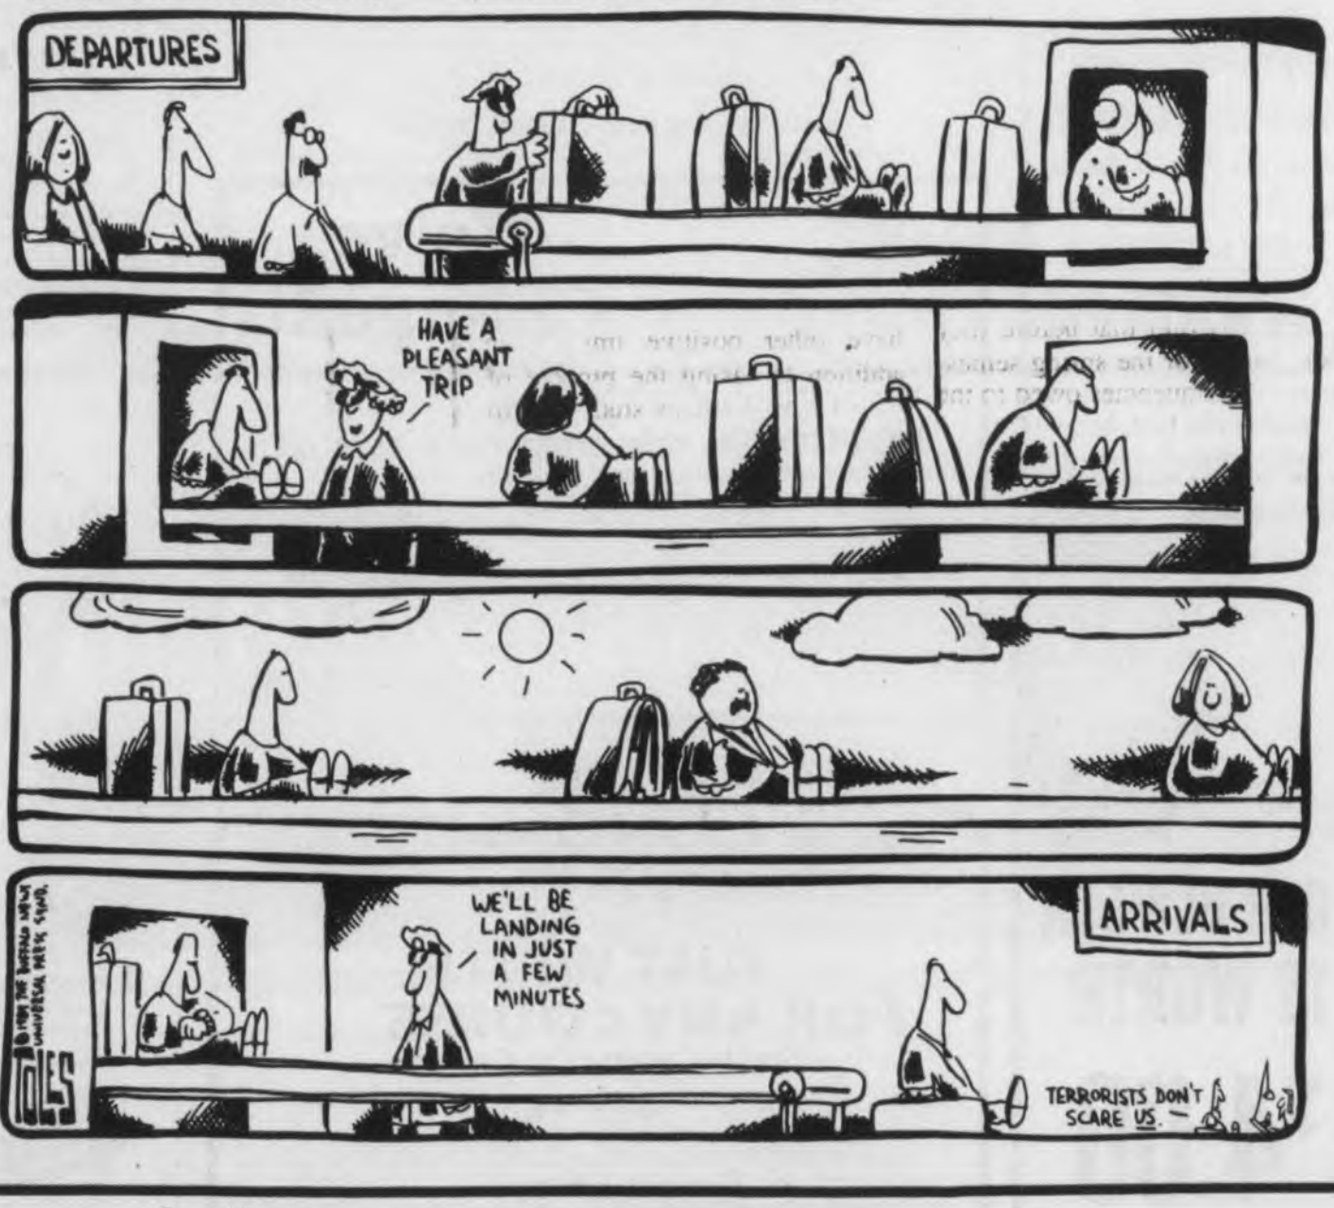
The Riley County landfill is about full. We need to become more aware of these things and alleviate the problem instead of dumping garbage elsewhere.

A second objective of the group is to try to get the Union to use as little Styrofoam as possible. There are two problems with Styrofoam. The first is that it is non-biodegradable, thus taking up room in the landfill, and secondly, it creates chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) when produced which help destroy the ozone layer of the earth's atmosphere.

Another goal is to change the mindset of people toward using biodegradable materials whenever possible. One example is using paper sacks at the supermarket instead of plastic.

The third objective of the group is to encourage students and others to contact representatives and senators about our feelings on environmental issues. Hold George Bush to the claim that he wants to be the "Environmental President."

The fourth objective of this group is to promote tree planting. This aids the ecosystem in several ways, including providing a resource to recycle air, providing windbreaks to reduce the loss of top soil, and creating a general brake against erosion.



The last objective we have is a short-term one. There is a protest in Wichita on Saturday, April 22. The protest will be at the Racon Chemical Company at 11 a.m. Racon is one of the five largest producers of CFCs — compounds which contribute to the greenhouse effect. Next door, Vulcan Chemicals makes the chemicals used in manufacturing CFCs for all five producers. The organization is promoting an effort to get as many people there as possible.

The group meets on Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. Look for an advertisement in the Collegian concerning where. We want as many people as possible to help us in spreading the word about the environment.

The ecological system, of which we have only one, maintains the quality of the atmosphere, disposes of our wastes, recycles essential nutrients, controls the vast majority of pest and disease vectors, supplies us with food, penetrates soil and runs the hydrological cycle, among other vital services.

As Rifkin has stated, "The only hope for the survival of the species is for the human race to abandon its aggression against the planet and seek to accommodate the natural order."

If we as a group can help to start changing the mindset of people at K-State, then we will have achieved some success. We cannot solve all of the ecological problems, but we can certainly try to avoid contributing to them. We only have one earth, let's keep it livable.

T-shirt not insult

Editor,

Au contraire mon frere; engineers are not arrogant. In reply to Eric Crowell's letter published March 31, we would like to express our opinions regarding the "controversial T-shirt."

First of all, Crowell needs to brush up on his calculus. The equation states that as the GPA of an engineering student approaches zero, he or she tends to switch to business. It does not insinuate that business majors have GPAs of zero.

Switching majors is a common procedure in a student's college career. Engineering students are by no means exempt. Engineering students switch to a variety of other majors for a variety of reasons. Yet, the most common observation seems to be that engineering students who "can't take the heat," switch to business.

It's true, engineering is a rigorous program, but we said nothing about engineering being better than business. As a matter of fact, many engineers go on to obtain an MBA.

The T-shirt is all in good fun. Part of the humor comes from the fact that the T-shirt imitates the calculus book that we had to lug around for at least three semesters. The other pokes fun at the engineers with ailing GPAs.

Engineers are not immune from mockery about their majors either. In fact many engineers tease each other about their majors. Hell, we're known as "imaginary engineers." Big deal.

So, Crowell, please lighten up.

Entrepreneurship is the cornerstone of all business. And, as a business major, Crowell should realize this. So, if anyone is interested in the T-shirts, contact us. Business is business.

Belief takes faith

Editor,

I am writing in response to Scott Miller's column in which he states the schools should only teach evolution because it is scientifically based and creation is not.

I have two children in grade school and the reason I oppose having them and other children taught evolution is that it not only goes against the Christian faith, but it is also not scientifically based on facts, but on theoretic assumptions.

Contrary to what Miller says, there is much more evidence today than ever before that shows the fallacies of the evolution theory, showing that sudden creation of life is a more scientific explanation of origins.

This can be found by reading the numerous books and periodicals written by many scientists who choose to stand on the facts and refuse to "go with the flow."

The refusal of the establishment within scientific and educational circles to consider creation as an alternative to evolution is based on, above all, the insistence of purely atheistic, materialistic and mechanistic explanations for origins, to the exclusion of an explanation based on theism.

Restricting the teaching of origins to this one particular view thus constitutes indoctrination in a religious philosophy. Constitutional guarantees of separation of church and state are violated and true science is shackled in dogma.

In reality, I feel it takes more faith to believe that this well-timed, perfectly designed universe arrived here by "accidental chance" than by a divine Creator.

Creationism valid

Editor,

This is in response to Scott Miller's column, "Academic freedom battle still being fought," in the April 7 issue of the Collegian.

In his article Miller made the statement that "... no evidence exists to support the validity of creationism as a scientific theory." It has been my experience, however, that there is more than enough scientific evidence to allow creation to be considered as a viable alternative to evolution as a theory for the origin of life.

In fact, hundreds of books exist today on the open market that address the subject of scientific creationism in complete detail, and these books are convincing laymen and scientists alike across the globe.

Unfortunately, these books are difficult to locate because they are published by Christian publishers and consequently are released through Christian bookstores.

The obvious result of this is that the general public is not exposed to the arguments of scientific creationism. It is here, then, that I encourage anyone unfamiliar with the study of scientific creationism to research the subject on his own. A Christian bookstore is perhaps the best place to start, or one may write directly to the Institute for Creation Research, 2100 Greenfield Dr., El Cajon, Calif., for a list of different books, periodicals and videotapes on scientific creationism.

In my personal research of this subject, I have become completely convinced of creation as the source of the orgin of life as we know it. I am only one individual, but there are literally thousands of scientists worldwide who reject the theory of evolution and openly advocate the theory of creation — something that would certainly not be if creation were as unscientific as Miller claims.

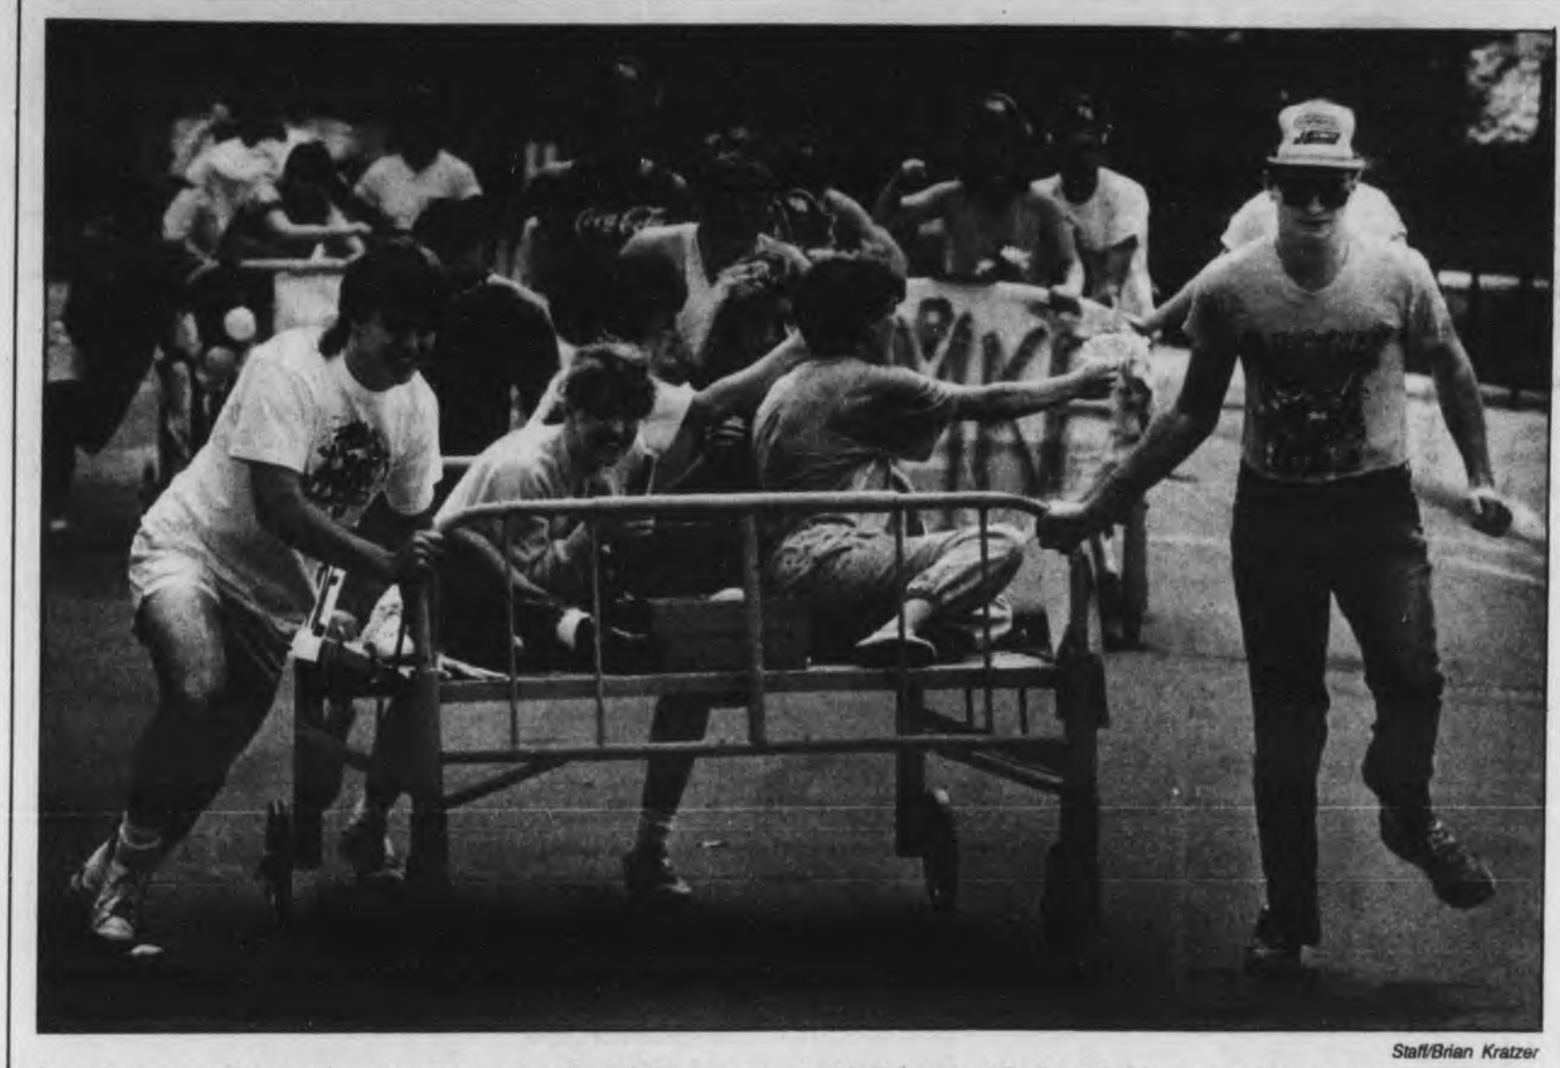
Salaries low

Editor,

K-State has built an outstanding reputation for the academic opportunities it offers to its students. However, this is now being seriously threatened by the inadequate salaries for its professors.

The salaries of the K-State faculty have been below the Big Eight average for four years, and dead last for three years. K-State was also behind its peer institutions (Colorado State, Iowa State, North Carolina State, Oklahoma State and Oregon State) by a whopping 17.6 percent in the '87-'88 academic year.

Because of this significant shortfall, the ability to attract new faculty, as well as keep the best ones here, is becoming very difficult. The quality of the faculty members determines the quality of the educational programs that are offered. It should be important to each one of us to keep K-State at the top.



We need to use our voice in government by urging our state legislators to support full funding for the Margin of Excellence. With full funding, K-State will be kept even with its peers, ensuring the future of our University and its students.

Moore Hall wins Spring Fling bed race

By The Collegian Staff

Ladies and gentlemen, start your beds!

Activities for Spring Fling '89 ended Sunday with a bed race that sent students and beds careening through campus.

Moore Hall residents will receive a free dinner for winning the race and the hall name will engraved on a traveling trophy.

"The rules are, four people on a bed, and four people pushing at all times," said Norbert Marek, race coordinator and junior in history. "The teams are co-ed, with four guys and four girls. All the guys have to push when the girls are on the bed, and all the girls have to push when the guys are on the bed."

The race began east of the Union on Mid-Campus Drive and finished at the Pittman building, Marek said. The course had seven check points, where the teams could trade-off with "fresh" people or just switch pushers and riders.

Moore Hall's team members credited their win to starting fast and taking the curbs close.

Second place went to the West-Marlatt team, Haymaker-Ford captured third.

Spring Fling is the annual activities week for the 4,000 students living in the residence halls.

Wright anticipating chance for defense

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Jim Wright said Sunday he is eager to defend himself against allegations of ethics violations, asking that a hearing be held within hours after the release of a formal ethics committee report.

CBS News reported Sunday night that the ethics report on Monday morning would charge Wright with five counts including 69 instances of alleged ethical wrongdoing.

The network said the charges would accuse him of converting speaking fees to bulk purchases of his book in an effort to avoid limits on honoraria, and of receiving unreported gifts from business associate George Mallick. CBS said the report would say the gifts were tainted because Mallick had a business interest in influencing legislation.

"I am requesting the earliest possible opportunity to appear before the committee to answer specifically any statement of alleged violations," Wright said in a letter the speaker's office said was delivered Sunday afternoon to the leaders of the ethics committee.

"I am prepared to appear as early as Monday afternoon, but certainly the committee should be able to schedule a hearing within seven days," Wright wrote to Reps. Julian Dixon, D-Calif., and John Myers, R-Ind. The committee is scheduled to issue its report Monday morning.

Wright noted in his letter that "there are many procedural rights available to me which could postpone final committee action for months" but emphasized that he wanted to move quickly and expressed hope the committee would put its own deliberations on a fast track.

"After my appearance, I would hope that the committee would proceed directly to the final state of determining whether the 'clear and convincing' evidentiary standard has been met, as required by committee rule 16," he told the panel, known officially as the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

Wright referred to committee procedures by which the panel, having issued its initial report listing possible violations, would then move on to determine what, if anything, to recommend to the full House in the way of censure or reprimand.

Wright said he believed it was "in the best interest of the House, as well as the nation, to resolve this matter as quickly as possible."

Wright has said the business of the House in dealing with major legislation is being hampered by the attention focused on his case.

"I continue to believe that I have not violated any House rules, and I am absolutely certain that I have never knowingly or intentionally done so," Wright said.

After launching his public defense Thursday with a long presentation that was beamed via television into millions of homes, the speaker remained at home Sunday, out of public view, as he and the other players in the unfolding political drama readied themselves for the release Monday of the committee's report.

Private study shows which women likely to have abortions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hispanic and black women, women with low incomes, those living with someone they are not married to, and those in school are statistically more likely to undergo abortions than women in general, according to a private survey.

Firm statistics are not available on the number of abortions performed each year nor on who has them. Moreover, the survey by The Alan Guttmacher Institute confirms that most abortions are performed on white, middle-class women because they make up the bulk of the population of women of childbearing age.

However, the extensive survey by the New York-based, nonprofit group that studies reproductive issues suggests that women in various categories have a statistically disproportionate share of abortions relative to their raw numbers.

For example, it found that nonwhite women make up 16.7 percent of the childbearing-age population, but accounted for 31.4 percent of the abortions.

White women accounted for 68.6 percent of those seeking abortions, but 83.3 percent of the childbearing-age population, considered 15-to-44 for purposes of the survey.

And it found that women with family incomes below $11,000 accounted for 33.1 percent of those receiving abortions although they made up only 29.2 percent of all women of childbearing age.

The federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta estimates there were 1,328,000 abortions in the United States in 1985, the most recent year for which it has numbers. The Guttmacher Institute estimates 1,588,550 that year.

No one questions that the number has increased since the Supreme Court legalized abortion in 1973. The court is hearing arguments April 26 in a Missouri case that both sides agree could result in the reversal, or weakening of the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision.

The Guttmacher Institute surveyed 9,480 women who obtained abortions at hospitals, clinics or doctors' offices during 1987 in an effort to find out who was obtaining the services.

Unmarried women living with a man constituted 17.4 percent of the abortion clients although they made up only 3.4 of all childbearing-age women.

Women attending school constituted 31.1 percent of those seeking abortions, but 20.5 percent of all women of childbearing age.

Most women cited more than one factor in their decision to have an abortion. Among the reasons were concerns about how motherhood would change their lives.

Insurance protects farmers against loss

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

For a farmer, the lack of rain or low amounts of it may mean the death of a crop and financial stress. A K-State agricultural economist said there are alternatives to total financial loss.

Art Barnaby, extension agricultural economist, said there has been no ongoing legislation for the support of disaster aid since 1980, when it was theoretically cut off. Instead, crop insurance was substituted to assist farmers.

"The idea of the crop insurance program is that it protects the money the farmer spends. The farmer will have some income regardless if they harvest any or not," said Thomas V. Link of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Crop insurance guarantees yield per acre. If an insured crop yields less than the guarantee, the insurance compensates for the difference.

"We can offer up to 75 percent of what a farmer's been yielding on a farm," Link said.

"We had a large increase in acres that we insured in the state last year," he said. "We have 62 percent more acres insured this year than we did last year."

Insurance premiums vary across the state depending on the county risk factor and the amount of insurance purchased, Link said.

"A farmer in south-central Kansas may be able to insure the (crops) for $2 an acre when it may cost a farmer in western Kansas $4 or $5 an acre," he said.

The final deadline for crop insurance of spring crops is today and for wheat it was last fall, Link said.

"All crop insurance is marketed through independent agents. We have companies that provide it directly, and some are re-insured by crop insurance. It's the same program for everybody," he said.

When purchasing insurance, the farmer should contact an agent and inquire about crop insurance. Each farm must have a yield assigned to it. The Federal Crop Insurance Corp. can assign the farmer a yield, or the farmer can bring in his own yield records, Link said.

Another alternative for assistance is the Drought Relief Act. Congress passed disaster bills in 1982, 1986 and 1988, Barnaby said.

"In 1988, (farmers) had crop losses that were pretty heavy in the corn belt states," he said.

A drought act was passed to assist corn, soybean and some wheat farmers in the affected states.

"(The government) paid them for losses in excess of 65 percent of their program yield, and they were paid at a rate of 65 percent of target price," Barnaby said.

"The proposal is to extend the 1988 drought act to 1989 wheat," he said.

Many of the farmers are somewhat diversified, he said. It is possible they could have made money off of livestock or other crops. Most of the farmers plant summer crops such as milo soybeans and wheat.

"If we get some summer rain and decent weather this summer ... for the whole year, it may not be as bad as it looks right now except for those growers that are exclusively dry land wheat," Barnaby said.

In addition, this year will not be a good year for farmers participating in government commodity programs, he said. The deficiency payments have been low due to a higher market price.

"If your farm is in a short crop year, the best thing that can happen is if everybody else has a bumper crop, driving the prices down..

"When the price goes down, the deficiency payment goes up," Barnaby said.

"Right now it looks like they probably will get a small deficiency payment on wheat, for those who have low production, it will be a good deal," he said.

The ultimate way to absorb crop loss is through equity, he said.

"An extension of the Drought Act would help because that's cash without the obligation of repaying it," Barnaby said. "The only thing you really save on disaster loans is a little interest. The balance sheet will look the same as if you borrowed it from the bank."

Officials test oil spill cleanup plan

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — State and federal officials dissected Exxon's cleanup plan for hundreds of miles of shoreline Sunday as an environmentally risky steam-cleaning method was tested on rocks blackened by America's worst oil spill.

Oil from the 10.1 million-gallon spill, mostly in the form of tar balls and mousse-like foam, threatened Homer and other ports on fish-rich Cook Inlet. In Kodiak, the nation's No. 1 fishing port, herring from a closed fishery were examined for contamination.

Homer residents complained of delays in placing log booms they have built to protect their town. Exxon officials say the booms are being stockpiled at nearby Port Graham to make them easier to deploy when the oil strikes.

"People here in Homer are being jerked around," said Lee McCabe, a resident who was building booms. "If the fishermen in this town fished like Exxon deploys boom, you'd never see a fish on the dock."

Exxon workers on Sunday tested cleanup methods on blackened rocks at Block Island, including high-pressure, hot-water sprayers. The company has about 200 of the sprayers, but they have not been used previously with salt water.

Tennis squad downs Colorado

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

For the first time in history, the K-State tennis team broke the .500 mark in Big Eight play after it defeated Colorado 6-3 in a dual match Saturday. The victory brings the Wildcats conference record to 3-2.

Coach Steve Bietau said no real surprises occurred during Saturday's matches, except that Annika Emtell was disappointed in her performance at No. 6 singles. Emtell lost the match to Colorado's Wendy Kaplan, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1. Last weekend, Emtell fought back from a 6-0 deficit in her first set to eventually capture a 6-4 victory in both the second and third sets, winning the match against Oklahoma's Shea Hetherington.

"Looking at the position we're in, and where we are as far as the season goes, I'm pleased with where we are,"
— Steve Bietau tennis coach

Sophomore Thresa Burcham was impressive in her second set against CU's Patty Burbridge at No. 5 singles. Despite a slow start, Burcham came back to win the match, 7-6, 6-2.

"I was just working on keeping the ball going, and staying in there because she was the type of player who could nail a ball on the greatest shot," Burcham said. "It was a tough set, and after I won that, I think it gave me a little bit of an edge because I became more confident."

Burcham also chalked up a point while paired with Emtell at No. 3 doubles. The tandem lost its momentum slightly in the second set, but came back to defeat the Colorado duo of Birget Fink-Jensen and Burbridge, 6-2, 2-6, 6-4.

According to Burcham, her knee has been giving her some trouble. She is suffering from patella tendinitis, and learned Friday of a torn cartilage in the same knee. It's not certain whether the injury will require surgery, but Burcham said she's just taking good care of it and definitely going to finish the season.

Valerie Rive also had a good weekend for the 'Cats. She contributed points at No. 4 singles, and teamed with Marijke Nel to pick up a victory at No. 2 doubles. The pair soundly defeated Colorado's tandem of Wendi Kaplan and Sonja Panajotovic in two sets, 6-0, 6-4. Rive said she was pleased overall with the way she played an I was confident about her doubles match.

"We took charge," she said. "We got maybe a little bit too relaxed towards the end, but I never had any doubts that we would win it."

Bietau was happy about the match and optimistic about the season to date. The team has only two dual matches left before heading to Oklahoma City for the Big Eight tournament.

"Looking at the position we're in, and where we are as far as the season goes, I'm pleased with where we are," Bietau said. "If we can finish playing the duals at the level we are now or better and then improve in Oklahoma City, I like our chances."

Singles results:

No. 1 — Karen Meyers, CU, def. Marijke Nel, K-State, 6-3, 6-2.
No. 2 — Helen Schildknecht, K-State, def. Renee Marshall, CU, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3.
No. 3 — Sara Hancock, K-State, def. Sonja Panajotovic, CU, 6-1, 6-4.
No. 4 — Valerie Rive, K-State, def. Birget Fink-Jensen, CU, 6-4, 6-2.
No. 5 — Thresa Burcham, K-State, def. Patty Burbridge, CU, 7-6, 6-2.
No. 6 — Wendy Kaplan, CU, def. Annika Emtell, K-State, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Doubles results —

No. 1 — Meyers/Marshall, CU, def. Schildknecht/Hancock, K-State, 3-6, 6-4, 6-1.
No. 2 — Nel/Rive, K-State, def. Kaplan/Panajotovic, CU, 6-0, 6-4.
No. 3 — Burcham/Emtell, K-State, def. Fink-Jensen/Burbridge, CU, 6-2, 2-6, 6-4.

Marshall courting Altman

From Staff and Wire Reports

Wildcat assistant basketball coach Dana Altman is reportedly the leading candidate for the Marshall University head coaching position. Virgina Military Institute basketball coach Joe Cantafio, who had been one of the top candidates for the position, withdrew his name from the list.

Marshall athletic director Lee Moon is believed to be leaning towards Altman because of his K-State ties. Moon was the assistant athletic director under Larry Travis before taking the Marshall position in February of 1988.

Moon also acted as interim football coach at K-State when Jim Dickey was fired after just two games in 1985. Moon's ties with Marshall began when K-State hired then-Marshall head football coach Stan Parrish.

The Marshall position opened after former coach Rick Huckabay resigned under duress April 7 after allegations arose about recruiting violations of NCAA regulations.

Altman has been Coach Lon Kruger's top assistant since coming to K-State from Moberly (Mo.) Junior College three seasons ago. Altman compiled a 94-18 record during his three years as the Greyhounds' mentor. Moberly, led by former K-State star Mitch Richmond, finished sixth in the nation and had a 34-4 record in Altman's final year. He was named Region XVI coach of the year in each of his last two seasons.

'Cats lose 3 of 4 at Mizzou

From Staff and Wire Reports

COLUMBIA, Mo. — K-State picked up a 13-1 victory Saturday during its four-game Big Eight Conference series at Missouri, but that was the only good news for the 'Cats on the weekend.

Friday, the Tigers pounded out 12 hits en route to a 10-2 victory. Missouri then defeated K-State, 8-7, in the nightcap of Saturday's doubleheader action and romped to a 17-6 victory in the series finale Sunday afternoon.

Friday — Missouri 10, K-State 2

K-State starter Jim Haller could not ovecome a rough first inning as the 'Cats dropped a 10-2 decision to Missouri.

The Tigers scored two runs in the first, all of which were a direct result of three wild pitches by Haller.

Missouri scored three more runs in the fourth, all of which were unearned due to a pair of K-State errors, and the 'Cats never really got into it.

But not for lack of chances. On two occasions, the 'Cats had the bases loaded with no outs, but failed to score a run.

Outfielder Rusty Ringgenberg was the only Wildcat to get more than one hit for the contest, punching out a double and a single. Missouri starter Mike Pothoff allowed just seven hits, struckout nine K-State hitters and went the distance to up his record to 3-1. Haller also went the distance for the 'Cats, but dropped to 3-3 on the year.

Saturday 1 — K-State 13, Missouri 1
Saturday 2 — Missouri 8, K-State 7

In game one of Saturday's twinbill, K-State ace David Hierholzer notched his fifth complete game and picked up his fifth victory, as the 'Cats shelled Missouri, 13-1.

Hierholzer allowed just three Missouri hits and only a Greg King home run stood between him and a shutout.

Offensively, K-State's eight-run fourth inning was what proved to be too much for the Tigers. For the game, second baseman Jeff Troll had three hits and third baseman Brad Ripplemeyer slugged a three-run homer and had five RBI.

In the nightcap, K-State left the potential tying run at third base in the seventh inning, as Missouri held on to notch an 8-7 victory.

Missouri reliever Bunky Moeller retired Mike Rosenboom and Craig Wilson in the final inning to secure the win.

K-State scored seven unearned runs, but it was a Wildcat miscue that provide Missouri with the eventual game winner.

A dropped fly ball by Wildcat right fielder Bill Barnard in the sixth was followed by Tom Hawkins' single which a lowed Jon Pittenger to score the winning run. Reliever Bill Schafer took the loss for K-State, dropping to 3-2 on the year.

Sunday — Missouri 17, K-State 6

Greg King hit two home runs, including a grand slam, to lead Missouri to a 17-6 victory Sunday against K-State in a Big Eight baseball game.

King's grand slam came in the eighth inning off Wildcat pitcher Greg McNamara. The blast ended the game because of the 10-run rule.

Rich Reisdorf also had a home run and four RBI for the Tigers, and Darnell Hawkins also had a homer and four RBI.

Jim McClellan, the K-State starter, took the loss. His record fell to 2-4. Mitch Engold, 5-3, got the win for the Tigers.

For the Wildcats, Bill Barnard drove in two runs in the seventh inning with a two-out, two-run double. Russ Ringgenberg hit his third home run of the season for the Wildcats.

K-State is now 23-12 overall and 3-9 in conference play. The Wildcats are back in action at 3 p.m. Tuesday in a doubleheader against Missouri Western at Frank Myers Field.

Wildcats take 2nd place; qualify 2 for nationals

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

National-qualifying performances by Connie Teaberry and Kim Kilpatrick highlighted K-State's second place finishes at the Nebraska Invitational in Lincoln Saturday.

Kilpatrick won the 100-meter hurdles in 13.58 seconds to stake her claim to a spot at the NCAA Outdoor June 1-3 at Provo, Utah. Her time just narrowly bested the national-qualifying standard of 13.60. Kilpatrick set the K-State record in 1987 with a time of 13.49.

Teaberry, only a freshman, qualified in her specialty, tying the national standard with a leap of 6-0 in the high jump. Teaberry also qualified for nationals during the past indoor season.

"I thought we had a really good meet," K-State coach John Capriotti said. "Of course the highlights were our two national qualifiers. Connie has been jumping real well and she got off some real good jumps Saturday and Kim was running into a straight-on head wind, and 13.58 is an excellent run. Those two had great efforts."

Both the K-State men's and women's squads finished second to host Nebraska. The Cornhusker women outdistanced K-State 81-49½, and the Wildcats were followed by Missouri at 43½ and Wyoming with 11.

The K-State men lost to the 'Huskers, 104-81, but did defeat Minnesota, 55½; Missouri, 30; and Wyoming, 14½.

Freshman Greta Semsroth remained undefeated in the javelin with a first-place toss of 163-10 feet. Semsroth is K-State's only other athlete to qualify for nationals this season.

Freshman Latricia Joyner also picked up a first-place victory, taking the 100 meters in 12.18 seconds.

Angie Barry appeared to be regaining her previous form after nursing an ankle injury during the indoor season. She won the 3,000 meters in 9:58.51.

"Angie Barry ran really well in the 3,000," Capriotti said. "She was a big surprise. She's starting to get back in form."

The K-State men were paced by senior thrower Dan O'Mara. O'Mara was a double winner, taking home gold medals in the discus with a throw of 184-4, and the shot put with a throw of 56-10¼.

K-State recorded four other first-place finishes in the men's division. Sean Banks took the 400 meters in 47.25, Clifton Etheridge won the long jump, going 25-6, Pat Hessini captured the 800 in 1:52.38 and Brad Speer won the high jump with a leap of 6-9½.

Etheridge's distance in the long jump was just 4¼ inches shy of the national qualifying mark of 25-10¼.

The Wildcats will now begin to slack off the rigorous training schedule they have been following during the first month of the outdoor season in preparation for what Capriotti calls the "big meets" coming later this month. The 'Cats have the KU Relays this week, and then the Drake Relays the following week before taking a week off to prepare for the Big Eight Outdoor.

Gretzky's year with Kings proves he's in class by himself

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

In the world of sports, only a few athletes can be considered superstars — those who answer the call in important situations on a regular basis.

And then there's Wayne Gretzky.

For those of you who don't follow professional hockey on a regular basis, Gretzky may just be the finest player who has ever laced up skates.

Since 1979, Gretzky has dominated his chosen sport, and in so doing has rewritten the National Hockey League record books. It took Gretzky and his former teammates with the Edmonton Oilers some time, but in 1982 they won the Campbell Conference Championship for the first time, and then repeated it the following season.

In 1982 and 1983, the Oilers' bids for the Stanley Cup, given to the champions of the NHL, were thwarted by the New York Islanders, then hockey's dominant team.

In 1984, however, Gretzky and Edmonton broke New York's four-year stranglehold on the title and won the first of what would turn out to be four of their own in the next five seasons.

In 1988, Gretzky's final season in the blue and orange of the Oilers, he had a solid year, but players like the Pittsburgh Penguins' Mario Lemieux were, it was said, inching up on the "Great One."

Then, the event that rocked the Province of Alberta and the City of Edmonton went public. Gretzky, having married actress Janet Jones and wanting to maintain a close relationship with his new bride, asked for a trade to the Los Angeles Kings, which was surprisingly granted.

Gretzky, a national hero in Canada, had just been exported. An entire nation was stunned, and the Edmonton Oilers became just another hockey team with four of Lord Stanley's cups.

The Kings, clad in silver and black uniforms for the first season, became the league's glamour team, with Gretzky leading the team to the playoffs in his first season in Los Angeles.

The first round opponent in the playoffs? How about Edmonton in a storybook ending to a truly remarkable year.

For a man who had won more Hart trophies as the league's Most Valuable Player than any other, the task of leading his new team past his old one was seemingly insurmountable.

Sure, Los Angeles had Luc Robitaille and Bernie Nicholls in the midst of outstanding years, but Gretzky and his team were facing mighty Edmonton, a team that with or without Gretzky had dominated the sport for eight years.

The Oilers opened the series impressively, winning three of the first four games and taking a commanding 3-1 lead.

When the series moved back to Los Angeles, Gretzky and his new mates knew they needed a miracle to recover. It was then that No. 99, hampered most of the series by his hard-checking former teammates — and Mark Messier in particular — raised his level of play to an area where only he had gone before.

During the next two games in L.A., Gretzky gave every bit he had and brought the Kings back even at 3-3. But a final and decisive game seven was left, and it was in Edmonton.

Gretzky, now the villain in a city that had made him its hero of the 1980s, was booed lustily every time he touched the puck. It didn't matter. When the horn sounded and Saturday night's game was over, Gretzky and Company had skated away with a 6-3 win and had knocked Edmonton from the playoffs.

That has set up a meeting between two familiar foes — Wayne Gretzky and the Calgary Flames. Gretzky is going to be in a different uniform this year, however, in the series that opens Tuesday night.

That Gretzky helped the Kings to the playoffs, and then got them past the dominant team in the sport in just his first year with his new team is a truly remarkable achievement.

But it wasn't anything special for the Great One.

Great ones get things done, and the greatest gets them done better than anyone else.

The greatest is Wayne Gretzky, and he proved it again Saturday night.

Rugby clubs win 1 of 3 in weekend action at home

K.C. Blues too much for ruggers

By The Collegian Staff

After coming off of a "great" tournament in Omaha, Neb., the men's rugby team played "terrible" Saturday against the Kansas City Blues.

"We have to look at a lot of different places to lay the blame," said Coach Dan Blea, scrum half. "We had just come off of a great weekend and played terrible."

The men's A side lost to Kansas City, 26-0, and the B side lost 35-4.

Blea places most of the blame for the loss on the team's lack of preparation during the week on ways to combat Kansas City's kicking game.

"We had seen that style of play, and we knew that they did it a lot. We just weren't prepared for it," Blea said.

Teams rely heavily on their fly half's ability to defend against kicking teams, he said. The loss of veteran fly half Steve Duncan to an injury was a major factor in the game.

"We not only had Steve Duncan out, but we also had Steve Robke (second row) out still," Blea said.

Duncan is expected to be back for the team's game Saturday against Lincoln and the University of Nebraska Rugby Club.

Although the men lost to Lincoln April 9 during the Omaha tournament, Blea said he expects the team to even the score.

Because Nebraska is a kicking team, much of this week's practices will center on defending against that style of play, Blea said.

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf

Center Kevin Wimbley of the K-State Rugby Club tries to stop a Kansas City Blues player during the teams' second game Saturday afternoon. K-State lost both games. The men's A side was defeated, 26-0, and the B side lost, 35-4.

Women roll over Pitt. State

By The Collegian Staff

It may not be that experienced, but for the second time this semester the women's rugby team routed Pittsburg State's squad.

"I'm the only one who has ever played before," said Shannon Decker, fly half. "And I only played one year at Pittsburg so I'm even relatively new at this."

The 23-member team, which formed earlier this semester, is 3-1 in collegiate play after beating Pittsburg 26-0 Saturday.

"We just have a really good back line," Decker said. "We just got Laura (Sargent) the ball and she could run past everybody."

In addition to Sargent's play, possession was a major factor.

"We won almost every put in and line out — even if it was theirs," Decker said. "It was just the combined effort that everyone put out that helped us win."

Because Pittsburg's team was a few players short of a full squad, some K-State players moved to their side for the afternoon.

"Our players did good even when the played on their side," Decker said.

The women will be idle until they go to Fort Collins, Colo., for a rookie tournament April 29 and 30.

"We should do really well there. We need to work mostly on our conditioning, especially since we will be playing at such a high altitude," Decker said.

Crew wins 3 golds

From Staff and Wire Reports

All four squads of the K-State crew team brought home medals from the 5th Annual President's regatta at Topeka's Shawnee Lake Saturday.

K-State's eight-oared shells dominated in the 400-meter sprint events, winning three of the races entered. Taking gold medals were the varsity men and the two men's and women's freshmen squads. The varsity women's eight claimed a bronze over the same course and the mixed eight took a "surprise" silver, K-State coach Don Rose said.

The 2,000-meter course proved to be tough for the 'Cats. The men's varsity led K-State at this distance with a second-place finish. The men's freshmen lightweight four finished second and the women's freshmen eight finished fourth after stopping short of the finish line and being nipped at the line.

Manhattan High School's women's four, which is sponsored by the K-State crew team, took second out of eleven.

"We've got two weeks to the regional at Madison Wisconsin and our work is cut out for us," Rose said. "We've had a good season, but all the crews are spurting to an end of the 1989 season and we've got to respond.

"We're beating crews that took us earlier, but it's got to be onward and upward for us to achieve our goals."

NHL divisional finals begin tonight

By The Associated Press

While the Calgary Flames get ready for their annual battle with Wayne Gretzky, a new hockey rivalry opens the second round of the Stanley Cup playoffs tonight — the battle of Pennsylvania.

While the Flames and Gretzky's Los Angeles Kings were winning seventh games Saturday night against Vancouver and Edmonton Saturday night, one of the more intriguing series of the playoffs was set to begin: the playoff-hardened Philadelphia Flyers and the novice Pittsburgh Penguins.

"This team has been down for so long, we don't know what's up," says Pittsburgh coach Gene Ubriaco, whose team eliminated the New York Rangers in four straight games in its first playoff appearance since 1982.

Tonight's play will also feature the opener of the Adams Division final with Boston at Montreal, whose 115 regular-season points were second to Calgary's in the NHL.

On Tuesday, Chicago will be at St. Louis and Los Angeles, which beat Gretzky's old Edmonton teammates 6-3 Saturday night, will be at Calgary. The Flames, who had 117 regular-season points, beat Vancouver 4-3 on Joe Otto's goal after 19 minutes, 21 seconds of overtime.

The Pittsburgh-Philadelphia series is a battle of contrasts.

The fourth-place Flyers, who upset first-place Washington four games to two in their Patrick Division first-round matchup, have been to the Stanley Cup finals two of the past four years and haven't missed the playoffs in their 22 years of existence.

By contrast, Pittsburgh's six years without a playoff berth was the longest in the NHL, and the Penguins haven't reach the second round for a decade.

But the Penguins enter the series confident. They won the season series with the Flyers, 4-3-1; won their last two games at The Spectrum after a 14-year drought there, and may have the most explosive tandem in the playoffs in Mario Lemieux and Paul Coffey.

But that may also be their weakness.

"Pittsburgh may be rested, but they may be a little overconfident," says Rod Langway of Washington, the Patrick Division champion but a loser in six games to Philadelphia.

"The Flyers have to stop just two players in my opinion: Mario (Lemieux) and Coffey. Pittsburgh doesn't have the goaltender to stay with the Flyers, but they have an offensive-minded team."

But Ubriaco is confident.

"If people want to underestimate what we did against the Rangers, let them, because it can only help our situation," he says. "It's been that way all season. People have constantly reminded us how long we were out of the playoffs, how many shots we gave up, how many goals we gave up."

Montreal, meanwhile, hopes to get more help from three players — Stephane Richer, Claude Lemieux and Shayne Corson. They combined for just two goals in the four-game sweep of Hartford.

Royals lose 6-run lead, game to Toronto

By The Associated Press

TORONTO — Kelly Gruber came up in the eighth inning needing a single to become the first Toronto player ever to hit for the cycle.

He got a hit, but his only problem was that it could have been a double.

"I knew I had it," Gruber said of his eighth-inning single. "It was just a matter of whether I was going for two or not, but the team didn't need the extra base being up by three runs at the time."

The Blue Jays beat the Kansas City Royals 15-8 Sunday, rallying from a 6-0 deficit in the first inning.

Gruber homered in the first, doubled in the second, tripled in the seventh and then singled in the eighth as he went 4-for-6 with four runs scored. The Blue Jays joined the American League in 1977.

"Frank White congratulated me, but didn't want to shake my hand in front of the crowd," Gruber said. "He told me he needed a triple when he hit for the cycle. Man that's tough. I guess needing a single is no big deal."

The Royals scored six runs in the first inning off Dave Stieb, who had thrown three one-hitters in his previous four starts.

The Blue Jays chipped away and moved ahead 9-7 in the fourth on Jesse Barfield's three-run homer.

"In that situation, I was just looking for something to drive up the middle," Barfield said. "I wasn't surprised to see the fastball. He's a fastball pitcher, and I'm a fastball hitter. I just got the best of him today."

George Bell hit a two-out double and Fred McGriff walked. Barfield then homered off reliever Bret Saberhagen's 0-2 fastball for his fourth home run.

The Blue Jays made it 11-8 in the seventh on Gruber's two-run triple and Pat Borders followed with a double.

David Wells, 1-0, pitched four innings in relief for the victory and Tony Castillo allowed only two hits over the final 4 2-3 for the save.

"We kind of turned the tables on them today," Wells said. "After Saturday's game, we figured we had a chance to comeback. I just had to make sure I gave our guys a chance."

Saberhagen, 1-1, making his first relief appearance since Sept. 14, 1986, was reached for three runs in 2⅓ innings.

Kansas City sent 11 batters to the plate in taking a 6-0 lead in the first. Bo Jackson hit a two-run double and Brad Wellman added a two-run single.

Gruber's third home run of the season and back-to-back doubles by Bell and McGriff pulled Toronto within 6-2 in the bottom of the first.

Kansas City increased its lead to 7-2 in second on Bob Boone's RBI ground out.

The K-State women's golf team will open play today in the 54-hole, two-day Nebraska Invitational. The K-State women finished ninth at the Sue Berning Invitational at Oklahoma, April 6. Chris Adams is leading the Wildcats. She finished 15th at OU with a 54-hole score of 248.

Wings lose; still in playoffs

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Daryl Doran scored at 4:46 of a second overtime period Sunday to give the Los Angeles Lazers a 5-4 victory over the Wichita Wings in the Major Indoor Soccer League regular-season finale for both teams.

Wichita's Mike Fox scored with nine seconds left in the fourth quarter to tie the game at 4-4 and force sudden-death overtime. Neither team scored during the first 15-minute overtime period.

The Lazers finish the season with a 21-27 record. Wichita wound up 23-25. Los Angeles failed to qualify for the playoffs while the Wings move on to postseason play.

Stewart wins Heritage Classic

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — Payne Stewart led by at least three shots throughout the final round Sunday and won the Heritage Classic by five strokes in a record 16-under par.

Stewart's 25-foot birdie putt on the 15th hole virtually clinched his fourth career victory. It gave him a five-shot lead with three holes to play on the Harbour Town Golf Links, and he finished off a two-under-par 69 without difficulty.

Stewart, who led or shared the lead through all four rounds, finished with a 268.

Kristiansen going for sub-2:20 marathon

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Ingrid Kristiansen is primed for an assault on breaking the 2-hour, 20-minute barrier. Ibrahim Hussein is ready to run the fastest marathon of his career.

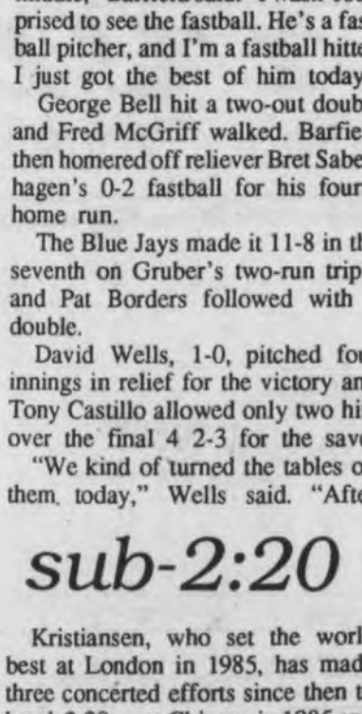
They will be the leading contenders Monday in the 93rd running of the Boston Marathon.

In none of the first 92 performances of the world's longest-running marathon, and in no other marathon in history, has a woman run faster than 2:20.

Kristiansen thinks she can be the first.

"I want to go for a sub-2:20," said the first lady of marathoning, who owns the best time ever, 2:21:06. "If the weather conditions are good, I will try for it.

"I can't lose by trying."



Kristiansen, who set the world best at London in 1985, has made three concerted efforts since then to break 2:20 — at Chicago in 1985 and at London in 1987 and 1988. She finished second to Joan Benoit Samuelson, the 1984 Olympic champion, at Chicago and won the last two London Marathons, but came up short each time in quest of the elusive sub-2:20 mark.

"There are so many people telling me, 'You can't do it,"' the Norwegian said. "It makes me angry."

Samuelson is the leading American in this international cast of runners.

Because of injuries and the birth of a daughter in October 1987, Samuelson has run only one marathon since 1985, finishing third at New York in November.

Inquisition to help find missing teen

By The Associated Press

LEAVENWORTH — Leavenworth County detectives hope a national crime conference, and if that fails, a formal inquisition, will give them some leads into the disappearance of a Linwood teen-ager a year ago Sunday.

Investigators have chased down numerous leads and rumors since Randy Leach, then 17, vanished after attending a party at a rural house between Bonner Springs and Linwood. But they've never discovered what happened.

Now, the case is among several scheduled to be discussed by 300 criminal investigtors meeting at a national crime conference this week in Nashville, Tenn.

Detective Sgt. Pat Sparks of the Leavenworth County Sheriff's Department will be there in the hopes of gaining some fresh ideas. When he gets back, he intends to convene a formal inquisition, much like a grand jury proceeding, to question people who attended the party and other people, he said.

"The inquisition is something we think we have to do to see if we can get more information from those people," he said. "The atmosphere of a courtroom and a court proceeding might make a difference to somebody."

Some witnesses have told investigators that drugs and alcohol flowed freely at the party. "Others flat deny it," Sparks said.

Randy's family wavers between belief that he was a victim of foul play, and hope that he is still alive. They have consulted with private investigators, psychics and missing persons agencies.

Channel One to complete test; researchers evaluate program

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the Channel One commercial news program for teens completes a test run this week, geography teacher Jim Peters expects a planned series of reports on life in Japan to command his class' attention.

His seventh-graders at Eisenhower Middle School in Kansas City, Kan., were captivated in early March with a Channel One series on Russian teen-agers and paid more than usual interest to his lesson that week about the Soviet Union.

"Instead of some 40-year-old geography teacher telling them what he saw when he went there, the show allowed the kids to see something fresh for themselves every day," Peters said.

He expressed hope that the reports on Japan will give an educational boost to this week's lessons on that nation.

Those are hopes shared by Channel One's developer, Whittle Communications LP, which has visions of turning the test project into its biggest commercial venture yet by taking it nationwide in the fall of 1990.

The Knoxville, Tenn.-based media company has spent more than $5.5 million on the Channel One test that began running in six schools March 6. The costs including equipping each school with about $50,000 in televisions and video equipment so it can receive the daily 12-minutes news shows.

But Whittle and school officials know that the project will not win much support nationally if they can't show it helps educate youngsters.

That is one of the reasons that in each of the five weeks of the test, Whittle sent teachers a course guide with suggested exercises based on that week's program.

Even as the 25th and last show signs off this Friday, Whittle's task of evaluating whether the project should be expanded has only begun.

Patricia Albjerg Graham, dean of the Harvard School of Education in Cambridge, Mass., said school officials should not be fooled about Whittle's basic intentions. "Whittle is doing this to make money."

She said there is a danger teachers will alter their lesson plans if a topic has already been covered on the news show.

Missouri River water levels low

By The Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — The coming Missouri River navigation season promises to be shorter than normal and water levels will be lower, according to the U.S Army Corps of Engineers.

The navigation season had been scheduled to open April 1 but was delayed until April 8. The season normally ends Dec. 1, but the river probably will be closed to shipping around Nov. 1 this year, said Duane Sveum, chief of the corps' river control center in Omaha.

Near-normal snowfall in the mountains that feed the Missouri helped support flows in the river, Sevum said. Snowpack in the Rockies and other mountains is about 95 percent of normal, he said.

But runoff into the Missouri's reservoir system is expected to be only 21.4 million acrefeet, down from 25 million acrefeet in a normal year, Sevum said.

The navigable channel this season is supposed to be 300 feet wide and 9 feet deep, meaning barges with a normal draft of 8.5 feet must carry less cargo so their drafts are 8 feet, he said.

Two barges hit bottom on the Missouri system last week, said John LaRandeau, corps engineer for the Missouri River Project.

The groundings occurred east of Kansas City, but LaRandeau said low water levels also have caused some rough spots in the Omaha area.

"We have three problem areas. These are three spots with less than the required dimensions," he said.

The corps inspects those areas daily and reports to the Coast Guard.

Navigational problems arise when dry conditions force the corps to change the amount of water being released into the Missouri system because the river has trouble adjusting, LaRandeau said.

"The river gets a memory of its flow. Whenever you change that flow, the river takes time to adjust," he said.

The result is shifting sandbars, shoals and other obstacles for barges, LaRandeau said.

If the Midwest and northern Plains do not receive significant precipitation throughout the year, corps officials say the 1990 navigation season also could be curtailed.

their way out of the crowd or when the barrier finally collapsed.

South Yorkshire's chief constable, Peter Wright, said a senior officer decided to open the gates "to save people's lives and to relieve the crush outside."

Police Supt. Tony Pratt, when asked about the decision to open the gates, said, "Whatever happened there yesterday, there was a demand for police action and action was taken."

Survivor Stephen Dooling, 34, defended the police action. "The police had to open the door because the lads at the front were screaming. They would have died there at the turnstiles instead of in the ground," Dooling said from his hospital bed.

Pratt said the casualty toll stood at 94 dead and 170 injured. Many victims were teen-agers and children, because the cheap standing-room-only section is favored by young fans.

Seventy-one people were hospitalized, many in extremely critical condition.

It was the third major soccer tragedy in four years involving English teams, which have been barred from European soccer competition since May 1985 because of rioting by Liverpool fans.

A stampede by Liverpool fans at Heysel stadium in Brussels in May 1985 killed 39 people. Eighteen days earlier, 56 soccer fans had died in a fire at Bradford stadium in England.

Lawmakers and other survivors demanded changes in stadium designs and elimination of anti-riot fences.

"People were caged in yesterday — people who should have been able to escape off those terraces, who were killed needlessly," said Liverpool Liberal lawmaker David Alton.

He said the fences should come down immediately, a demand echoed by Sheffield Labor lawmaker Joe Ashton, and Denis Howell, a former Labor sports minister.

Bert Millichip, president of the English Football Association, said regulations require fences.

"Nevertheless, in light of the appalling tragedy yesterday, quite clearly we now have to look at the fences and it has to be a very serious consideration whether or not they have to be pulled down," he said.

A disaster fund was set up for families of the victims.

of early returns showed taxpayers making the same mistakes that plagued last year's filings: writing down the wrong tax liability figure from the tax tables; claiming the wrong standard deduction; failing to check the box on Form 1040A or 1040EZ that indicates whether a person may be claimed as a dependent by another, and mathematical errors.

The IRS cautioned taxpayers to make sure returns are signed and that the perjury oath above the signature is not altered.

Mediterranean coast. The ports have cost the government about $100 million a year in lost tax revenue, because the militias levy customs duties on imports through the ports.

The Druse militia retaliated by shelling the Christian enclave. The Syrians, who maintain 40,000 troops in Lebanon's Moslem areas under a 1976 Arab League peacekeeing mandate, joined them.

Aoun's gunners Sunday targeted Syrian positions near the American University of Beirut in west Beirut, but there was no word on Syrian casualties.

A French humanitation mission to bring food, fuel and medical supplies to Lebanon was blocked by the shelling.

"I'm very pleased to receive the award," Kren said.

A eight-member committee appointed by the dean solicits nominations from the graduate faculty and students, Kruh said. The committee looks for those faculty members who have received national recognition for work in their respective fields.

"Of course, an excellent teaching record is looked for, as well," he said.

Committee members usually serve more than one year to ensure familiarity with the procedures and the level of excellence they are looking for, Kruh said. About four of the members are new each year.

The committee reviews references and chooses two recipients each year.

After a photograph of him with a teddy bear appeared in an alumni magazine, Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology, started receiving bears as gifts from all over the world. His collection amounts to about 50 bears, which are kept in his office.

Teddy bears aid researchers

Animals add to decor, 'soften' daily routine

By Mary Ubel
Collegian Reporter

Terry Johnson may be serious about directing the biology research efforts on campus, but he is not without a soft spot. As part of his office decor, he has about 50 teddy bears to keep him company.

The bears could tell all kinds of stories, said Johnson, director of the Division of Biology.

"About six years ago, a picture was taken of me with a teddy bear that had been sent from a research foundation. Now bears come to me from all over," he said.

For example, after receiving funds for research on cancer and infections of the nervous system, he received two space bears from NASA, Johnson said.

As they sit in their places, he said, a fence circles the bears to keep them from causing havoc at night.

"Seriously, the bears are very important to the department. With all the stresses from budgeting for biology research, the bears soften the day," Johnson said. "It's very hard to come to the office upset and face 50 teddy bears.

"The bears have become a part of our research. They're efficient. They never have a cross word. They don't make a mess, and they always leave plenty of dessert."

The two bears from NASA were given in conjunction with major parts of the division's research.

The Division of Biology is interested in two major areas of research, he said. In one area of concentration, researchers are trying to answer the question of why some cells make normal divisions and some cells develop cancer.

Johnson made a correlation with the cell division of fetus development and cancer development.

"The normal cell division of the fetus develops very rapidly for obvious reasons," he said. "The (mother) only wants to carry the fetus nine months, not nine years."

Cancer develops as a result of abnormal cell division. Researchers are attempting to determine why some cells divide normally, such as in the fetus, while others divide abnormally.

"We want to be able to understand what drives cells to divide the way they do and how cells communicate," Johnson said.

When cells come in contact with each other, they "biochemically talk" to each other through chemistry.

"We want to know what molecules cause the cells to communicate," he said. "I don't think the cancer cells are trying to kill us, but we need to determine why cancer cells cannot communicate normally."

As part of the research, slowing down the cancer to provide time for the patient to receive treatment by a physician is one goal of the department.

"The department deals with basic research. We don't treat patients. That's left to a physician," Johnson said.

The second part of the department's research concentrates on infections of the nervous system.

The human nervous system naturally produces molecules that affect our moods, he said. Some drugs take advantage of the receptors, which fools molecules into believing the individual is happy. In contrast, downers depress an individual.

"The study of drugs is a mystery area," Johnson said. "Through research we look at potential drugs and how the drugs affect infections and viruses."

The drug beta-endorphin is released into the bloodstream and is carried to the brain when an individual is under stress, he said.

"It's like an alarm molecule," Johnson said.

Viruses can cause illness and sometimes death. Herpes, which causes cold sores, is a virus. If a person gets cold sores, the herpes virus is harbored in the body forever, he said.

Police arrest man suspected of 15 human sacrifices

By The Associated Press

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — U.S. authorities Monday arrested the son of the owner of a Mexican ranch where human sacrifice was performed by a drug-smuggling cult suspected in 15 killings.

Serafin Hernandez Rivera Sr. of Brownsville was one of three men charged in federal warrants Monday with marijuana importation, possession and conspiracy. The other two were Martin Quintana and Mario Fabio, both Mexicans.

Authorities believe Quintana and Fabio took part in the sacrificial slaying and mutilation of University Texas student Mark Kilroy, who disappeared while vacationing at the border during spring break, said Oran Neck, chief U.S. Customs agent here.

The two were among six suspects who remained at large, and were considered dangerous, Neck said.

Hernandez, the fifth suspect arrested in the case, was apprehended at a Houston residence by U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration and Texas Department of Public Safety agents, Neck said.

Two bodies of suspected drug traffickers missing since May were unearthed Sunday on a collective farm two miles south of the Rancho Santa Elena, where 13 corpses were found last week.

The two victims, Moises Castillo, 52, of Houston and Hector de la Fuente, 39, who lived on a small communal farm west of Matamoros, did not appear tortured or mutilated like the others, officials said.

Castillo's father, Hidalgo Castillo, 76, of Brownsville, said he found $70, a pair of eyeglasses and a passport in his son's pocket when he helped police dig up the bodies.

Formal Mexican federal charges were to have been filed Monday against four men in custody here, but the new deaths complicated the case, said Jose Piedad Silva Arroyo, Mexico's chief federal narcotics investigator for northeastern Tamaulipas state.

Silva said authorities were considering adding the latest victims' deaths to the murder, kidnapping, drug and weapons charges already pending against the four suspects.

"It's a big case, not simple, and there are a lot of details to attend to before we take them before the court," Silva said.

Although relatives disputed the description, officials said the two newly found victims were drug traffickers somehow involved with the cult allegedly led by Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, and Sara Maria Aldrete, 24.

Constanzo, a Cuban-American who lived for a time in Miami, and Aldrete, a Texas college student who authorities said lived a double life as the "witch" of the ritualistic cult, were at large Monday.

The elder Castillo said he first suspected his son might be buried at the

KCC: many factors affected gas prices

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

Gasoline consumers may have blamed the oil spill near Alaska for the recent gas price hikes, but the spill is only a contributing factor to the higher prices, according to the Energy Section of the Kansas Corporation Commission.

Karen Priebe, who monitors prices of wholesale and retail gasoline prices for the KCC, said the spill indirectly caused higher prices because the oil companies wanted to avoid the "panic buying" that usually follows shortages.

"(The oil spill) is the main reason, because the West Coast depends on Alaska for 60 percent of its crude oil," Priebe said. "But other factors had an effect."

Gasoline prices in Manhattan rose six cents on March 28, four days after an Exxon tanker hit a reef near Valdez, Alaska, spilling more than 10 million gallons of crude oil. Prices continued to rise until April 5, when gasoline cost $1.049.

Gasoline prices have begun falling and are now 99.9 cents a gallon.

Priebe said more countries, including Europe, are beginning to rely on unleaded fuels, which has created a short-term shortage of unleaded fuel available in the United States.

"The capacity to make unleaded fuels is low because regular leaded gas is going out — it's not as common as it used to be," she said.

Another reason is the new ruling by the Environmental Protection Agency calling for fuels to contain lesser amounts of smog-causing toxins, Priebe said.

"It's more expensive to make less volatile gases, and the high-demand

Speaker charged with ethics violations

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House ethics committee, with Democrats and Republicans united, formally charged Speaker Jim Wright Monday with 69 violations of the chamber's rules including what the panel's chairman called "a scheme to evade" limits on outside earnings.

After a 10-month, $1.5 million investigation, the committee of six Democrats and six Republicans voted unanimously to issue a report finding "reason to believe" the Texas Democrat had run afoul of House rules requiring reporting of gifts, barring acceptance of gifts from persons with a direct interest in legislation and limiting outside earned income.

"I know in my heart I have not violated any of the rules of that institution," Wright said in a speech to a labor meeting shortly after the ethics report was released.

He said he had asked "very urgently, very earnestly" for a quick meeting with the the committee "to confront them, to confront the allegations head-on, face-to-face."

While scandal has tainted other House speakers, Wright is the first ever to be formally charged with ethical wrongdoing.

At a news conference, committee chairman Rep. Julian Dixon, D-Calif., emphasized that Wright is presumed innocent until the charges are proven, and he underscored that proving them requires a much heavier weight of evidence than the step taken Monday, which is the panel's equivalent of an indictment.

The move set in motion a series of steps in which Wright can defend himself and the panel can try to prove with "clear and convincing" evidence that the violations occurred. That is likely ultimately to throw the matter before the full House, where Wright's position as the nation's highest elected Democrat could be on the line.

Possible punishments range from a reprimand to expulsion from the House, although lawmakers in both parties seemed to think the final decision would come down to whether Wright should be reprimanded or simply chastised for poor judgment and let off without formal punishment.

Wright immediately began his defense in earnest, operating what one supporter, Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, called "a war room" out of his office. "At some point we've got to start figuring out who's on our side and who's on the other side," Wilson said.

Wilson predicted Wright would win on the floor, "losing a few cowardly Democrats and picking up some brave Republicans."

The most serious allegation against Wright, that he accepted some $145,000 in gifts over a 10-year period from George Mallick, a Fort Worth developer, also had the narrowest margin of support on the ethics committee.

According to records of internal committee votes released along with the report of the panel's special outside counsel, Chicago attorney Richard J. Phelan, Democrats Chester Atkins of Massachusetts and Bernard Dwyer of New Jersey joined the six committee Republicans for an 8 to 4 margin on that issue.

The panel agreed with its counsel, Phelan, that Mallick's major interests in real estate, oil and gas ventures and in redevelopment of Fort Worth's historic stockyards district gave him a direct interest in legislation on taxation and on certain appropriations bills. His financing arrangements with savings and loan institutions also gave him an interest in legislation involving the S&L industry, the committee found.

But Wright's lawyer, William C. Oldaker, called that "doublespeak" and said "it's one of the most outrageous readings of legislative history" he has seen. Overall, the report contains "a lot of noise, a lot of clamor-

Soviets withdrawing troops

MOSCOW — The first contingent of Soviet soldiers and military hardware to be withdrawn from East Germany under a plan announced by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev will leave May 11, the Tass news agency said Tuesday.

Gorbachev announced the unilateral troop cuts at the United Nations on Dec. 7. The withdrawal is expected to be completed by Aug. 15, the official news agency said.

Gorbachev said there would be an overall troop reduction of 500,000 men, or 12 percent of the total Soviet troop strength, and the military budget would be cut by 14 percent. The cuts apply to troops based in Eastern European countries that are members of the Warsaw Pact alliance.

Army Gen. Boris Snetkov, who commands Soviet forces in East Germany, was quoted by Tass as saying that more than 10,000 personnel, about 1,000 tanks, more than 330 artillery and mortars and nearly 5,000 motor vehicles will be withdrawn from the nation before the middle of August.

Remaining units will be restructured to take on a more defensive posture, Snetkov said.

Ship sinks; crew uninjured

BOSTON — A 500-foot cargo vessel apparently sank about 400 miles southeast of Cape Cod, but all 25 crew members were either rescued or seen in a life boat, said a Coast Guard spokesman.

Another merchant ship sighted the life rafts from the Star of Alexandria, according to Coast Guard officials.

One raft, containing 23 crew members, was picked up by the 713-foot cargo vessel Ravencraig, said Petty Officer Randy Midgett of the Coast Guard in New York.

The second raft, containing two crew members, was spotted but the people on board were not yet picked up, Midgett said.

Coast Guard officials in New York City heard the distress call from the Star of Alexandria at about 9:05 a.m. Monday. Members of the crew reported the vessel began taking on water in seven-foot seas.

A Coast Guard jet from the air station on Cape Cod and a C-130 plane from Elizabeth City, N.C., converged on the ship and spotted the life raft with what was initially believed to be 12 people aboard, Lt. Matthew Wannamaker said. Later reports from the Ravencraig indicated there were more aboard the raft.

NATO meeting Cheney's first

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney will attend his first NATO meeting this week, traveling to Brussels, Belgium, the Pentagon said Monday.

Cheney, who became the nation's 17th defense secretary last month, will leave Washington tonight for the 45th ministerial meeting of the alliance's Nuclear Planning Group at NATO headquarters in Brussels.

Cheney, now in the midst of slashing the fiscal 1990 budget to comply with a White House-congressional compromise, will return immediately to Washington Thursday evening, the Pentagon said.

Author: Liberalism increasing

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Pulitzer Prize-winning author-historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. says the United States may be heading for a new era of liberalism.

"I would even go so far as to say that George Bush's idea of a kinder and gentler nation is a reflection of a changing popular mood," the former White House aide to President Kennedy said in an appearance Sunday night at the University of New Mexico.

Schlesinger said President Reagan's administration succeeded only as it "began to yield to the rising force of liberalism."

"We need our own home-grown version of Perestroika," he said, referring Mikhail Gorbachev's effort to salvage the economy of the Soviet Union, "but we need not despair. The United States has the resources to be a world leader for generations to come."

He said Bush's call for charitable efforts and volunteerism probably cannot do the job, however.

"We have a thousand points of light," Schlesinger said, "but, alas, the batteries are not included."

NATO commander to retire

WASHINGTON — Navy Adm. James B. Busey, commander of NATO Allied Forces in Southern Europe, will retire this summer after more than 37 years of service, the Pentagon announced Monday.

Busey, who also wears the hat of commander-in-chief of U.S. Naval Forces for Europe, plans to step down on June 1, the Pentagon said.

Hays firefighters sue city

HAYS — Firefighters have sued the city after the city manager reversed a ruling of a grievance committee in their favor.

City manager Ken Carter overturned a ruling of the grievance committee March 14. The International Association of Firefighters Local No. 2119 named the city and Carter in the petition filed Friday in Ellis County District Court.

At issue is the city's desire to reopen talks with the union on the firefighters' work schedule. The city wants to restructure the schedule but the union wants to keep it as it is.

The grievance committee had voted 2-1 in favor of the union.

Homeless children counted

COLUMBIA, Mo. — At least 593 children stay in Missouri homeless shelters on an average night, according to a new report on homeless in the state.

"There has never been an actual count of homeless children in Missouri before this," said Carolyn Cook, extension research associate at the University of Missouri-Columbia. "The count of 593 is an actual, verifiable number."

The report was issued by MU's College of Human Environmental Sciences Extension and University Extension's Office of Social and Economic Data Analysis.

The study's goal was to find the number and location of homeless children in Missouri and the educational barriers they face, Cook said. She stressed that the report centered on family homelessness, involving a parent with one or more children, rather than homelessness in general.

Bomb explodes during examination; 1 investigator killed, another injured

By The Associated Press

WIESBADEN, West Germany — A bomb similar to the one that destroyed Pan Am Flight 103 exploded while being examined Monday, killing an investigator in a case involving Palestinians suspected of terrorism.

The federal prosecutor's office reported evidence contradicting U.S. media reports that a Lebanese-American passenger inadvertently carried the bomb onto the jet that exploded over Scotland on Dec. 21. All 259 people on the plane and 11 on the ground were killed.

Another officer was critically wounded in the explosion Monday at federal police headquarters, said spokesman Arno Falk of Bundeskriminalamt, the police bureau.

It was not clear whether the bomb was seized in connection with the Pan Am investigation, but the manner in which it was disguised was said to be similar.

Asked how police obtained the radio-bomb that exploded on Monday, Falk replied: "This is in connection with our previous investigation, but we cannot say more than that."

His reference was to raids in October on hangouts of alleged Palestinian terrorists in Frankfurt and Neuss, a Duesseldorf suburb, in which weapons and explosives were seized.

Asked about a possible link between the Wiesbaden and Pan Am bombs, Falk said: "Any reports to that effect are just speculation." He repeated official assertions that no evidence has been found linking the Pan Am bombing directly with terrorism suspects in West Germany.

Brunhilde Spies-Mohr, a spokeswoman for the police agency, said in a statement: "During investigation of a suspicious device suspected of containing explosives, a detonation occurred. The material that exploded was a device obtained during investigation."

LaFemme Clinic alters name

Similarities prompt change

By Lance Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

LaFemme Clinic, housed in Lafene Student Health Center, has been renamed The Women's Center to avoid confusion brought about by the similarities between Lafene and LaFemme.

"There were several dialing problems when students would think that they were calling LaFemme, but they were talking to Lafene," said Catherine Barry, director of The Women's Center. "The physicians felt that some students did not know that LaFemme meant the woman. So the name change should take care of the confusion."

"(The name change) just seemed to be more appropriate and descriptive to the services of the clinic," said Lannie Zwiemiller, Lafene director.

The changing of names, which began with the start of this semester, has been gradual.

"We still have a lot of printed material which has LaFemme instead of The Women's Center printed on them," Barry said. "It will take a while for the people to get used to the change.

"We could not think of something which was terribly creative and at the same time was simple and direct. We also needed something which accurately described what kind of clinic we have."

In addition to the name change, The Women's Center has added a nurse practitioner to administer pap smears and pelvic and physical exams, as well as other female examinations.

"Normally, these women would be treated upstairs (in Lafene) by whichever doctor could see them first," Barry said. "This way, the women come downstairs to The Women's Center and can be examined by a female (nurse practitioner)."

The Women's Center is located in the basement of Lafene.

UPC activities highlight student activism

By The Collegian Staff

Groovy dudes in tie-dye shirts and bell-bottom jeans return to K-State this week.

Union Program Council is sponsoring Student Activism Week today through Friday. The activities will focus on the move for greater student activism and the many cultural trends that occurred in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

"The period during the late 1960s and early '70s was interesting historically and is something that can be reflected upon," said Brad Amstein, junior in accounting and UPC issues and ideas committee member. "We want this week to be enjoyed by the students."

A fashion show of clothes from the 1960s will take place in the S and U rooms of the Union. The show will feature music from the era as well as a slide presentation. An information booth will be set up in the Union to answer students' questions about the week's activities.

On Wednesday from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m., students will have the opportunity to dress the part of a '60s hippie. An area will be set up in the S and U rooms in the Union where T-shirts can be tie-dyed. UPC will provide the dyes and will also have a limited number of T-shirts for sale.

"The tie-dying is something fun," Amstein said. "The shirts are just one more thing we can do to make the week seem more like the '60s."

"Return of the Secaucus Seven," a movie which "The Big Chill" was based upon, will be shown at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Forum Hall. The film will also be shown at 3:30 p.m. in the Little Theatre and again at 8 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Thursday's activities will be highlighted by a panel discussion by former K-State students describing what it was like to go to college during the 1960s and 1970s.

"I do see a trend toward less political activity," said panel member Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life. "Today, there is far more energy spent in extracurricular activities which relate directly toward career goals."

Bosco said while he was in school at K-State, there were war moratoriums, war protest marches and dialogue concerning educational reform.

"K-State was not as radical as other universities," Bosco said.

Activist groups that are now in operation at K-State will also have the oppurtunity to exchange ideas during the Passive Resistance Day on Thursday.

The groups will have booths set up on the front lawn of the Union from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m.

The week will end with the showing of the movie "Hair" at 8:45 p.m. on the front lawn of the Union.

"Some of the activities are going to be a lot of fun," Amstein said. "There are also a lot of activities which will be informative.

"We need to look at this era from an objective and historical point of view."

U.S. should re-evaluate terrorism by Israel

Since the beginning of the Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories, more than 430 Palestinians have been killed, more than 18,000 have been imprisoned (most without charges or trials), and more than 25,000 have been wounded, many of whom are left paraplegic.

These numbers represent not just a recent, short-term phenomenon, but rather are indicative of how Israel has treated the Palestinian people throughout the history of the Israeli state.

The beginning of the occupation immediately led to the expulsion of some 300,000 Palestinians from their land and the subjugation of one million Palestinian inhabitants of the territories.

Since 1967, some 400,000 Palestinians have been arrested — this represents one-third of the entire population of the occupied areas.

To get a handle on what this has meant to the Palestinian people, imagine a war between the United States and Canada, after which Canada maintains its military presence to enforce Canadian law in U.S. cities.

Imagine that under Canadian law the United States no longer exists and that being American is an outlawed concept. Imagine being under a house-bound, 24-hour curfew for days at a time.

Imagine the Canadian Army raiding your home in the middle of the night, carting your 12-year-old brother and 60-year-old grandfather off to jail, then blowing up your home after allowing your mother, sister and grandmother maybe an hour to take out all of your family's belongings. Perhaps only then could we begin to understand the Palestinian reality.

According to "A Profile of the Palestinian People" by Edward Said, Ibrahim Abu-Lughod, Abu-Lughod, Hallaj and Zureik, Israel has confiscated more than 50 percent of Palestinian land in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The publication cites the diversion of the West Bank's water supply for use in Israeli settlements, which has caused "severe drought in Arab villages ... compelling Palestinian farmers to abandon their only means of livelihood."

Israel's occupation has destroyed the Palestinian economy, forcing Palestinians to seek "work for minimal wages under harsh conditions. Palestinians have become a cheap source of labor for the Israeli economy." Palestinian rights to form organizations and engage in political activity are virtually nonexistent. Israel forcibly dismissed the mayors of nearly all of the Palestinian towns. Laborers', teachers', writers' or other types of unions are prohibited by Israeli law. Until 1967, it was illegal in most places to even utter the word "Palestine."

Without my having told you that what I am describing is being perpetrated by Israel — the United States' foremost ally in the Middle East — you might jump to the conclusion that I am talking about the Soviet Union. The comparison is just, for is not the Soviet Union also a repressive police state which keeps its inhabitants in line by force?

Israel has also gone beyond its borders in search-and-destroy missions against Palestinians.

On June 4 and 5, 1982, the Israeli air force, without provocation, bombed Palestinian settlements in Beirut and throughout southern Lebanon. On June 6, Israeli soldiers invaded the country. Within the short span of 2½ months, Israeli military forces managed to kill anywhere from 20,000 to 40,000 Palestinians and Lebanese and seriously injure more than 100,000, of whom perhaps half lost limbs or were severely burned. More than half a million residents were left homeless.

All Palestinian health care facilities and communications systems — radio stations, newspapers and publishing houses — were totally or partially destroyed.

Thousands of Palestinian males between the ages of 12 and 60 were incarcerated. Entire towns were reduced to rubble. Particularly savage were the attacks the Israelis orchestrated on the settlements of Sabra and Shatila, which were carried out by Christian Phalangists. Thousands of women, children and old men were slaughtered.

A number of countries have been willing to turn a blind eye to Israel's violence against defenseless people. The United States, far from merely ignoring Israel's attrocities, has in fact provided the means by which to carry them out. Israel receives more than $3 billion a year from the United States, making it the largest recipient of military and economic aid in the world.

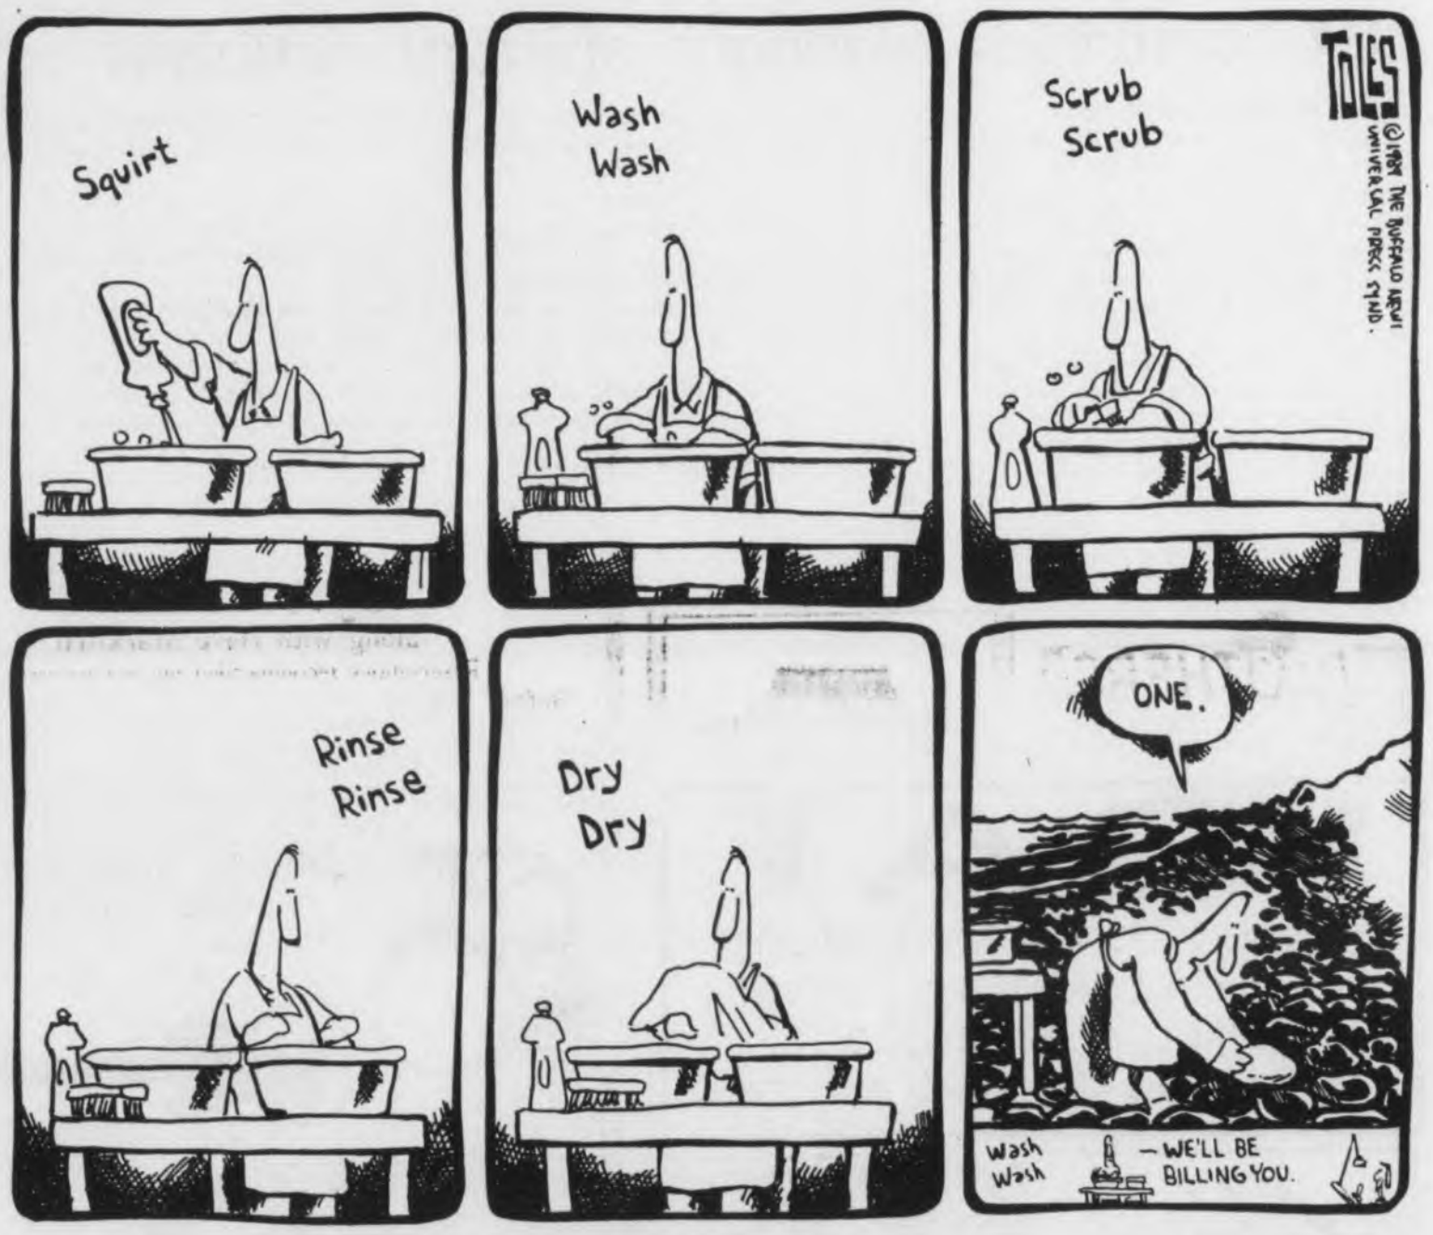
True, some Palestinians are guilty of murdering Israelis, a fact to which the media and especially the government love to divert attention. But a rational consideration of the scope of abuse by each side makes clear who is responsible for the greatest level of terrorism.

Professor Ibrahim Abu-Lughod, co-author of the publication I mentioned, will give a lecture titled "The Palestinians: Nation-building in Stateless Conditions" at 7:30 tonight in Union Forum Hall. This is an opportunity that cannot be passed up by those who want to know what is happening in the occupied territories.

New logo, attitude improvements for team

"A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step," states an old Chinese proverb.

The K-State football program certainly has quite a few miles to go before it reaches respectability. Its first step toward that goal is a new logo for its football helmets.



Granted, a new logo will have no concrete effect upon this school's football mediocrity, but its symbolic effect may be beneficial. Perhaps it will erase the painful memories of the Parrish years, during which those old solid colors and stripes were seen hanging without a win — 27 times in a row.

Maybe the fierce but somewhat abstract design will strike fear and confusion in the hearts of opponents. Maybe it will inspire a bolder fighting spirit in our own players.

Assistant Athletic Director Chris Peterson believes the logo will distinguish the K-State Wildcats from other Wildcat teams around the country — as if the longest winless streak in college football wasn't distinguishing enough.

Nevertheless, new Coach Bill Snyder should be complimented for doing something — anything — to change the dismal morale surrounding K-State football. The KSU Athletic Department should be congratulated for getting the new design, which would have normally cost around $30,000, as a free gift from local artist Tom Bookwalter.

Time will tell if the new logo marks the first step toward a lean, mean, spirited and cost-efficient K-State football program, or just another program full of empty promises and hot air — Parrish the thought.

Other Perspectives

The Kansas State University Student Senate finally took a bold stand against the South African government's disastrous policy of apartheid — the "legal" separation of races.

In a 10-hour-long meeting that lasted into the wee hours of Friday morning, the K-State Senate took action to divest its student monies from companies that conduct business with South Africa.

WSU's Student Senate, which has proven itself to be more open to change and more willing to listen to students this year than in past administrations, should follow Kansas State's lead. The Senate should approach WSU president Warren Armstrong, Roger Lowe, WSU vice president of administration and finance, and James Rhatigan, vice president of student affairs, concerning total university divestment from South Africa.

... Any effort, large or small, to right the wrong of apartheid is needed. Kansas State's Student Senate has opened the door. WSU should follow.

Ticket solution

Editor,

K-State is lucky to have a coliseum in which we are able to see groups such as Def Leppard, The Beach Boys and Eddie Money. But, according to Coliseum Director Charlie Thomas, the student body is just not supporting the concerts.

I do not agree with this.

I believe the student body is supporting the concerts very well for the scheduling that has been done. I mean really, it only takes a little common sense to figure it out. First we have Eddie Money on March 29 with tickets at $13.50. Next we have Chicago April 2 with tickets at $16.50.

OK, correct me if I'm wrong, but this is two concerts within five days. Just one ticket to each show would cost a student $30. Usually people do no want to go alone to these concerts, so the grand total would be $60 if you were to take a date to both.

Now I can't speak for every student on this campus, but I personally do not have $60 to spend for two concerts in five days.

I understand the point Thomas has about acts being in the area, but a solution is simple.

Don't try to schedule 50 million concerts in a short period. Sure it is great to have the opportunity to see them, but this is not Wichita or Kansas City — cities able to support that many concerts.

My solution is this, organize a group of students to find the concerts they would like to see. Next, organize one big concert a year with one or two smaller concerts at other times.

The solution is simple, it just needs to be implemented.

Child safety

Editor,

If you drive north along Denison Avenue at around 5 p.m. weekdays, you might notice a number of small children running and playing by the west exit of Ahearn Field House.

These children are waiting for their parents to pick them up after their activities within the complex. You might also notice that traffic backs up behind the minivans and cars which stop in the middle of the street to pick up the children.

On further inspection, you might notice that the north exit of Ahearn, which exits onto College Heights, is all but unused.

So why don't the children use the north exit of Ahearn? Denison would no longer be blocked and the children could wait in relative safety on the front lawn of the complex, far from a busy street. I guess the adults who are charged with the children's safety should ask themselves this question.

Entertainment fee

Editor,

We have given the uproar about the athletic fee a few weeks to blow over, and now is the time we should start thinking about bettering K-State.

We will confess we had some reservations about the athletic fee because we felt other departments deserved some support also. But the happy medium we have all been waiting for has come in the form of an entertainment fee.

Let's consider the entertainment fee as a possible solution to lagging spirits at our University. An entertainment fee would support both athletics and arts. This proposal would be creating goodwill, and would not cause animosity between departments thus allowing the University to be viewed as one functioning entity instead of several parts.

This is our University, and we must work together to allow all departments to better educate us and to fill our lives not only with entertainment but also with educational and societal advancement.

One of the advantages of K-State is the opportunity it provides for a well-rounded education. Let's allow ourselves to be educated from all sides. Support the entertainment fee!

Greenhouse effect

Being the educated people we are, why are we still contributing to the greenhouse effect? The students and faculty of K-State need to take the lead and help reverse the carbon dioxide cloud that is causing the global warming.

McLachlan debuts with Arista album, moody, eerie music

By Michael Nichols
Campus Editor

In Sarah McLachlan's debut album, "Touch," Arista Records is trying to corner a small but growing piece of the alternative music market.

McLachlan presents a slick, commercialized touch to a style of music that has found popularity among alternative music fans. Her packaged product. McLachlan's songs are appealing, but her style is hardly original. While her voice is reminiscent of Kate Bush and McLachlan's eerie lyrics reminds the listener of Peter Gabriel, she lacks the former's range and the latter's writing skills.

Although McLachlan may sound like some well-established alternative bands, her music is much too slick and polished to appeal to diehard fans of the genre.

Unlike Cocteau Twins and Dead Can Dance, McLachlan's lyrics are intelligible, telling a coherent plot. And while she may remind one of more recognizable artists such as Gabriel or Bush, the tracks on "Touch" are not mainstream enough to be marketable to a majority of the public.

"Touch" is a great example of expert packaging trying to bridge the gap between alternative and mainstream music.

Recruit an unknown artist, powder her face into a waxen, death-like image, and get her to sound like established artists. Arista will pocket a profit, and pseudo-underground music connoisseurs will have another trendy diva to ogle over.

Review

music and the gothic design on the album cover are highly reminiscent of 4 A.D. bands such as Cocteau Twins and Dead Can Dance.

The songs on "Touch" are moody and eerie, with high-pitched, chantlike vocals droning in and out.

Whether in the upbeat "Trust" or in the liturgical "Vox," McLachlan's melody is highlighted by haunting rifts from a 12-string guitar.

In the brokenhearted love song "Steaming," McLachlan provides a poppy beat to complement depressing lyrics. Two of the tracks are instrumentals, including the title song, which counts with her almost cathedral-like chants and a droning piano.

Rushdie's book 'not worth dying for'

By John C.K. Daly
Contributing Writer

Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses" is an annoying book — leaving aside the political furor that it has ignited, Rushdie's tome is of a character few readers would willingly investigate except for the whiff of scandal. It is most certainly not a book worth dying for.

Rushdie seems to be appealing to several disparate audiences, which share little in common except familiarity with English. This dichotomy is evident in the first page of the work, where "on New Year's Day or thereabouts," Gibreel Farashta and Saladin Chamcha are trading quips as they fall nearly five miles from their terrorist-exploded Jumbo jet, Bostan.

"Bostan" is one of the Islamic "gardens of paradise"; it is also the title of a poetry book by one of Iran's most revered poets, Sa'adi. New Year's Day, the "Garden," Adam and Eve, good and evil — all this in the first two pages. How clever.

The novel subsequently interweaves their adventures with a number of other stories. The legend of Icarus makes a veiled appearance on page five; only 452 pages to go.

Early in his career as a budding Bombay movie star, Gibreel gets wrapped up in scholasticism and first learns about the Prophet's "satanic verses" incident.

Review

Gibreel is the agent for a number of (to Moslems) gratuitously offensive scenes, such as eating vast quantities of pork after recovering from a life-threatening illness (Rushdie referring to "rashers of bacon from godknowswhere"). Upon recovering, who does he fall in love with but Alleluia Cone, an Anglicised Jewess with hair so fair "it was almost white, and her skin possessed the colour and translucency of mountain ice."

Chamcha is similarly torn between competing cultures. When awakened on his London flight, he initially replies with Hindi phrases, losing his carefully cultured British pronunciation.

Shortly thereafter, we get a reference to the film "Les Enfancts du Paradis." If you enjoy a novel littered with references designed to show the author's erudiuon, this is the book for you.

Rushdie needs a ruthless editor. To give one (early) example of what Miss Woodward, my fifth-grade teacher, would have red-penciled as a run-on sentence: "Chamcha, prim, rigid and still upside-down, saw Gibreel Farashta in his purple bush-shirt come swimming towards him across that cloud-walled funnel, and would have shouted, 'Keep away, get away from me,' except that something prevented him, the beginning of a little fluttery screamy thing in his intestines, so instead of uttering words of rejection he opened his arms and Farishta swam into them until they were embracing head-to-tail, and the force of their collision sent them tumbling end over end, performing their germinate cartwheels all the way down and along the hole that went to Wonderland; while pushing their way out of the white came a succession of cloud-forms, ceaselessly metamorphosing, gods into bulls, women into spiders, men into wolves." One hundred twenty-five words. Paragraphs cover entire pages.

Much of the language in this book rings false — Indians in Britain simply do not speak in the manner Rushdie portrays. The work is loaded with Americanisms such as "sucker." In five years in the East End of London, I never heard any Indian immigrant (or native Brit, for that matter) say "Come on, baby." Rushdie's linguistic inventiveness extends to such coinings as "justlikethat."

This book is loaded with thinly disguised anger. If Rushdie's vitriol has a redeeming quality, it is that he spreads it about with the fervor of a true democrat — Islam is not the only institution that gets slammed.

British immigration takes a poke in the eye as early as page four. The country is later compared to a kipper, a "peculiar-tasting smoked fish full of spikes and bones."

If there is any author that Rushdie resembles in his craft as displayed in this book, it is Anthony Burgess, although Rushdie refers to Vladimir Nabokov's "Pale Fire" in the text.

One should be wary of Burgess upon learning that his favorite author is James Joyce. Burgess is a brilliant author, but he has the infuriating mannerism of occasionally inserting wildly inappropriate material into his books, simply to remind you how clever he is.

Given Burgess' time as a colonial officer in the British Empire, Malay words have a disturbing way of popping up in irrelevant context, just to remind you that he's linguistically gifted. In his "The End of the World News," we are treated to a Trotsky opera (music being another one of his passions). Rushdie appropriates these mannerisms lock, stock and barrel.

The issue of man's relationship to his God, and God's relationship to Man, has fostered extraordinary works of secular literature. Goethe's "Faust," Dostoevski's tale of the Grand Inquisitor in "Crime and Punishment," or Ivan Turgenev's "Fathers and Sons" examine the issue in a manner which has elevated the works to world treasures. Rushdie's work offers no such insights, only bitterness.

At one point Rushdie has a character chastise his father for his "irritatingly orotund and obsolescent phraseology." One can only observe, "author, know thyself."

This book's tragedy is that it is superb in parts, with brilliant language and striking imagery. If Rushdie paid more attention to his fellow Indian immigrant writers Narayan and Naipul, he might have learned the value of economy.

Semiautomatic weapons donated to highway patrol

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Meet a drug dealer and there is a good chance he's armed with a semiautomatic weapon.

Meet a Missouri State Highway Patrol trooper and now there is a 50 percent chance he'll be armed with a semiautomatic weapon.

Monday, Kansas City area businessman Del Dunmire gave an additional 200 Heckler & Koch rifles to the patrol, completing a pledge to donate 300 guns.

"Half of our road people will have the firepower equivalent to the people we deal with," said Lt. Gilbert Schwartz of the patrol. "Firepower, weapons, to (drug dealers) is a minor overhead expense. Now we've got high-powered weaponry. There's very few people who will go up against this weapon."

Helicopter crashes in attempted escape from Miami prison

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — A helicopter swooped into a prison's high-security exercise yard Monday and a convicted drug kingpin jumped aboard. However the escape was thwarted when the chopper caught a fence and crashed in the yard, injuring the would-be escapee and his pilot.

Benjamin "Barry" Kramer, 36, a former powerboat champion serving life without parole as the leader of a marijuana-trafficking ring, broke his right leg in the accident. The pilot suffered two broken legs and facial injuries.

"Kramer apparently was ready and as soon as the helicopter was there, he jumped right into it," said John Clark, warden at the federal Metropolitan Correctional Center.

Clark said three armed guards watched but did not react because they did not want to shoot into the prison yard, where a half-dozen men were exercising. He also said they feared there might be a hostage in the helicopter.

Most of MCC is medium-security, but Kramer and about 50 other prisoners were being held in a special high-security area because they were considered escape risks.

The two-seater Bell helicopter, a type once used for military reconnaissance but now used mainly for aerial photography or crop-spraying, flew into the prison just after 10 a.m., Clark said.

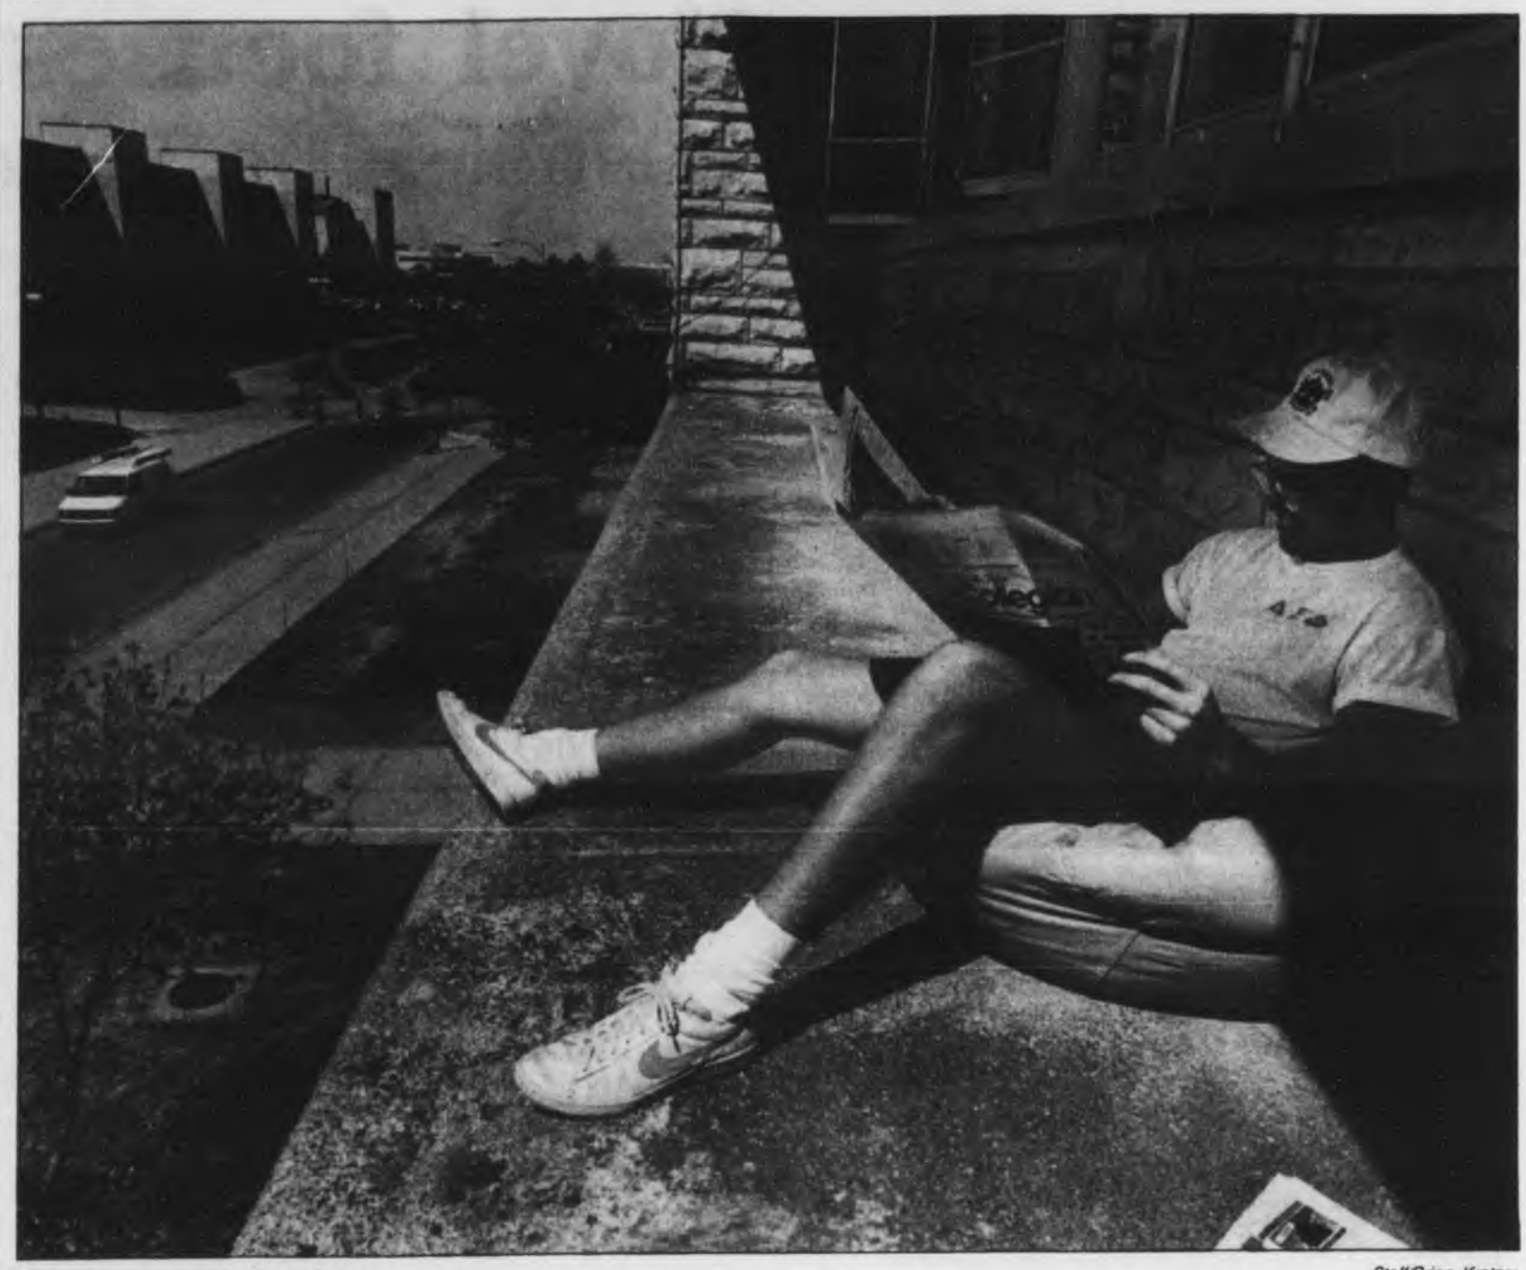
It dropped low enough for Kramer to jump onto one landing skid, and was beginning to rise when its tail rotor caught in barbed wire atop the metal fence around the exercise area.

Clark said at least one other prisoner may have tried to jump on the helicopter, possibly destabilizing the small craft.

The accident sent pieces of the rotor and the fence hurtling hundreds of yards.

"It's lucky more people weren't hurt," Clark said.

Prison guards immediately pulled Kramer and the pilot from the wreckage and administered first aid before they were taken to a hospital.



Clark said the pilot carried identification in the name of Charles Clayton Sterns, 34, but added that authorities were unsure if it was a phony document intended for Kramer.

The Bell 47D-1 helicopter, built in 1952, was reported sold in January to C. Stevens of Gold Beach, Ore., according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

Stevens, a sea urchin diver, worked with Sin Loy, a commercial diving operation in Gold Beach, according to a man who answered the phone there. Stevens left town about a month ago, said the man, who refused to give his name.

An aviation official who spoke under condition of anonymity said the helicopter was spotted last month on a truck near Tamiami Airport, a few miles from the prison.

After the crash, all 1,000 inmates were locked down, and officials began interviewing prisoners who were in the yard at the time of the attempted escape, Clark said.

Swim looking to regain '87 form

Staff/Steve Wolgast

K-State quarterback Gary Swim, who received a medical redshirt for a foot injury last season, is trying to regain the form that made him the starting signal caller for the Wildcats two seasons ago.

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

If getting an opportunity to play an extra year of K-State football can be considered getting a new lease on life, then quarterback Gary Swim has done just that.

Swim played his first two years of college football at Snow Junior College in Utah. He was given a hardship year due to foot surgery that repaired a bone spur which kept him from playing most of last season.

Playing only two downs last season was a big change for Swim after leading his juco team to the national championship in 1985 and starting all of the 'Cats 11 games in 1987.

"I'm very, very fortunate," Swim said. "I'm one of the few people who get another shot and I'm extremely happy.

"I'm hungry to play. It was tough for me to sit out all last year thinking that I was going to spend my last season on the bench."

The 'Cats are at the midway point in spring drills and Swim is tied at the No. 1 spot on the depth chart with junior Carl Straw. Quarterback Paul Watson, who was a part-time starter along with Straw last season, is recovering from an off-season shoulder surgery and hasn't been fully participating in spring drills.

Swim credits many of last year's problems to the team's 0-10-1 record in 1987 and the differences he had with then-head coach Stan Parrish and his staff. Favoritism often came into the picture where playing time was concerned, Swim said.

After the 'Cats' less-than-successful 1987 campaign, communication between Swim and the coaches fell to almost nothing.

"When I first got here I was called the savior of the program — the one to lead K-State to a winning season," Swim said. "After we went 0-10-1, the coaches hardly even talked to me. It was like I wasn't even here.

"I can't complain about the favoritism, because I was favored when I came in and ignored last year. When the coaches moved me from No. 1 on the depth chart to No. 3 last year, they never gave me a reason for the switch. That type of thing won't happen this year. If there is a switch, it will be perfectly clear why it was made."

Swim said this year's quarterbacks are on an equal level under coach Bill Snyder because he came to K-State unfamiliar with the quarterback situation.

"Coach Snyder doesn't know that much about us," Swim said. "He is just now getting his first look at us, and I am confident that we'll all get a fair look.

"This year if anybody fails, it's due to themselves. It won't be due to the team and it won't be due to the coaches."

Snyder said one of the biggest problems he sees with Swim and other members of the team is inconsistency.

"I'm hungry to play. It was tough for me to sit out all last year thinking that I was going to spend my last season on the bench." — Gary Swim, Wildcat quarterback

"Carl and Gary are both competing on the same line," Snyder said. "It would be tough at this point to say which one is our No. 1 guy.

"They have both shown signs that they can throw the ball well, but they have also been inconsistent. They both show good leadership, but they have been inconsistent. They have shown improvement in understanding what we need them to do in their roles, but they have shown problems in these areas too. Our key to overcoming those problems is getting them plenty of repetitions."

Repetitions and consistency, Swim said, could lead to a winning season, which is most important.

"Winning is No. 1 on the list here," he said, "and I feel like I've got a job to finish."

'Cats could sign 2

From Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State basketball program could possibly gain two more signees this week. Kent Bennett and Ryan Thornton are thought to be leaning heavily toward signing with the Wildcats.

Bennett, a 6-foot-6 forward out of Los Angeles Manual Arts High School, was reported as already signed by K-State according to a report in Thursday's Los Angeles Times. Bennett, however, had not visited the K-State campus until Thursday and a prospect cannot sign while on the campus of the school by which he is being recruited.

Thornton, a 6-foot-6 forward out of Allen County Community College is supposed to make a decision today between K-State and Washington State, according to a source close to the Allen County program.

K-State officially has one scholarship left available, but one could be freed up should a walk-on from last season not be awarded a scholarship for this fall.

Bennett averaged 20 points and 11 rebounds last season for a team that went 26-2 and was ranked No. 1 in California and No. 5 in the nation at times last season. Bennett is also looking at Texas El-Paso.

Thornton was an all-Region XI selection last season and was an honorable mention all-American at the junior college level. Thornton was third in the nation with a 70.6 percent field goal accuracy.

Ozzie makes debut with hot bat

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Erase any doubts about Ozzie Smith coming back. The St. Louis Cardinals shortstop did.

Smith, who missed the Cardinals' first seven games this season because of a rib-cage injury, made his season debut with a flair in two weekend games against the New York Mets.

He had five hits in eight at-bats as the Cardinals won both Saturday and Sunday.

Smith singled twice in St. Louis' victory Saturday, his second hit setting up the winning run in the 10th inning. On Sunday, after the Cardinals trailed 2-0, his three singles ignited another comeback.

It wasn't until shortly before Saturday's nationally televised game that team physician Stan London gave Smith permission to play.

"Actually, it was about five minutes before the game," Smith said. "I told Dr. London that I'd done all the things that he'd asked me to do — throw on the run, turn the double play and all those things and I didn't feel any pain."

Still, Manager Whitey Herzog had reservations about Smith being ready.

"The doctor said he was all right, but you always worry," Herzog said. "(But) the first play he made he landed on his side. If he didn't get hurt, then he's not going to get hurt."

Smith said he did nothing extraordinary in his rehabilitation.

"I've been riding a (stationary) bike, which is the only thing that I could have done," he said.

First baseman Pedro Guerrero said Smith's return, which sent fill-in Jose Oquendo back to second base, boosted St. Louis' mood.

"It's a lot different for us with Ozzie at shortsop and Oquendo at second base," Guerrero said. "It seemed like we went out there to win the game. We battled to extra innings, and we played great defense."

Smith, after a postgame rubdown he received at home Saturday night from his wife, came back Sunday with a two-RBI performance.

"As long as I can play without any pain, then everything is fine," Smith said. "I guess it goes to show that winning is much more than really being able to make a big play or get a big hit. It's being able to help your team from a psychological standpoint, and hopefully I did that."

The Cardinals, by beating the Mets twice, won the weekend series 2-1 to launch a stretch of 16 straight games at Busch Stadium.

"When you play a ballclub such as the Mets, with their outstanding pitching, anytime that you can beat them it's very positive," Smith said. "Our goal right now is to try to win as many games on this home stand as we can. I think that will give us a big boost."

Smith's return left center fielder Willie McGee, who has missed eight consecutive games with an injury similar to the shortstop's, on St. Louis' injury list.

"We have a good offensive ballclub," Smith said.

Women's golf team in 4th

The K-State women's golf team finished Monday's first-round at the Nebraska Invitational in fourth place with an 18-hole score of 342. The first round was scheduled to be 36 holes, but bad weather conditions forced tournament officials to move Monday's final 18-hole round to today. The six teams will finish the competition with a 36-hole round today.

Host Nebraska finished the first day in the lead with a total of 309. Kansas was second at 329, and was followed by Wyoming at 33. Air Force and Colorado State rounded out the field in fifth and sixth place with scores of 357 and 373 respectively.

K-State was led again by Chris Adams who finished the first day of competition in sixth place individually with a score of 80. She was followed by Adena Hagedorn, 83; Lonna Dale, 89; Jill Zientara, 90 and Theresa Coyle, 95.

Nebraska's Ann Guiberson was the individual leader with a three-over par, 74.

Hanek named all-tournament

The K-State women's soccer club defeated Iowa State, 1-0, and Missouri, 2-1, and then tied Oklahoma State, 0-0, at the Big Eight soccer tournament Saturday at Stillwater, Okla.

K-State then advanced to Sunday's semi-finals where they were handed a 3-0 defeat by OSU in a rematch, to eliminate the Wildcats from the tourney.

Sophomore Gabby Hanek was selected to the all-tournament team.

Nebraska won the tourney, 1-0, over Oklahoma State.

The K-State women are in action again Saturday when they travel to Lawrence to play Kansas. KU will then visit Memorial Stadium for an April 30 matchup beginning at 11 a.m.

Missouri Western visits today

Missouri Western is in town today for a doubleheader with the 'Cats at Frank Myers Field beginning at 3 p.m. K-State is coming off its third straight Big Eight Conference weekend series in which it has won just one game of four.

The 'Cats are 23-12 overall and 3-9 in the conference. K-State will send.

Big 8 meet moved to Lincoln

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nebraska will be the host for the 1989 Big Eight Conference Outdoor Championships next month, the league announced Monday.

The meet, scheduled for May 12-14, was originally to be at Oklahoma, but a construction project there will not be finished in time.

Humidity, heat prevail at Boston

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Though it couldn't make up for missing the Olympics, Abebe Mekonnen ran like a gold medalist and became a champion Monday at the 93rd Boston Marathon.

Ingrid Kristiansen, meantime, beat Joan Benoit Samuleson for the first time ever in winning her second Boston Marathon.

Mekonnen broke away from Juma Ikangaa with about 1 1-2 miles left in the 26-mile, 385-yard test from the town green in Hopkinton to the Back Bay in Boston, to win in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 6 seconds — the seventh-fastest clocking in the race's history.

The 25-year-old Ethiopian missed the 1988 Olympic marathon because his country joined North Korea's boycott of the Seoul Games. And though he said he was happy he won Monday, he added: "I don't consider it my Olympic race."

This was the first time since 1963 that the poor African country of Ethiopia had sent a delegation to the Boston Marathon.

This year's second- and third-place finishers were the same as last year's —Ikangaa in 2:09:56 and John Treacy of Ireland in 2:10:24.

Kenya's Ibrahim Hussein, last year's Boston champion and the first African to win the race, wound up fourth in 2:12:41, followed by John Campbell, 40, of New Zealand, in 2:14:19. Campbell's time smashed the Boston course record for Masters of 2:17:53, set last year by Ryszard Marczak of Poland.

Meanwhile, Kristiansen's bid to become the first sub-2:20 women's marathoner evaporated in the heat and humidity.

She led every step of the women's race and was not seriously challenged after the early stages, winning in 2:24:33, the third-fastest for a woman on the course.

If she was unable to crack 2:20 or even break her world-best of 2:21:06, she had no difficulty in beating the gallant, injury-plagued Samuelson.

Samuelson, the 1984 Olympic champion and course record-holder at 2:22:43, struggled.

Montreal, Penguins win

By The Associated Press

The divisional finals of the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup playoffs began Monday night with the Patrick and Adams division finalists squaring off. Pittsburhg took the first game of the battle of Pennsylvania by defeating Philadelphia, 4-3, while Montreal downed Boston, 3-2 in the other divisional finals opener. Here is a brief recap:

Penguins 4, Flyers 3

PITTSBURGH — Rob Brown took Kevin Stevens' pass from behind the net and scored from the slot with 6:34 remaining as the Pittsburgh Penguins rallied to beat the Philadelphia Flyers 4-3 Monday night in the opener of the Patrick Division finals.

The Flyers, keeping the puck in their attacking zone for most of the first 30 minutes, scored three special team goals.

But the Penguins tied it behind a Quinn-led second line.

Quinn took a shot by Zarley Zalapski off the back boards and scored on a power play at 7:44 with Hextall out of the crease. The Penguins were held without a shot for the first 5:16 of the period.

Cullen tied it at 8:17, skating from behind the net to slip the puck between Hextall's legs after Jim Johnson intercepted Hextall's clearing pass.

Mario Lemieux took Zalapski's pass from the left wing boards and scored to Hextall's glove-hand side to make it 1-1 at 12:44. From there, the Penguins dominated the rest of the way to take a 1-0 series lead.

Canadiens 3, Bruins 2

MONTREAL — The Montreal Canadiens, led by the spectacular goaltending of Patrick Roy and an opportunistic offense, beat the Boston Bruins 3-2 Monday night in the first game of the Adams Division final.

The Canadiens, who lost a playoff series to Boston for the first time in 45 years last spring, managed just 15 shots at Andy Moog. But Russ Courtnall, Mike Keane and Claude Lemieux were able to beat the goalie.

Roy, who did not lose at home all season, was sensational. He made his best save in the second period by kicking out Bobby Carpenter's wrist shot from the slot. In the third period, he foiled two shots by Ray Bourque with splendid saves to keep Montreal in control.

After Boston got within a goal when Bob Sweeney scored with 4:03 left, Roy remained sharp. He stopped Garry Galley's 40-footer with 12 seconds to go and also made a save on Bourque just before the final buzzer.

Officials may ban 'standing-room-only' at soccer stadiums

By The Associated Press

SHEFFIELD, England — Criticism grew of how police handled the stadium crush that killed 94 soccer fans, and the government said Monday it may ban standing-room-only sections like the one where the tragedy occurred.

Officials and fans accused South Yorkshire police of letting thousands of late arrivals into Hillsborough stadium, then reacting too slowly when the surging crowd crushed people against a steel anti-riot fence in one of the concrete terrace areas packed with standees.

Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, speaking to a hushed House of Commons, said an investigative panel led by Lord Justice Taylor would begin work Tuesday and "make recommendations about the needs of crowd control and safety at sports grounds."

"We have to set our sights high and find a better way for British football (soccer)," Hurd said. "We owe a duty to these passionate supporters of football to examine urgently and thoroughly the causes and background and to do all in our power to prevent such a thing happening again."

"We owe a duty to these passionate supporters of football to examine urgently and thoroughly the causes and background and to do all in our power to prevent such a thing happening again."
—Douglas Hurd home secretary

Hurd told the Commons the decision of a senior police officer to open the gate because he "considered that there was a possible danger to the lives of the spectators at the front" would be a central question for investigators. Survivors said about 4,000 fans were pushing at turnstiles to get inside.

Hillsborough gatekeeper Jack Stone told the Sheffield Star he refused police orders to open the outer gate and was forced to hand over his keys to a police inspector.

"I handed the keys to him and told him it was his responsibility and not mine," Stone said.

Liverpool fan Stephen Mitton, who was caught in the crush outside the gate, told BBC-TV:

"The steward put his hand on the gate and said, 'Don't open it.' The police said, 'Open the gate. There's going to be a crush.' Then two police officers opened the gate."

The crush was so great, Mitton said, that fans fell on the floor and people climbed over them. "All the police were doing was standing up saying 'Get back, get back.' There was already people dead then. I climbed on them to get over the fence."

The Sheffield Star said a police superintendent made the decision to open the 16-foot-wide gate because he feared a wall was seconds away from collapsing on hundreds of fans.

"Startled officers — some of them hemmed in — thought the wall was beginning to buckle under the enormous pressure of screaming fans. The crowd was packed so tightly around a police horse that it was lifted six inches off the ground," the paper reported.

South Yorkshire police, who have handed over a separate investigation of the policing of the match to the neighboring West Midlands police force, refused to comment on the Sheffield Star report.

Police Federation representative Paul Middup attacked growing public criticism of police actions as "grossly unfair," saying they faced a situation "for which no amount of training could prepare them."

Police on Monday released the names of the 94 victims. All were British, 34 were teen-agers, 33 were in their 20s and seven were women.

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said as many as 40 who perished are thought to have died in the rush through a tunnel to the center terrace at the Liverpool goal. The rest were crushed against the 10-foot fence in front of the terrace or were trampled underfoot, the agency said.
